$5000 WE WOULD PAY FOR A NAME.

THE CHICAGO HOUSE WRECKING CO. was organized in 1893 for the purpose of dismantling the World's Fair of Chicago, since which time we have purchased and dismantled all leading Expositions, including the Pan-American of Buffalo, the Trans-Mississippi of Omaha and the great $50,000,000.00 St. Louis World's Fair.

In addition our business consists in the purchase from Sheriffs' Receivers and Manufactur rs' Sales of immense stocks of general merchandise and supplies including practically every known manufactured article. Engines, Boilers, Machinery of all kinds, Hardware, Structural Iron, Metal and Composition Roofing and Siding, Plumbing Material, Heating Apparatus, Building Material of all kinds. Carpets, Rugs, Furniture, Complete Office Equipment, etc. During the past five years we have devoted ourselves extensively to the purchase and sale of brand new stocks of Lumber, Sash, Doors and Mill Work.

At its inception, this Company never realized that its operations would extend to its present vast dimensions. We have spent millions of dollars acquainting the public with our wonderful mercantile institution and with the vast quantities of merchandise and supplies that we have for sale. At the present time material we advertise for sale is first-class, brand new merchandise.

Our greatest difficulty has been to impress upon the public mind the salient fact that our goods are not second-hand; neither are they wrecked material, nor anything but first-class high-grade goods just the same as you would purchase at any mercantile house in the land. The false impressions gained by our name misleads the public into the belief that the goods we offer for sale are not brand new.

It is for that reason that we have been forced to the conclusion that If we could discover a name broad enough in its terms to correctly convey the meaning of our institution and its possibilities for the public's use, we would adopt such a name and would willingly pay the sum of $5,000 to the one suggesting it. The name accepted would be used in place of the Chicago House Wrecking Co.

In making us a suggestion the name must imply to the public thought that we are the purchaser of great institutions, such as expositions, etc. It must also impress the fact that our goods are new and first-class; also that our location is at Chicago. It must be crisp, short and original in every sense. Some idea of who we are and the nature of our business will be gained by the careful reading of this advertisement.

Set your mind to thinking and see if you cannot invent a name that will be the keynote to our continued success, and that will remove any false impression now existing.

Our new 500 page Catalog containing a short sketch of our organization and business career, with 100,000 valuable articles fully illustrated and described will be sent free to those who ask for it. It is of indescribable value to the buyer for any institution, and should prove an inspiration and help to those interested in finding us a new name.

All suggestions should be addressed as follows:

NEW GOSPEL TRIUMPHS IN INDIA

INDIA has just completed a year of wonderful Gospel progress. Missionaries of many denominations write us glowing letters relative to the spiritual work in their respective districts; and all unite in reporting such a wave of revival as has not been known there in many years. We give below extracts from several of these communications, which the readers of this journal, whose liberal gifts have done so much for India, will find full of interest and encouragement.

Missionary A. S. Paynter, of Mahagastota, Newera Eliya, writes this very interesting account of a revival in that section of India:

"Five years ago, while in a district in North India, I had sent to me the most remarkable petition I ever received. It was signed by, or on behalf of, a thousand Hindus on the East Coast of India, who begged me to come to them with the Gospel and send them Christian workers. Living near these people was a converted Mohammedan, a personal friend of mine of more than twenty years standing. He had told the heathen around of our mission and its leaders.

"The needed money for traveling and initial expenditure was sent in answer to prayer, and, with a party of fifteen workers, we proceeded to the district. It is situated in and around the Kolair Lake, Kaikalur, Kistna, East Coast. A wonderful series of meetings was held, such as I have not seen during my twenty-seven years' work in India, and hundreds professed to find Christ. One village, Biarapatnam—a hamlet containing some 300 people—for forty years had held out against Christianity. At the time of our going there there was not a Christian in the village. The headmen of Biarapatnam came to one of our meetings in another village. They spent a whole day and night with us, attending three large gatherings and seeing about two hundred people seek salvation. They returned home with so favorable a report that the following day we received a petition, signed by all the leading men of Biarapatnam, begging us to hold meetings in their village and send them preachers. We responded to the call next day. Long-to-be-remembered gatherings were held, during which almost all the adults of the village, and not a few of the children, professed to give themselves to Christ. I doubt if I shall ever forget the joy these converts of but a few hours manifested. They sang and praised God like old Christians. On my second visit I had the joy of baptizing fifty-three of them. The villagers publicly threw their idols into a large lake near by. Biarapatnam is now a happy Christian village. The workers hold daily meetings, and a school, begun and ended with prayer and singing, has been started for the children.

"The work spread from hamlet to hamlet, and there are now close to three thousand Christians in the district. The whole character of the neighborhood is changed. Drinking, gambling, cock-fighting have ceased. The converts hitherto have been almost entirely from among the lower-caste Hindus; but now the fire is spreading to the higher castes. The persecution inevitably following the public confession of Christ by high-caste Hindus makes it absolutely necessary to have a home where converts can be received till work is found for them, etc. We are praying earnestly now for money for this purpose. Some of your readers may know me as the author of the hymn (which I saw in many American hymn books when I was last in the States), "A Little Talk with Jesus Makes It Right." I wrote it during my first few months in India, in 1882. I do not know why it became popular, for there is no merit in the verses. I suppose it is accounted for by the glorious fact of the blessed efficacy of ejaculatory prayer."

Preaching to the Natives in an Indian Village

Rev. G. N. Thomssen, missionary of the Telugu Baptist Mission, Bapatla, Madras, writes of a great wave of revival now sweeping through that section of India. He says: "Our God hears and answers prayer. How often, since childhood, have I experienced the truthfulness of this fact. Let me just point out two instances of this truth in our experience during the year 1909. First, at the beginning of this year our hearts were heavy, because so few, so very few, on our large field of 660,000 inhabitants were coming to Jesus. We all agreed here to pray out our work and work out our prayers for one thousand rescued souls from the darkness of heathenism. Up to the present day (November 16) 990 have been baptized this year in Jesus' name, and hundreds more are waiting. I could write a volume, describing the marvelous experiences of the year.

"Second, the object of our large school in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Gospel Hall is to train Gospel workers—'teacher-pastors,' we call them. It is owing to the daily, persistent work of love by these consecrated men and women who teach the young and lead the old that we are indebted for the great success in our work. The success of this work is so great that it has embarrassed us. After ten years of prayerful work we have come to believe that now the time has arrived to properly house the large school we have. For the sixty students of our normal class we have plenty of room in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Gospel Hall, but for the 150 children of the practising school we have no class-rooms, but have to teach them in palm-leaf huts, that are open to heat and storms, and, when rain comes, offer no protection to the little ones. Your gift received to-day is evidence to us that God will supply our need of money for this great work.

The American Pulpit

A SERMON BY

Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis*

THE GREAT REFUSAL

TEXT—Acts 24 : 25, 27

"And as Paul reasoned of righteousness, temperance and judgment to come, Felix trembled. And he said, Go thy way for this time. . . . But after two years Festus came, and Felix left Paul bound."

HERE we have a prisoner at the bar, indicting the judge on the bench. Here is a subject lifting his fetters to terrify the king on the throne. Forgetting his chains, Paul lifts his hand to pronounce judgment and penalty on the guilty. Forgetting his purple, Felix cringes in terror before the decree of Paul. Outwardly Felix was king, and by a word, by a single nod of the head, he could have sent Paul to the headsman's block. And yet this prisoner, strangely enough, by a word and a nod of the head, terrifies the king, and judging, he sends Felix to the left. For Felix is the king outwardly through purple, and Paul is God's uncrowned king, ruling by divine right. History holds but two other scenes comparable to this judgment hour when Paul indicts the wicked monarch and the beautiful woman on the throne beside him. One such scene took place in the palace of Lorenzo the Magnificent. Worn out by his excesses, the prince was dying. Terrified by the shadows falling from the wings of Death spread above him, Lorenzo sends for the one man in Florence in whom he has confidence, his old enemy, Savonarola. Piteously the prince begged for absolution. Like an avenging angel Savonarola towered above the monarch. "Dost thou repent of thy sins? Wilt thou relinquish thine ill-gotten gains? Wilt thou restore her liberties to Florence?" Lorenzo shook like a leaf caught in the storm. Terrified he crept into the silken coverlids, and Savonarola stalked out of the hall like the angel with the flaming sword, and would not open the gates of Paradise.

More striking still, the condemned martyr's indictment of his ruler. Before him were the stake and the blazing pile, toward which the youthful disciple walked between two rows of spears and armed soldiers. Stopping just before his ruler, the youth lifted his hand, condemned the cruel monarch for his crimes, handed him over to the wrath of the Lamb and the terrors of eternal justice. Then the awe of the unseen world fell on the multitude. With white lips the soldiers dropped to their knees. On and on spoke the prophet of God, until the ruler crawled to the feet of the condemned disciple and begged piteously for his forgiveness and intercession. When God comes, doubt, sin, rebellion flee before his presence. The word of God is a sword, quick and living and powerful, that divides the sinner from his sins, burning where it touches. There is nothing great in the universe but man, there is nothing great in man but his soul, and God, from whom his soul came. And, while Paul reasoned of righteousness and the judgment to come, all illusions fell away from Felix; and his great palace and his power, with his soldiers, and his wealth, became only as cobwebs through which Death and Eternity sat glaring.

Sought Entertainment, Found Judgment

What Felix looked for was entertainment; what he found was judgment and penalty. Claudius was Emperor, and Felix, and Pallas, his brother, were Cæsar's favorites. No other ruler had Felix's power to raise money by taxation, and build a government. When Cæsar's finances were embarrassed, his general counseled sending for Felix, because half of his wealth would repair the king's exchequer. Drusilla was the daughter of one king and the wife of another, and was now living with a third. Because time hung heavily upon him, Felix bethought himself of Paul, the prisoner. The fame of Paul's eloquence had made its way even into the palace. For reasons of curiosity, and motives of entertainment, soldiers were sent for the apostle, in the hope that he might while away an hour and kill a little time. Life must grow irksome for kings. For the king no idle sauntering down the street, to look in shop windows. For the king, no lounging in the park, to fulfil Whitman's phrase "to loaf and refresh the soul." For the king, no joining himself to the little group of eager disputants. For the king, starch, dignity and primness. For kings pay dearly for their crowns. Weary of the court jester, the dancers and the magicians, Felix sent for Paul. What a figure was that which stood before the great monarch and the beautiful woman! How pathetic the scarred hero's chains! Pathetic, too, his old cloak, the prison pallor and his white age.

Tempted oft, never was Paul tempted more sorely. Soon his trial would come. Sorely he needed a friend at court. His enemies were not present. Events had given him the king's ear for an hour. What if he pleaded his case so skilfully as to secure release from chain and dungeon? A little judicious flattery of Drusilla's beauty, a little frosting over of her sins, a shrewd and well-turned compliment for Felix, with the persuasive arts of which Paul was a past-master—then liberty, and farewell to the dungeon and his chains. But, no! Paul was a man of God! This hour had come, not as an opportunity to save himself, but to save Felix and Drusilla. In that moment, all forgotten Paul's chains! The one thing remembered was that he might yet win this king and queen. Paul gathered himself for the great task, while God was full on him, and he was full on Felix. He marshaled every argument, told the story of his own vision hour on the road to Damascus, he reasoned of righteousness, the folly and stupidity of sin, the importance of temperance and self-control, and then, lifting his finger, he wrote in letters of fire on the wall the penalties of sin and the terrors of the judgment to come. He made that circle on which God sat guarding his universe, to be a circle of fire. Felix's cheek went white as marble and he trembled with apprehension. For the guilty king and queen had come to the judgment day, and the angel of conscience and penalty had sent them to the left.

Moral Kingship

Not those things which are physical are mightiest. The greatest forces are not vociferous. Omnipotence in the sunbeam and gravity is noiseless. The soul carries a moral power in the words of this flaming apostle, that makes Niagara petty and tornadoes ridiculous. It is given unto the sunbeam to fall with resistless might on the black clouds. Shattered into flakes of light, the cloud dissolves into nothingness. Lifting the rod of God's law, Paul smote Felix's life, and like the baseless fabric of a dream it dissolved and left not a wrack behind. In a moment his house of cards fell about his head. Remorse got hold of him. Fear gripped. Terror shook him through and through. What hopes he had blasted! What lamps and lights he had quenched! What opportunities wasted, like jewels falling between the fingers into the sea! His youth lost, his manhood debased, his ideals dead, his vows broken, his forehead seared, his soul like an old tree broken by the storms, scarred by the thunderbolts. Battered without, wormeaten and rotten within. Strange that in one hour Felix could pass from the uttermost of success to the lowest abyss of darkness, remorse and failure. Great is the power of God's truth. It was given unto Paul to surround Felix with the great ocean of eternity. In the blazing light of God his palace became unsubstantial as a dream within a dream. His gold was tinsel and his purple rags. All his worldly honors weighed light as punk against the gold of God's law. His mind became a sea of fire. The whole earth reeled; all about him was a black river, that was bearing him on, toward the realm of death. At last he saw things in their right perspective, knowing that but one thing was needful, namely: To do the will of God, surrendering one's self fully to his divine law.

A Quickened Memory

Great is the power of conscience. The moral faculty can quicken memory, also, and make the dead past to live. It is a wonderful fact that recollections that have faded forever on the tablets of memory can be recovered to their early freshness when conscience is roused. The old artists used colors of blue and crimson that have not faded in 500 years. But more permanent still the pictures of memory. What has been, shall always be. Sins strike into the soul, just as fire drives the color into the china. Rebellion against God and his law seems to set evil into the texture of the soul. We are told that the Indian is afraid to have his photograph taken. He thinks that a thin layer of his soul floats away and is caught in the picture. Not understanding, the red man believes that if a thousand photographs were taken his whole body would be peeled off, and nothing would be left whatsoever. You smile at the Indian's conception, but let me tell you the Indian's view holds an element of poetry that is absolutely true. The soul sins; a little filmy substance leaves the soul, to be transferred to the sin. With each new sin goes a new exhalation of self. As the sins on the memory grow more and more, the soul grows less and less. At last, after a thousand transgressions, there is scarcely the seed of the soul left. This is experience—the soul that sinneth, it shall die. This is history—sin dissolves the very structure of the soul. And when Paul startled Felix, these old sins, like sleeping serpents, awakened. For the sin of yesterday is an egg, from which shall come the retribution and penalty of to-morrow. Men make the round of life twice—once to sow the seed of action, good and bad; then, with God's angels of judgment and reward, the soul, in memory, retraces the long life pathway. And men are responsible not only for the seeds, but for the shocks of retribution. Some men's sins go beforehand unto judgment and some men's sins follow afterward, ripening late. Often penalties are like the storm clouds that linger in the sky.

Lost Opportunities and Powers

Felix's first impulse was to repent and do his first works. Shaken like a reed in the wind, he thought to rise up and forsake his old life. But the delay wrought danger. He was unwilling to act with instant energy. His emotions were right, but he did not convert his feelings into actions. Feelings are like blossoms—they must go on, and set into the young fruit. Once the heart is roused and the desires quickened, the one duty of the moment is to act. Oh, if Felix had only risen up and played the man! We long to hear him say, "I will arise and go to my Father." In our eagerness, we feel that we could lift him from the throne, and coerce him into action. Reason urged him to change his life. Conscience scourged him, judgment rebuked, memory whispered her warning, fear threatened. But he postponed. When I have a more convenient season I will send for thee. To-morrow will be time enough. There is a new deity to-day set up in the temple, and the name of that goddess is To-morrow. To-morrow I will found the school, the college, the church; to-morrow I will break with my evil companions, exclaims the youth. To-morrow I will give up this cup of flame, whispers the drunkard. To-morrow I will forsake idleness, pursue industry and learning, reflects the youth. To-morrow I will align myself with the disciples of Jesus Christ. To-morrow I will write my name among his apostles. But to-morrow will never come. Oh, child of folly, know that there is no to-morrow! Thou art dwelling in the street named By and By, in the house called Never.

Give Hostages to the Future

To-morrow is but the shadow of a dream. When to-morrow comes, it will be to-day. If thou wilt not act now, from whence wilt thou have strength to act to-morrow? It is an ignis fatuus that thou art pursuing. Delay not! That way lies death. Rise up and act. Burn all bridges behind you. Turn to the one nearest to you, and make pledges. Give hostages to the future. Reason grows by use, the body by exercise, the memory by practice, and will power grows by action and resolution. Nothing weakens the will like drifting. Indecision is as fatal to character as dry rot to that fallen ceiling in the chapel of Westminster Abbey. We are in a world where neglect of what we have destroys these very gifts.

Not long ago I was in Ann Arbor. Going along the street, under the electric light, a squirrel ran down the tree, and stood before me, stretching out its paws for nuts. It was a poor, gaunt, emaciated, starving squirrel. All good squirrels ought to have been in bed asleep. Only lecturers had any right to be up at that time of night. Industrious squirrels ought not to have been hungry in February. Why had it not stored its nuts in the ground, and in the great oak trees about the campus? On inquiry, I learned that the city council had made it a misdemeanor to kill the squirrels. The college students also had fed them abundantly; growing sleek, the squirrels grew lazy and thriftless. When the first frost came, they were careless about laying up a store of nuts against the winter's cold. Soon, through carelessness, they lost all power of self-support. And so, little by little, that squirrel went down the primrose path of dalliance. On a dark night in February, weak and starving, the squirrel came out to beg one morsel. Gone its power of self-support; ruined its instincts. It had betrayed itself. The scholars say that these squirrels will all die out, and must be replaced by those brought in from the forest. And why smilest thou at a squirrel's folly? Knowest thou not that this is but a faint image of what thou hast made thyself? Where is the freshness of thy youth? Why are these torches burned out? Where are the ideals that once flamed like stars? How is it that thou hast forgotten prayer, gentle service, those sweet and kindly ministerings to God's little ones? Verily, custom lies upon thee like a thick frost. Even the lava in the crater of Vesuvius puts on a thick crust as soon as it becomes quiet. And wilt thou settle down into impassiveness, dumbness, deadness? This is the epitaph for the tomb of Felix: "He postponed until tomorrow; therefore he lost his own soul."

But some one will ask, what was it that held Felix back? In the hour when he trembled under the conviction of God's spirit, why did he not act forever, and settle the great question? Why was it that he made the great refusal? For answer, lift your eyes to the beautiful Drusilla beside him. He had given hostages to her, and she held him. Power to rise up and break with her, for his good and her good? Ah! That power was not his. Had there been one note of goodness left in her, Drusilla would have risen up and fled from one door, and Felix from the other. Oh, if this man had but had strength to have severed his evil associations, what might he not have done! What if he had broken with his past, as Saul did? Felix might have been the one great apostle, the nation-builder—might have lifted Christianity to the throne of the Cæsars. Felix might have turned the world's hand forward a thousand years. But his sin held him fast. How can the engine move when the brakes are on? How can the yacht leave the wharf when the mooring has not been cast off? How could that great ocean steamer get off the rocks? The sharp granite pin had cut a hole through the bottom of the prow and pinned the steamer fast. And so the waves rose and fell, until the storms and the tides pounded her to pieces. It was Cleopatra that spoiled Anthony and Julius Cæsar. It was Delilah that ruined Samson. Oh, who shall measure the influence of women? With women men rise, and with their wives and mothers men fall. Oh, these beautiful women, who lend dignity to rude men, who lend refinement to coarse men, who lend goodness to bad men! Oh, these women, with power to light the torch and put it in the hand of the pilgrim! What women admire men become. If women ask for a warrior, men will fight tournaments for them; if women want an explorer, and give men their love, men will dare the Arctics and the tropics for them. If women will have gold and gems, men will become gold-seekers for them. Oh, these women, who put justice into government, ethics into laws, ideals into politics, pity into reform, humaneness into religion! But oh, these evil women, whose selfishness and pettiness, and frivolity, and love of ease, at last quench the lights in men's souls, and lead them down the slopes toward the abyss!

Gone Felix and Drusilla! Their names are but a legend! Perished their beautiful palace. It is a ruin. Only Paul and his argument remain. Down the long aisles of time come the warnings, and the voices of incitement. Be not deceived, lest thou repeat Felix's sin. God is not mocked. Character is an achievement. Virtues must be cultivated. There must be resolution and high purpose. Delay not. Put away fear. Act. To-day is the appointed time. Once more you are in the great hall of judgment. God's

Sermons for the Young

BENDING A SWORD INTO A CROWN

By Rev. J. M. FARRAR, D.D.*

EIGHT days of 1910 have folded their tents. Each one stole away silently at midnight. All the other days of this New Year are in the temple of To-morrow. To-morrow, the tormenting day that never comes. It is that strange day that never arrives, but always sends To-day. We call To-morrow a temple, because from To-morrow To-day comes to us so pure and good. It comes without sin and without stain, alike in sunshine and rain. Every junior takes To-day as it comes from To-morrow, and writes something on it before it passes into Yesterday. When the day slips by without being stained or spoiled, God takes it and reads with pleasure all you have written on it. If the day does not go from you as clean and sweet as it came to you, Satan will claim it when it becomes Yesterday. He will read all you write on it as a letter to him from you.

OVER the head of every boy and girl who redeemed each day for God, hangs a crown. It is held in the air, over his head, by a very slender thread. This thread will some day break, and let the crown down softly upon his head. God has a crown for every one of his workers. I believe the brightest are for boys and girls. The juniors are wearing crowns to-day, but their eyes are not bright enough to see them. In the next world you will see the crowns you on earth wore on your daily rounds.

OVER the head of every boy and girl who works for Satan there hangs a sword. It is suspended only by a thread. I do not like to talk about the sword; I would rather talk about the crown. But there is a sword hanging over the head of every junior who is not redeeming each day, and is not sending it back clean and sweet to God. Now I am sure you will think this sermon is long enough and you are waiting for a story. Here is a story which I change a little for the sake of the juniors, but it is really one of the great stories of the world, and the main part of it actually happened. Many years ago there was a boy who wrote on each day unkind words and marked each day with dark deeds—received each day from God, and sent it on to Satan. He was a Prince, the son of Dionysius. So cruel and unkind was the Prince that the people called him the "Young Tyrant." He was very rich, and lived in a fine palace, with everything as beautiful as money could buy. But he did not purchase each day for God; he just stained it for Satan. Then there was something the King and all his friends tried to find. It was something unseen that made the Prince unhappy. He said he felt something over his head, but no one could see it.

ONE day a very poor child, the son of Damocles, came to the palace and saw the Prince as he walked in the garden. The boy spoke to the Prince, and said, "How happy you must be! You have here everything you desire." The boy was surprised to hear the Prince was very unhappy. The Prince said, "Perhaps you would like to change places with me; if so, I will give you all my riches and pleasures for one day if you may teach me how to play. You can take my place and everything that is here will be yours for the day, but you must stay and play as I say." The boy agreed and anxiously waited for "to-day" to come from "to-morrow." He could not sleep that night, thinking how happy he was going to be for one day. The next day he went to the palace, and all the servants were told to treat him as the Prince. He soon tired of the palace and its pleasures.

HE went out and sat down under a tree in the garden, where everything that was good to eat and drink was placed before him. Anything that he could think of was brought to him the moment he mentioned it. He sat enjoying the good things and listening to the wonderful music. He tried to make himself believe that he was the happiest boy in all the world. He thought he was enjoying the life his father and mother had taught him not to live. He chanced to raise his eyes toward the sky, and saw a sharp sword that hung directly over his head. He was frightened when he saw it was held only by two threads of a spider's web. What if the threads should break? The smile faded from his lips and he became ashy pale.

THE Prince came and asked him what the trouble was. "That sword! That sword!" cried the boy. "How can I escape the edge of the sword?" He was so frightened that he feared to move lest the sword would fall. "Let me go," he said, "for I cannot be happy with this sword hanging over my head." He went back to his old home, in the poor little cottage, where he thanked God for the plain food and Christian home and the music of the birds and the brook.

HE began again to think good thoughts and to do noble deeds, and then real joy filled his heart. Looking up from the table, he saw hanging over his head a crown, a beautiful crown, suspended by just one thread of a spider's web. Some one whispered, "When your life is pure, and you are content and willing to think more of God than of riches and pleasures, then this crown will fall gently upon your head. As soon as he learned this, he ran, almost out of breath, to the Prince and told him about the crown. It is the sword that makes you unhappy. He told the Prince if he would be a brother to the Prince of Peace, an angel would come and bend the sword, now hanging over his head, into a crown. From him the Prince was glad to learn how to escape the edge of the sword.

angels are testing you. The moment is short, but it is long enough for you to rise up and repent. Leave thy low self forever. One hour was long enough for the thief on the cross; for Nicodemus, who met Jesus in the night; for that woman by the well. Yea, one moment is big with destiny. Oh, hear His voice, the voice of conscience and of memory. Hear His voice, the voice of reproof, the voice of invitation, the voice of mercy and of love. Thou art not far from the kingdom of God. Thou art like that young man on whom Jesus looked, and, looking, loved him. Why go away sorrowful, because ye have refused the great invitation? Know that postponement is refusal. "Behold, this day I set before you life and death, blessing and cursing." "Choose ye now whom ye will serve." Felix trembled, but postponed. Then, at last, he went away, leaving Paul in prison. Will ye also go away and leave the Saviour in fetters behind you?

A Noble German Woman

FRAU LINA MORGENSTERN, who died recently in Berlin, Germany, at the age of eighty years, was in many respects a remarkable woman. From her eighteenth year she had been actively interested in sociological work. She formed a league to aid the poor school-children of Breslau, and this was followed by the establishment of a society to improve the condition of workingwomen—one of the first of its kind in Germany. She was also the foundress and president of the Berlin Kindergarten Association. At the close of the War of 1866 she established the Berlin Public Kitchens, which provided food for thousands of poor families. The plan of these kitchens was adopted in many other large German cities. In addition to these varied activities Frau Morgenstern founded and conducted a Foundlings' Home, the Berlin Workingwomen's Union, and the Housekeepers' Union. After the Franco-German War, and when bread and other necessaries were at famine prices, she opened co-operative supply depots, where food was sold to the poor at less than market rates. These depots were the models for the stores now existing for the benefit of the employees of the German government. Amid these multifarious undertakings she still found time for lighter work. She was the author of a number of books, some of them stories for children, and others dealing with philanthropic enterprises. Few women in Germany were more widely beloved or more deservedly honored. Her example gave to the women of Germany not only the desire for, but the knowledge of, many economic reforms, which have been of great service to the nation.

A Glimpse of Three Homes

Dear Mr. Klopsch: The premium arrived safely, Bible Stories and Before the Doctor Comes, also the lovely calendar and picture, and I find that the two new subscribers I sent you have also received theirs. Words cannot thank you for the comfort they will bring in the coming year. Let me give you a picture that may tell you better of the subscribers' three homes:

No. 1. An old lady, a cripple, with her Bible and CHRISTIAN HERALD before her. She waits anxiously for the next number. She can talk on almost any subject and always says, "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD says so." She has been a subscriber for many years. Laying it down she says, "God bless the editor, and all of our HERALD family."

No. 2. An old soldier of the Civil War, living away from friends on a farm. He says, "I take more comfort with my CHRISTIAN HERALD than all the reading I get; you learn something from it."

No. 3. A young married man and wife; live in the country, and have no religious privileges. Have sent THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to them, without their knowledge, and praying that God may speak to them through the lovely face of the sleeping child and the weekly messages of the paper to save their souls.

I have thought I would like a glimpse into the many homes when their paper comes. May the same wishes that you give your readers be returned to you, with still greater blessings.

"A veteran worker, who lately passed away, was the Rev. George Churchill, who established a mission in a needy part of India, among the Telugus living north of the Godaueri River. For thirty-four and a half years he was permitted to serve Jesus faithfully in Bobbili and Rayagadda. He was the first man missionary of his board to enter the service in heaven. Rev. and Mrs. Churchill have been subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for many years. They have always eagerly and joyously welcomed the paper that brought them the weekly news of the triumphs won by King Jesus in all parts of his great world."

Missionary J. O. Deming, of Muzaffarpur, tells this interesting story of a wonderfully talented little native orphan:

"We have a special room set apart for prayer, where any one can go apart and be alone with God a while. At noon, I heard singing there. The second day I peeped in to see. I suppose the angels were as much interested as I was. Six or eight little boys, eight to ten years of age, were holding services; no play about it, but really revival services. John was leading. After singing, he said, 'Ham Bhai Butler ke sath dua mangen' ('We will be led in prayer by Brother Butler'). William Butler is nine years old, and he offered a touching little prayer. Then the meeting went on. On Sunday evening, Butler asked me for a lamp. I gave him one, and about ten boys held a meeting on my verandah. Butler was leader this time. I went and joined in. After singing, two or three prayed. Then they sang again, and Butler read a part of the third chapter of John, and commented on it. Then he asked for testimony. After I left, the boys carried on the meeting just as if I had not been there.

"William Butler is the son of a native man, who washes dishes in a kitchen at $1.65 per month and boards himself, and tries to keep his family on that. He can't read, but he is trying to live a Christian life. William is in classes with boys of twelve and fourteen. He was largely the inspiration of these revival meetings. When Bishop Warne, at conference, asked for volunteers for the ministry twelve of the oldest boys of the school dedicated their lives for God's service. One of them was William's older brother, Daud, who is about seventeen. We call them 'the twelve apostles.' We have sixty-five boys in school, and we expect most of them to be preachers and teachers. As they are poor we have to feed and clothe them, as well as teach them. They are all Christians. William Butler is supported by a young lady in America, who is a clerk in a store. I think she will have a big star in her crown."

Doubtless many of our readers will remember Kittie Wood Kumarakulasinghe, whose bright letters of travel and experience in India have appeared from time to time in the pages of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. She writes to us from Vemballa, Tiruvella, Travancore, as follows:

"I am sitting at the house of a Syrian Christian, who has just royally treated us (a party of twelve) to breakfast, after the Sunday morning meeting at a village half a mile from here. The people do not live close together, in villages, in Central and North Travancore, as they do in South India, but a family from each homestead made up a large congregation: Pariahs and Puliyars in the middle, and some Christians of the ancient Syrian Church, on one side, with the officers in the front.

A Baptism in Bapatla During the Revival of 1909

"Last evening, at Tiruvella, the Colonel, Brigadier Yesu Patham, Major Gnana Seelan and myself visited by request the Syrian Bishop in his chamber, for he has been sick. He is a beautiful old man, with a long white beard; he was simply dressed in white, with his bishop's cap, with twelve crosses on it; but his suffragan was gorgeously arrayed in scarlet satin. After a long conversation between him and Colonel Nurani, we prayed, and he gave us his benediction and expressed pleasure that we were working for his Lord, and added, 'You know we are the people the apostle Thomas preached to.' Th next night we had many more than five hundre people, Syrians and villagers, at our meeting. Th suffragan was with us, as also a parish priest There is a strong movement here, called 'The Syria Evangelical Alliance,' the leaders of which are youn men who used to attend and take regular part in th Salvation Army meetings in Madras."

Balaghat, India, is in the heart of Gondland about 80 miles from Nagpur and 120 from Jabalpur It is situated in a lovely country, and it is a relie to the dweller in the plains to turn to these wild for est uplands. Missionary Robert Barrow, now sta tioned there, sends these interesting facts:

"The Gonds are the most numerous caste of people in the district They are aborigines, very primitive, and demon worshipers. We long to win them for the Lord Jesus Christ. If the stewards of God in the home lands would 'hold the ropes,' and help us by prayer and money, Gondland would inevitably be the scene of many triumphs for the cross of Jesus.

"One of our great needs is a new school building. The present mud house is utterly inadequate; it can hardly be dignified by the name of 'school'; but the scholars are the joy of our hearts. At present we have an average attendance of thirty-five to forty bright boys and girls, all heathen, with the exception of four or five. It is a grand opportunity, an urgent need and we (my wife and I) would be so grateful for help in this direction. Toward the $325 needed I have received $100. The government will help with a grant.

"The Baigas are the aborigines of the Central Provinces; they are very scantily clad.

"One of our Baiga friends was converted under Mr. Lampard's preaching some years ago; and very soon after his baptism he became eager to help his Sahib in his endeavors for the souls of his heathen neighbors, and conceived a desire to preach in the bazaar. He delivered a very practical address, his main point being the benefits which accrue from becoming a Christian. His oration was as follows: 'Behold, brethren, what Christianity can do for a man! Much knowledge is mine since I forsook my idols; before my conversion I only knew the name of one day in the week, i. e., Bazaar day. Now that I am a Christian I know the names of two, i. e., Bazaar day and Sunday.' Needless to say his aboriginal friends were much impressed."

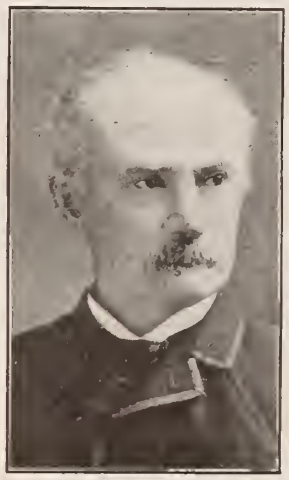
OUR NEW DIPLOMATS AT FOREIGN COURTS

AMONG the great changes that have taken place in the last few decades, and one which will be noted in future years by all careful historians, is the great advance in the importance of our diplomatic corps. The time when our legislators looked upon the men who represent us as a nation at foreign courts as holding sinecure positions, attractive for their social opportunities only, is long since past. It is now recognized that only men of especial fitness should be chosen and that the work they are called upon to do is of the utmost importance, as the tact and foresight of a clever diplomat is often the means of averting grave international misunderstandings.

In our earlier history a few ministers in the most important European capitals were sufficient to protect our interests, but that was when ships sailed much as the wind listeth, and America was separated by several weeks from the nearest shores of the Old World. Now the world is more compact, America is five days' sail away from Ireland, nearer than Spain was to Britain seventy years ago. Our country has grown, and we are a world power, with interests in every country and on every sea. The course of events, greater and more powerful than the desires of our earlier statesmen—such as Jefferson, who wished to have the United States remain in a perpetual state of isolation—have forced us to the forefront and we cannot turn back. Our diplomats are now found in the capitals of every country in Europe, Asia, and Central and South America, and their moves in the great international game of chess, where peace and war are the pawns, are watched with the keenest interest and their opinions command the greatest respect. America has grown to such dimensions (her fleet of battleships ranks second among the navies of the world) that though she stands for peaceful methods whenever possible the chancellories of Europe and of the East know that she can speak with authority.

There is also a widespread feeling that our system of diplomacy is not one of deceit, that we have "no ax to grind," no desire to set one nation against another.

Recently there has been made the largest number of appointments and promotions by the President that has occurred for several years. It was thought that perhaps Ambassador Reid, who represents us at the Court of St. James, might retire, but this apparently has proved idle rumor, and he will probably hold the much-coveted and at the same time dreaded position until he wishes to return to this country. It is counted as the highest diplomatic honor our government can bestow, and dreaded by most aspirants on account of the great amount of money its holder must spend to maintain the dignity of the position.



R. S. Reynolds Hitt
Minister to Panama

Charles W. Russell
Minister to Persia

Those who are ministers plenipotentiary are not expected to live in such great style, and the places are consequently held often by men who have no other source of income than that which appears in the drafts sent out by Uncle Sam.

The following names were sent to the Senate for confirmation: Hon. Robert Bacon, former Assistant Secretary and Secretary of State in the Roosevelt administration, to be ambassador to France. It has been known for some months Mr. Bacon would receive this important appointment, for which he is most eminently fitted. He has not served in any subordinate position of the diplomatic service, but his experience in the State Department is more than an offset. He knows France, its people and its institutions, and will be cordially welcomed by the highest official and social circles of Paris. Mr. Richard C. Kerens, of Missouri, was nominated as ambassador to Austria. Mr. Kerens was born in Scotland in 1842. He came to this country as a boy. He served in the Union Army during the Civil War, and has held various positions of public trust and importance. Mr. Henry Lane Wilson was nominated for ambassador to Mexico. He is at present minister to Belgium. He entered the diplomatic service in 1897, as minister to Chile.

The names of eleven were sent to the Senate for confirmation as ministers: Charles Page Bryan, of Illinois, as minister to Belgium; William J. Calhoun, of Illinois, minister to China; Henry P. Fletcher, of Pennsylvania, minister to Chile; Horace G. Knowles, of Delaware, minister to the Dominican Republic; Laurits S. Swenson, of Minnesota, minister to Switzerland; Charles W. Russell, of the District of Columbia, minister to Persia; Edwin V. Morgan, of New York, as minister to Paraguay; Fenton R. McCreary, of Michigan, minister to Honduras; John B. Jackson, of New Jersey, minister to Cuba; R. S. Reynolds Hitt, of Illinois, minister to Panama; Henry T. Gage, of California, minister to Portugal. Several of these have served the State in official capacities before. Ten new secretaries of embassies were also named.

ENGLAND'S FIGHTING CHANCELLOR

THROUGH the courtesy of the Independent we are permitted to reproduce, in part, a very remarkable article contributed to that journal y the Hon. David Lloyd-George, Chancellor of the xchequer of Great Britain, in which he tells of the resent status of the great battle between the Lords nd Commons on the Budget. Mr. Lloyd-George rites:

There was a case given to me from South Wales f a company which had sunk a good deal of money n mining operations. They sent me their balance heet. This company paid £3,500 in rates, they ade a profit of £3,000, and the landlords got 10,600—more than the profits and the rates to-ether—and yet they never sunk a penny in the ine, and do not pay one halfpenny toward the ates of the district.

When I come along and say, "Here, gentlemen, ou have escaped long enough—it is our turn now; I want you to pay ast five per cent. on the £10,000 dd—"

"Five per cent!" they say to me. You are a thief; an attorney; worst f all, you are a Welshman."

That is always the crowning epi-het. Well, I do not apologize—I ould not help it, and, if I could, I ould not. I am proud of the little nd among the hills. But whenever ey hurl my nationality at my head, say to them, "You hypocrites! harisees! You are the people who n every peroration always talk about ur being one kith and kin through-ut the empire, from the old man of oy in the north down to Van Die-en's Land in the south." And yet any one dares to aspire to any osition who does not belong to the articular nationality which they ave dignified by choosing their par-nts from they have no use for him. Vell, they have got to stand the Velshman this time!

I defy any reasonable man any-here to say that there is any njustice in taxing men under the onditions, when the State needs the oney. We want money for the de-ense of the country; to provide he pensions of the old people who have been spend-ng their lives in tilling the soil at a very poor pit-ance, in sinking those mines, risking their lives. nd when they are old we do not want to starve hem or humiliate them; and we say what better use an you make of wealth than to use it for the pur-ose of picking up the broken, healing the wounded, uring the sick, bringing a little more light, comfort nd happiness to the aged? These rich men ought o feel honored that Providence has given them the hance to put a little into the poor-box, and since hey won't do it themselves we have got to do it or them.

We are fighting in the House of Commons. We ave had a prolonged fight—one of the longest fights n the history of the House. We are getting hrough. It has got a very dangerous passage still efore it is safe. If it does not get through there, hen it will come to the people, and there will be two questions to settle. One is the Budget, the next will be the House of Lords. They will both be on the same ballot paper. It will be the last time, probably, the question will be asked.

It is an old question, and it is time it should be answered. Who is to govern—the people or the Peers? We must depend upon the people. We may be inviting opinion on these questions within the next few weeks—momentous weeks in the history of England. I don't know of any time which is so charged with matters of moment for the destiny of our nation as the present. You will probably soon have to settle these problems. It may be within the course of the next few months the future of Britain will depend on not merely the intelligence, the clearness of vision, but the courage the people will display in the real hour of their trial.

What will the Lords do? Frankly, it is a matter which concerns them far more than it concerns us. The more irresponsible and featherbrained among them want to throw it out. But what will the rest do? It will depend on the weather. There are some who are not fair-weather sailors, and they will go on. But poor Lord Lansdowne—with his creaking old ship and his mutinous crew—there he is; he has got to sail through the narrows with one eye on the weather glass and the other on the forecastle.

But it does not depend on him. It will depend, in the first place, probably on the reports from the country. The most important gentleman in the business is not Lord Lansdowne, with his adroit management of the House of Lords. The real sailing master is Sir Alexander Acland-Hood, the chief whip of the Tory party; and the Ancient Mariner is engaged at the present moment in trying to decide whether it is safe to shoot the albatross. He will probably not decide until too late. But still this is the great constitutional party, and if there is one thing more than another better established about the British Constitution it is this: that the Commons, and the Commons alone, have the complete control of supply and ways and means; and what our fathers established through centuries of struggle and of strife—even bloodshed—we are not going to be traitors to.

As long as the Constitution gave rank and possession and power to the Lords, it was not to be interfered with. As long as it secured even their sports from intrusion and made interference with them a crime; as long as the Constitution enforced royalties and ground rents and fees and premiums and fines, and all the black retinue of exaction; as long as it showered writs and summonses and injunctions and distresses and warrants to enforce them, then the Constitution was inviolate. It was sacred. It was something that was put in the same category with religion, that no man should with rude hands touch, something that the chivalry of the nation ought to range itself in defense of. But the moment the Constitution looks round; the moment the Constitution begins to discover that there are millions of people outside park gates who need attention—then the Constitution is to be torn to pieces.

Let them realize what they are doing. They are forcing a revolution. The Lords may decree a revolution, but the people will direct it. If they begin, issues will be raised that they little dream of. Questions will be asked which are now whispered in humble voices, and answers will be demanded then with authority. The question will be asked whether five hundred men should override the deliberate judgment of millions, who are engaged in the industry which makes the wealth of the entire country.

That is one question. Another will be, Who ordained that a few should have the land of Britain as a perquisite? Who made ten thousand people the sole owners of the soil, and the rest of us trespassers in the land of our birth?

Who is it who is responsible for the scheme of things whereby one man is engaged through life in grinding labor to win a bare and precarious subsistence for himself, and when, at the end of his days, he claims at the hands of the community he served a poor pension of eightpence a day, he can only get it through a revolution, and another man who does not toil receives every hour of the day, every hour of the night, while he slumbers, more than his poor neighbor receives in a whole year of toil? Where did the table of that law come from? Whose fingers inscribed it?

These are the questions that will be asked. The answers are charged with peril for the order of things the Peers represent; but they are fraught with rare and refreshing fruit for the parched lips of the multitude which have been treading the dusty road along which the people have marched through the dark ages, which are now merging into light.

THE WONDERFUL BABY MUSK-OX

A BABY Musk-Ox, one of the rarest animals of the Polar world and ne seldom seen in the temperate zone, as recently arrived in New York and s on exhibition at the Zoo. It is the nly specimen in captivity in the Jnited States. The little northern-welling creature has come from over six-thousand miles journey from Melville Island, in the Arctic. She vas captured by Captain Joseph E. Bernier, an explorer of the Canadian covernment, and brought to Quebec. From this point the animal was boxed p comfortably in an express crate nd shipped to New York.

The Musk-Ox is about six months ld, and is a splendid, healthy speci-nen, with a happy disposition and ood temper. Our photograph shows young girl tempting the Arctic new-omer with her first taste of an Amer-can apple. The Musk-Ox is quartered n a large corral adjoining the Rocky Mountain sheep. Her present diet is mixture of clover hay, crushed oats nd various chopped vegetables. The ntire body is covered with a dense mass of fine, dark-brown hair, and she has a broad, white band across the fore-head and a light gray saddle mark. The legs are of a white or grayish color. The two horns, an inch or so long, are hid in the thick wool on the head. In time, however, the horns will grow together at the base until they meet at the centre of the forehead. The baby is about three feet long and nearly two and one-half feet in height, and might be said to be near half-grown and weighs 200 pounds. A full-size adult male stands 4 feet 5 inches high at the shoulder and is 6 feet 7 inches in length, weighing about 1,200 pounds. This is the only living specimen of this extremely rare land mammal which has reached civilization in many years. It is thought there is a fair chance that the little animal will be healthy and live a reasonably long time.

The Docile Little Musk-Ox at the New York Zoo

The meat of the Musk-Ox is as good as any beef, and Commander Peary, and Arctic explorers generally, have had to depend largely on the flesh of this animal to furnish food. The Musk-Ox stands in a genus of its own, midway between the cattle and the sheep.

Commander Peary states that the Musk-Ox of the far North is a very strong and tireless animal. At the present rate at which they are being killed by whalers, explorers and natives, the Musk-Oxen are destined soon to be creatures of the past.

OUR greetings in last week's issue have been returned to us with thousandfold increase. Our daily mail is filled with expressions of hearty appreciation from CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, who find its premiums and pictures a treasure of delightful entertainment and instruction and its pages a source of strength and inspiration for the duties of daily life. Their kind wishes for the New Year are cordially reciprocated. We wish we could answer each letter personally, but their number makes this an impossibility, hence this general acknowledgment.

A Beautiful Offering

A LONG-TIME reader of this journal, living in a Western State, and who prefers to remain unknown in his benevolences, recently wrote to us announcing his intention of making a "self-denial gift" of $500, to be apportioned among a number of needy foreign and domestic missions. The writer himself named several which he desired to be included among the beneficiaries, and requested THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to submit others from which he might complete the requisite number. After due consultation the following list received his approval:

Domestic
Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, Ill.	$25.00
Moody Schools, East Northfield, Mass.	25.00
McAuley Mission, New York City	25.00

This consecrated gift was apportioned as above, and forwarded to each of the twenty beneficiaries on the same day on which the sender's check was received in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD offices in New York. Every letter bore the simple statement that the giver was "a humble Friend of Missions, and sent this offering In His Name." A beautiful gift, truly, and one that cannot fail to bring joy and blessing to the unknown giver, as well as to the workers in the field who are spreading the Gospel of redemption through Jesus Christ, God's greatest Gift to a sinful world.

Has the Pole Been Discovered?

AFTER due examination of the data furnished by Dr. Frederick A. Cook, in support of his claim to have reached the North Pole, the University of Copenhagen has presented a report unfavorable to the explorer. In its finding, the Committee appointed by the University to examine Dr. Cook's records, officially declares that the documents submitted are wholly insufficient to establish his claim. It states: (1) that his report sent to the University is identical with that already published in this country in September and October last; (2) that the copy of his notebooks contains no original astronomical observations, but merely results, and (3) that the documents presented fail to prove that the observations to which they refer were really made, and supply no details of the practical work of the expedition, nor concerning the long sledge journey, which would aid the Committee to decide as to their reliability. The verdict of the Committee is, substantially, "no proof." This report is signed by the entire Committee, of which Dr. Stromgren, professor of astronomy, is chairman, and it has received the indorsement of the University Council. This will be generally accepted as effectually disposing of the claim of Dr. Cook to be regarded as the discoverer of the Pole. There are, of course, many who on the strength of the Danish verdict will not hesitate to stamp Cook as an out-and-out impostor; but it is not to be overlooked that the Copenhagen University, which has been absolutely impartial throughout, in its report casts no reflection upon Dr. Cook's personal honesty. It is simply his misfortune, if he really reached the Pole, that he is incapable of demonstrating the fact to the reasonable satisfaction of a body of scientists. So, whether he is self-deceived through his ignorance of astronomical observations, or suffering from a species of hallucination akin to insanity (as his lawyer has suggested), which might be termed polar dementia, or whether he is simply a plain, vulgar impostor, cannot even now be determined. Considerations of this sort did not come within the scope of the University's investigation.

With Cook eliminated, the question may now arise as to the validity of Commander Peary's claims, which have already been examined by the National Geographic Society. It would seem to be only proper that both claimants should come before the same tribunal. Objection to such a course would be regarded with suspicion. If Peary's records, after submission to the Danish University, should be approved, it would be a great satisfaction to know that there was at least one American explorer capable of demonstrating scientifically the fact that the Polar quest had actually been accomplished.

Industry and the Saloon

IT is worth noting that some of the foremost trades union leaders have come out openly as enemies of the saloon. President Thomas Lewis, of the United Mine Workers, publicly declared that "the trades unions are now doing more for the cause of temperance than any other institution in the world"; and another prominent labor leader, John B. Lennon, makes the statement that "to the trades unionist there is no redeeming feature in the saloon." President Samuel Gompers, of the Federation of Labor, has proclaimed that "the time has come when the saloon and the labor movement must be divorced." Till now it has been one of the greatest follies of the labor movement that it has believed the protestations of the liquor traffic of an interest in labor, when in reality that traffic has been the cause of imposing many irksome and gratuitous burdens upon the working class, besides being the prolific parent of poverty, crime, disease and a host of other evils. Thoughtful people everywhere will welcome the change of attitude and join in the hope that much good may flow from it.

Lloyd-George and the Lords

DAVID LLOYD-GEORGE, the courageous and able Welshman who fills the post of Chancellor of the Exchequer in Great Britain, is, for the moment, the foremost figure in British if not in Continental politics. He is the author of the famous Budget, which has aroused such a tremendous stir in England, because it aims to place a fair share of the burden of supporting the government upon the shoulders of the wealthy classes. The House of Lords, and the aristocracy generally, own a large proportion of the land area of Great Britain, and hold their vast revenues from these possessions so tightly that the commercial and industrial communities are compelled to submit to outrageous extortions in order to secure even the commonest business facilities. Of the working classes it may be said truthfully that they are subjected to the worst treatment of all.

In the remarkable article by Mr. Lloyd-George, from the Independent, an extract from which we are permitted to quote in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, the battle between the Lords and the Commons—the aristocrats and the English people—is described in trenchant language. The Chancellor's presentation carries with it the force of conviction, and is a notable contribution to the literature of the greatest social and political struggle England has witnessed in a century. He makes it quite clear that the battle must be fought out to the end, and he points out that even a Liberal reverse in the coming elections would only serve to make the situation more serious and to postpone for a brief season the inevitable reforms which will either curb the much-abused power of the Peers or abolish the Upper House altogether. Great Britain is really a democracy and the factious and frequent opposition of the Peers to popular government and their attempts to control and thwart the financial policies of the party in power constitute an anachronism which is wholly out of place in this age of social and political advancement.

Americans should read the great Chancellor's statement, and ponder it well. It is an important chapter in the story of human progress, and shows how far a nation must travel and what it has to endure before it can attain to its ideal of popular government.

GENERAL NOTES

—BY WAY OF ILLUSTRATING the fact that there is such thing as a "good trust," or that any trust may have a benevolent side, it is proper to note the "business-like benevolence" of the United States Steel Corporation, which has just placed 50,000 more of its shares at the disposal of its employees, who already own over 200,000 shares in that concern. It is very evident that this "soulless corporation" believes in practical benefits for its workmen. There is scant likelihood of labor strikes in a business conducted on such principles.

—FOUR HIGH officials in different countries were recently the victims of attacks by assassins on the same day. They were Premier Yi Wan Yon, of Korea, who was fatally stabbed at Seoul, the capital; Colonel Karpoff, chief of Russia's secret police, killed by an anarchist bomb in St. Petersburg; the British chief magistrate in Nasik, India, Hon. A. T. Jackson, shot by a native anti-English agitator, and Premier Bratiano, of Roumania, shot and severely wounded by an anarchist at Bucharest. In all four cases, the cause was political. These tragedies are significant of the widespread and deep-rooted unrest and disaffection which prevail in many countries at the present time.

—La Lucha, a leading Havana newspaper, has this notable paragraph concerning the attitude of the United States toward Nicaragua: "Why should Zelaya suggest investigations when not a single thing has escaped the eye of the United States? . . . The United States stands as a guarantee to Latin America nowadays against the atrocities, pillage and abuse of their Presidents. And the United States in the near future will be the sole guarantee of the independence and sovereignty of the Spanish-American continent." This is a just view. We seek only the welfare of the Southern republics, not their territory. Peace, good government, respect for the rights of others and an honorable observance of treaties should be the aim of all. The crushing defeat and capture of Zelaya's army and the downfall of the whole fabric of military despotism in Nicaragua, give promise of a brighter future for that republic.

—"LITTLE TIM" SULLIVAN, who died a few days ago in New York, was a paragon among the multitudinous poor of the lower East Side. He was a type of the remarkable political product, not infrequent in great cities, which springs from the humblest sources and gives promise of qualities that often lead to real greatness. In his boyhood he blacked boots and sold newspapers in the streets. Then, by successive stages, he became errand boy, student, lawyer, gravitating naturally to politics and rising to be a leader in the Board of Aldermen, and finally becoming the "king of the Bowery" and a representative in the State Legislature. Politics has its own peculiar code of ethics, and "Little Tim" followed that code, and grew rich and prosperous. But he had one big virtue—the virtue of a kind heart. He was the good angel of his district, the patron and benefactor of the poor, the Santa Claus of thousands whom he shod and clad and fed, not only at Christmas, but at other seasons. He paid the widow's rent, kissed the babies, buried the paupers, fed the starving, clothed the naked, and to-day he is remembered with genuine affection by the people among whom he lived, to whom his faults were wholly obscured by his boundless generosity and his overflowing geniality, which were all the credentials they ever wanted of 'Little Tim."

China's New Minister

WU TING FANG, the former minister of China to this country, is a man of singular ability and learning. He was very popular in Washington, and in other cities of the country which he visited. His wife shared his widespread popularity. We are fortunate in having as his successor, as China's minister to our country, Chang-Yin-Tang, and his interesting family, who have just taken up their new home in comfortable quarters in Washington. Mr. Chang has a fine personal presence, with features almost as regular as those of a European; is substantially built, but rather under height; he wears a sparsely-sprouted mustache, and has a keen, kindly, honest eye. He is a man of high intellectuality, broad statesmanship, and incorruptible integrity. He comes with the largest confidence of his government reposed in him, and is received with the warmest cordiality by our own nation. He is not a stranger to this country, having served his country as Consul-General at San Francisco and as Secretary of Legation in Washington a dozen years ago. The new envoy brings with him, as members of his family, Mrs. Chang, their son, two daughters, Lily and Alice, twelve and fourteen years old respectively, and a few other relatives. Mr. Chang's son wears American costume, speaks the English language fluently, and acts as interpreter for his father, who wears native costume and speaks English poorly. John Hay's hand, more than that of any other mortal influence, stayed the wholesale robbery by which the Chinese empire was being broken into pieces and divided up as spoils to those who were pleased to call themselves the Christian civilized races. Since that time, and especially since the United States Government returned the Boxer indemnity money, China has had a very warm place in her heart for the United States. This relation is referred to by Minister Chang in remarks made at Washington the other day: "Before I started for the United States I was impressed by the fact that the relations between China and this country were of the closest and most satisfactory character and by the importance of making this understanding still more cordial. It is my purpose to do all that I am able to further strengthen these happy relations." This delightful relationship between the greatest nation of the East and the most powerful nation of the West will hasten the purpose of the advent of the real ruler, as sung by the angels:

Glory to God in the Highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men. (Luke 2 : 14.)

Paste Pearls

The social world received a surprise and shock at the announcement that the famous five-strand pearl necklace worn by the late Mrs. Astor, the leader of New York society, contained ninety imitation pearls. The revelation was made through the settlement of transfer tax on the estate of Mrs. Astor. It seems that this necklace had $51,000 worth of real pearls, but to make it appear more royal there were ninety spaces pieced out with paste; and on the many occasions when the necklace was worn its glitter attracted the attention of all eyes, and prompted the envy of many who were not able to sport such splendor. The inventory showed that the total value of Mrs. Astor's jewels was about a quarter million of dollars, which is not a great sum now in a land so fabulously rich as ours. The gorgeous adornment of the body with precious stones as an advertisement of wealth is cheap and coarse. As a contributor to beauty it can hardly be counted a success, as it makes a homely woman appear more homely and does not add to the charm of one that is beautiful. The gaudy jewels worn in the so-called highest circles are rather relics of a worse, than the expression of our better, civilization. There are genuine jewels in high life, but a good deal of paste among the pretensions and displays of wealth. The only jewels that are worth considering are those of character, of highest thought, sweetest sentiment and noblest action, which may be worn alike by rich and poor, high and low. Character is a necklace of genuine pearls, arranged about and in harmony with the pearl of great price.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchantman, seeking goodly pearls: who, when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it. (Matt. 13:45, 46.)

Commercial Aviation

The navigation of the air has passed from the stage of experimentation to the realm of business in the organization of the Wright Brothers Aeroplane Company, with a capital of a million dollars, for the manufacture of airships for the market. The manufactory will be built at Dayton, O. It is reported that Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Mr. Robert J. Collier and Mr. Russell A. Alger, directors of the new company, have each ordered an aeroplane for his own private use, which is likely to be employed as a feature in outdoor sports. That the aeroplane is likely to be used in war is suggested by the fact that governments are making guns to resist aerial attacks. In the target practice at Sandy Hook the other day a cannon made for the purpose, about five feet long, with a bore of about two inches diameter, shot twenty shells of two pounds each, never once hitting the balloon, which was anchored five hundred feet above the earth. The aiming was bad or the gun insufficient. Krupp and Ehrhardt have made guns which they claim can hit these balloons. While it is considered out of place to commercialize discoveries in medicine and surgery which alleviate pain and cure disease, and the great inventors decline to put a money value on their thoughts, the inventions that multiply the conveniences of civilized living are usually commercialized, with the commendation of the public. There will be a general wish that the Wright brothers may make a financial success of their scheme for manufacturing airships. Swift as are the advances of aerial navigation, it has not ceased to be the wonder of our age. The flying of a machine like an eagle in the air, or sailing as a ship through the waves of ether, remind us of two of the four things the wise man said were too wonderful for him:

The way of an eagle in the air; the way of a ship in the midst of the sea. (Prov. 30 : 19.)

Christmas Gifts Sent Abroad

It is estimated that from fifty to sixty millions of dollars' worth of Christmas gifts were sent from this to other countries during the past holiday season. Conservative bankers estimate that this amount has been sent in small drafts and money orders to make relatives happy on the other side of the sea. The steamship St. Louis, the last foreign mail-carrier to make Europe for Christmas delivery, carried $610,000 in United States money orders alone, 62,000 of them averaging under $10. If these Christmas presents to foreign lands are, as is claimed, a barometer of the condition of the country, the record this year will show a manifest increase in our temporal prosperity. The New York Postoffice Exchange alone sent holiday remittances to the amount of $7,524,000 as against $5,200,000 last year. The amount handled by the postoffice this year is about 44 per cent. in excess of that remitted last year, and there has also been an increase of about 41 per cent. in the total number of senders; that is, there were about 140,000 more persons in the New York Exchange who sent Christmas remittances this season than last; Irish servants sending to relatives in Great Britain, Italian laboring men to people in their land; presents to Germany, to Scandinavia, Russia, and in fact all nations multiplied the joy of friends and loved ones. The world is not very large after all, nor an ocean wider than a little stream when we measure the love that binds the heart with ties of blood, and when we celebrate the one Gift that was meant for universal man, and the giving at home and abroad brought as much or more joy to those giving than to those receiving. The Christ whose birthday was celebrated said:

It is more blessed to give than to receive. (Acts 20 : 35.)

Mark Twain Returns Home

Mr. Samuel L. Clemens, the humorist, better known as Mark Twain, reached New York from Bermuda the other day. Reporters for the city papers always got something fresh and funny from his lips on his return trips, but found him in a very serious frame of mind, half full of despondency, rather than bright, buoyant and full of jest. Mr. Clemens clasped his hands near his heart, reflected for a few minutes, and then said to the interviewer: "I am through with work for this life and this world." It is to be hoped that the great humorist will recover from his ill-health enough to complete the five or six unfinished books which he has in hand. The American people can not miss a word from the pen of this brilliant, unique, helpful and singularly popular American author. In many regards he is the most unique character in the history of American literature. Of all the humorists that have been and are now on the stage he stands easily at the head of the list. From Huckleberry Finn to his latest publication he has kept hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of our people who have read or listened to him with infinite good humor, now with a broad smile and then with a hearty laugh. He has thrown sunshine into many a darkened heart; refreshed many a weary traveler, and has helped him over the rough places, and has put new hope, ambition and inspiration into hearts that would have been in despair. His knowledge of human nature was so keen, his acquaintance with affairs was so general, his sympathies were so tender, his wit so spontaneous, his humor so genuine, that he delighted and blessed all who came under the spell of his pen or tongue, and made his fellow-men laugh and be happy. For this reason the permanent retirement of Mark Twain would be little less than a national calamity. And his words of despondency at his inability to do any more work have cast a pathetic shadow over the popular mind. But the sunshine, the cheer, the hope, the love, the new courage and resolve and better life which the pen of this large-minded, warm-hearted, jovial, manly man has inspired will live long after the quaint author shall have gone to his long home. The old, severe notion that mirth is incompatible with religion, that required seriousness only, has given way to the larger truth that sunshine and joy, and even mirth, have a place with the deepest spirituality.

There is a time to weep and a time to laugh. (Eccles. 3 : 4.)

From a Ninety-Six-Year-Old Reader

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I was agreeably surprised upon receiving your beautiful premiums. I am an admirer of your excellent paper. It comes each week, and brings joy and consolation with it. I am nearly ninety-six years old, but still retain my faculties, and can read and enjoy doing so. I hope the kind Father will give you long life, and much happiness will be yours. EMILY S. GILL.

What the Bowery Says of Mr. Taft

By Rev. John G. Hallimond, D.D., Superintendent, Bowery Mission

THE visit of President Taft to the Bowery Mission was such a surprise to the workers, to the congregation that had gathered together on that memorable night without any premonition of the impending event, and to the community at large that for many hours after he had waved his kindly farewell from the platform few people seemed to realize the tremendous and far-reaching importance of what had happened.

To the Rev. John Wesley Hill, D.D., the well-known pastor of the Metropolitan Temple, New York, credit is due for bringing about the visit of President Taft to the Bowery Mission. He it was who, being personally acquainted with the President, told him of the wonderful work that is being done by the Mission among the men and lads of the Bowery; and it was through his eloquent persuasion that the President, though suffering from a cold, consented to visit the Mission on the most inclement night of the winter. The President was Dr. Hill's guest at dinner that evening, and together they attended the great meeting at Carnegie Hall, after which they rode downtown through the storm in a closed automobile to the Bowery. It was through the good doctor's tact that the President was induced to make that wonderful speech to the "down-and-outs," which was read next morning in the daily papers throughout the country. Dr. Hill is a stanch friend of the Bowery Mission and a prime favorite with the men whenever he visits them and makes an address.

Rarely have the editorial rooms of the metropolitan newspapers buzzed with such wondering excitement as when the news was carried over the telephone wires that the President was on his way from Carnegie Hall to the Bowery.

It was a matter of sheer necessity, for various reasons, that the proposed visit should be kept perfectly quiet. What preparations, therefore, were necessary had to be carried out in the stealthiest possible fashion. The police, of course, had to be seen, for every provision for the President's comfort and convenience must be made. The Edison Electric Company were requested to instal additional arc lamps in the rear alley, through which it was deemed advisable to bring the distinguished visitor. This they promptly and enthusiastically undertook.

The neighbors of the Mission had to be spoken to confidentially, so that the danger of obstruction by wagons or wares should be reduced to a minimum.

Jupiter Pluvius materially helped this well-intentioned conspiracy by sending a downpour of watery elements for twenty-four hours previous to the meeting, thus keeping the crowd within manageable proportions.

When the doors were opened for the evening service it was unmistakably evident that something was about to happen, but what it was no one could guess. It was not until three-quarters of an hour before his arrival that the men were told that President Taft was coming, and was almost on his way. They were so dazed by the information that for once, and for some time, this Bowery crowd could not properly express itself.

As, however, the men gradually realized the truth they gave vent excitedly, almost hysterically, to cheers, long sustained, and to singing, over and over again, their favorite hymns. The Bishop of Harrisburg, Dr. Darlington, fortunately happened to be on the platform, and relieved the suspense by a hearty and wholesome talk, which was listened to most eagerly. Then, while the congregation were singing "Nearer, My God, to Thee," the auspicious moment, and the President, arrived.

Vigorous as their efforts had been in singing and cheering for the previous three hours and a half, the Bowery men had plenty of strength and enthusiasm in reserve to give what even the President, accustomed as he is to all kinds of receptions by rip-roaring crowds, must have considered a uniquely cordial greeting.

When the superintendent put it up to them to let the President know how grateful they were for his kindness, and asked them "Are you grateful?" the answer was given in such a unanimous and thundering affirmative that Mr. Taft's proverbial smile assumed broader proportions than ever.

The President's speech was a model of frank, unhesitating sympathy with his down-and-out audience. Several months ago, before Mr. Taft was President, at a Cooper Union meeting, on being asked the question, "What can a workingman do when he is able and willing to work and cannot get an opportunity?" he replied, "God knows, I don't."

These words were diligently quoted during the Presidential campaign, to the detriment of the man who uttered them, among hundreds of thousands of unemployed people all over the country, and prejudice against the Republican candidate was thereby created. So far as his hearers at the Bowery Mission were concerned this prejudice was instantly dissipated by the noble utterance, "I am glad to be here, if by being here and saying so I can convince you that the so-called chasm between you and those who seem for a time to be more fortunate is not a chasm, and that there is extending through and between you and them a deep feeling of sympathy, a deep, earnest desire that you shall have that equality of opportunity—that means of getting on your feet, of supporting your family and of earning your livelihood—which we hope every man under the Stars and Stripes may fully enjoy."

During the day following the visit the event was the principal topic of conversation everywhere—in offices and factories, on the cars and in stores. The effect produced on the men of the Bowery themselves was marvelous. At the Brotherhood meeting the next night several men reported that in the lodging-houses a distinct change of attitude to the Mission was visible.

One of the workers said: "Where I live, a certain doctor resides. When his wife became aware of my connection with the Bowery Mission she declared, with great contempt, that she could not understand how I could work in such a place. On hearing of the President's visit, however, she acknowledged she was mistaken, and said, 'Surely the Bowery cannot be as bad as it is painted.' "

Another man said: "I am employed in the Labor Bureau, and every day I go around among the city factories, warehouses and offices, seeking jobs for our brethren. To-day, in places where formerly I have been received coldly, I have been assured of sympathy and have received everywhere promises of future help."

Another said: "I am one of those who have felt bitterly conscious of the 'chasm' between rich and poor, but the President has bridged it over."

Another, Mr. C. B. Ratcliffe, wh while these lines are being written, celebrating the "first anniversary" his conversion, sent in the followir letter to the superintendent imm diately after "the visit":

"The visit of Presdent Taft to th
Bowery Mission, on December 13, asic from its primary object of encoura ing and uplifting the so-called 'dow and-out,' is having a more far-reacl
ing influence than, possibly, even D Klopsch had hoped. The writer know from expressions of many of the Pres dent's attentive audience, that the re maining spark of manhood in many of them was stirred to vigorous life. His remarks did more to bridge the supposed 'chasm' separating the 'down-and-out' from the 'up-and-in' than many an appeal made upon directly spiritual lines. The President's appeal to their patriotism, duty and manhood struck a responsive chord in the breasts of his hearers. His 'Good night, boys!' and his smiling countenance will long be remembered, and bear good fruit."

Rev. John G. Hallimond, D.D.

Workers among human derelicts on the Bowery know what an immense advantage is gained when, by any means, self-respect and new ambition are created within discouraged, dispirited and despairing men. This is what President Taft's visit and kindly words have done for countless thousands all over the country. He has done more than that. His demonstration of genuine interest in and sympathy for his fallen brethren, his strong and almost tender words, have brought much nearer to us all that happy millennial day when, in blessed reality, "the rich and poor shall meet together," and realize that "the Lord is maker of them all."

AMONG THE WORKERS

—AT PARKER, S. D., five churches united and services were held in a specially erected tabernacle. There were about three hundred professions, a large percentage being men. Evangelists Bromley and Myers conducted the meetings.

—DURING THE YEAR just closed Abigail Mission (which has a free school and kindergarten at 25 Charlton Street, New York City) has had an aggregate attendance of 82,770, and has furnished 39,500 free meals to the poor children of the district. Superintendent Devare is doing an excellent work, and deserves liberal support.

—THE FIRST ANNUAL MEETING of the Brotherhood of Rescue Mission Superintendents will be held at Grand Rapids, Mich., January 16 to 23. One year ago it was organized, with a membership of forty members. The members meet once a year, in the general interest of the work. Among the speakers at the coming meeting will be Rev. Len G. —NEXT SUMMER a party of Americans will cruise in the Mediterranean, to visit American colleges, missions and hospitals in the Near East. They will go to Macedonia, Turkey, Asia Minor and Syria. Conferences with missionaries are arranged in Constantinople, Smyrna, Beirut, and Cairo in Egypt. The itinerary will also include Greece, the Holy Land and the Nile. Professor Harlan P. Beach, of Yale, will lead the missionary thought of the whole trip.

—ON SUNDAY EVENING, December 12, the Rt. Rev. James H. Darlington, Bishop of Harrisburg, spoke at the evening service at the Bowery Mission. The Bishop had just started to give the invitation for those who desired to forsake a life of sin to kneel at the altar when an old man in the rear arose. "I'm a veteran of the Civil War," he said, falteringly; "seventy-two years have passed by since my birth; twenty-six of them were spent in the Joliet State prison. I am almost to the end of the rope, but I ask an interest in your prayers, so that I may lead a Christian life till God calls me home." The old man stumbled to the altar, where the gentle hand of "Mother" Bird rested in his and he gave his heart to God. At the same meeting a minister's son confessed Christ, and the son of a well-known general in Pennsylvania also chose the path that leads to a better life.

Abundantly Satisfied

Dear Dr. Klopsch: The "Dreamland" calendar and the "Dorcas" picture were received, and last, but not least, your good paper and the book, Hero Tales. They are very fine reading for any person, young or old, poor or rich. I showed your pictures to my friends, and they praised them very highly. I feel fully repaid by these good things. I hope more people will read your honest advertisement and spare $2 for your good and generous offer. Wishing you and your paper the greatest success, I remain,

JAMES FLUKER.

A Beautiful Book

Dear Dr. Klopsch: The premium, Hero Tales, has just been received, for which accept my thanks and sincere appreciation of it—a beautiful book for my grandson. E. H. STONE.

The Fire at Lincoln Memorial University

IN the newspapers of December 15 there was a small telegraphic dispatch from Cumberland Gap, Tenn., briefly stating that the beautiful Grant-Lee Hall, the main building of Lincoln Memorial University, was in ashes. Probably no dispatch of the same size has caused such a feeling of poignant regret and disappointment through the whole length and breadth of the mountian country of the Middle South, for Lincoln University has been and is educating hundreds of young men and women of the finest American stock, who, without this institution, would have hungered in vain for an education.

The picturesque tower of Grant-Lee Hall, rising high above the roof, was visible for a great distance up and down the valley and from distant mountain peaks, and it served as a veritable beacon on the road to knowledge to the students who had come from a great distance to see if a place could not be found for them within the already overcrowded portals of the Memorial University.

Grant-Lee Hall was originally built as a fine summer hotel; later, it was acquired by the university, and was their main structure, both in size and the purposes to which it was put. It served in part as a dormitory for the young men, and these have been left without shelter. The cold weather has already set in, and Dr. Stooksbury, the energetic president of the university, having carefully gone over the situation, is in a quandary as to what is to be done to house these students during the cold winter months.

Lincoln Memorial University is situated differently from other schools, even in the South. It was established for the mountain people, who are eager for an education, and where one could be admitted fifty have applied for entrance. Consequently the buildings have been filled, every available house in the vicinity used, and many of the students have built little cabins, in which they live during their course at the university. As the structures are already overcrowded, there is really no place for those burned out to go, unless they abandon their hearts' fondest hopes and tramp wearily home again over the long hills, some for the distance of a hundred miles or more.

The insurance on the building was very small, and the loss is one which will be felt for years to come by the university, which needed more buildings, and has been working heroically to get an endowment so that the boys and girls, who are working so hard to get an education, can be received. If the work at Lincoln is not supported and must, as a result of the fire, be curtailed, it will be as much, if not more, the country's loss as it is that of the students, for these young people are God-fearing, patriotic and industrious, and will be an uplifting force in any community where they make their homes. The country needs young men and women of the type this university turns out, and Americans everywhere should rally to its support in this its critical hour of need.

The university has had two hard blows in rapid succession. General O. O. Howard was its founder, and was giving all of his time to enlisting people to its support when he was called by his Captain to answer the last roll call. The loss of Grant-Lee Hall coming so soon after is enough to dishearten the most active of its officers. Dr. Stooksbury was on a flying trip to New York when the fire occurred, and said, in speaking of the fearful loss it had entailed, that the students who had been burned out would literally camp out and give their whole time to working on a new structure if the money for the materials were forthcoming. He said it was a crisis they would do their best to meet, and if any were interested in the great work the university was doing for the young people and the country, they could find no better time to show it than now.

Immediately after his arrival at Cumberland Gap Dr. Stooksbury went carefully over the situation, and wrote to this paper that fortunately no lives had been lost. "Besides the loss of the building," he writes, "nearly all the furniture and furnishings were destroyed, as were three printing presses, one large steam press and two job presses. The coal in the cellar was burned, as were the workshop and tools. Nearly all of the working boys lost their trunks, and some of them all their clothing, except a suit of overalls. Some of the teachers rooming in the building lost their books and furniture."

A large number of the students teach during the fall and early winter in the district schools of the mountains and then come in after the Christmas holidays, when their schools have closed for a time, to take up their college work. What is to be done with them is a question which can only be answered by the philanthropic heart of people both North and South. The students who have lost all they possess are in actual need.

The way to realize what is done by Lincoln University for the people it has undertaken to educate, and the type of students who come to her, is best realized by a few illustrations of happenings which are almost of daily occurrence. A young man in his distant home among the hills had heard, now and then, of the university which was founded to give the mountain boys a chance for a start in life with the education which is the birthright of every American boy and girl. He had no money, but he did have a yoke of calves. He started for college, driving his capital on its eight legs before him.

A Young Student and His Two Sisters

He arrived at Lincoln Memorial University and saw President Stooksbury. He explained that he wanted to trade the yoke of calves for as far as they would go on an education. Dr. Stooksbury took the young man and the oxen, put them to work, and the lad has driven them as they drew lumber, dragged stone and performed a hundred other tasks which are paying the lad's way through school.

One day there came a letter from a boy some distance from Cumberland Gap, which stirred Dr. Stooksbury's interest, even though similar letters are frequently received. The letter read:

"DEAR SIR: As I have heard of your school being a good place for boys to go to school at, I want to come there and go to school, and work my way, as I haven't any money to pay for schooling. I haven't any father or mother now; my mother was buried Thursday, and I want to get in school somewhere. I am fifteen years old, and I am in the fifth grade. I have two little sisters I want to get in school there, in the orphan home."

Dr. Stooksbury made arrangements for the boy and his two sisters to come to Cumberland Gap. The boy entered school, and is doing well in his studies. The older sister does the work of the little home. Any one wishing to extend a helping hand to the students or school at this critical time can address Dr. Stooksbury, Cumberland Gap, Tenn.

TEN THOUSAND "JACKIES" HAVE A HOLIDAY

TEN thousand "jackies" of our Atlantic fleet are in New York enjoying a well-earned holiday. They were paid on Christmas week, and a great majority of them, from apprentices to plain seamen, spent their "shore leave" in merrymaking and festivity. The men belong to the powerful aggregation of warships under Rear-Admiral Seaton Schroeder, which includes the Connecticut (flagship), Kansas, Vermont, Missouri, Wisconsin, New Hampshire, Minnesota, Nebraska, Rhode Island, New Jersey, Panther, and hospital ship Solace. All the ships were at anchorage along the Hudson, between Seventy-ninth and 141st Streets, and two public landings were used by the ships' boats during the holidays. The

"Jackies" of the Atlantic Fleet Ready to Go Ashore for Holiday Leave

"jackies" went ashore by hundreds at a time, and spent a good portion of their wages in holiday gifts. Loads of Christmas boxes were received on the warships from friends in different States. Sports were arranged for the men ashore, and they were kept under mild supervision to keep them out of harm. Some went off to spend a few days with friends; others frequented the markets and the big department stores; many patronized the Y. M. C. A. rooms on Seventh Avenue, which kept open house for them. At the New Year's Day reception on the fleet visitors came and went all day long, and enjoyed the fine music and abundant hospitality. The "jackies" themselves enthusiastically pronounced the holiday week a brilliant success.

C. D., Harrisburg, Pa. Where is Cabot Strait? I cannot find it in ordinary school geographies.

Cabot Strait is between Cape Breton and Newfoundland. It is sixty miles wide.

Mrs. W. W. O., Overton, Neb. 1. Please explain II. Cor. 12:2, 3. 2. Also John 6:53. 3. Where is David's throne? 4. What became of the gold and the golden vessels of Solomon's temple?

1. The apostle evidently was referring to an ecstasy which is recorded in Acts 22:17. In his humility, he refrained from telling these Corinthians the experience was his own. 2. Faithfully patterning after the example of the Son of Man, we grow like himself, and become partakers of eternal life, which spiritual life we have not in ourselves. 3. There is no record to show what became of it. 4. Carried to Babylon. See II. Kings 25:8-15. See also Wars of the Jews, by Josephus, the celebrated Jewish historian.

Mrs. R. S. G., Stamford, Neb. Were Achan's family stoned with him, or were they witnesses only?

See Josh. 7:25, last clause. Calmet, Taylor, Watson and Jones all affirm his family were stoned with him, they being privy to his crime.

Mrs. J. M. M., Greer, S. C. Explain II. Cor. 12:2-4.

The apostle refers to an incident recorded in Acts 22:17, his humility (verse 1) preventing him from stating the experience as his own. The Jews enumerated three heavens: (1) where birds fly, which were therefore called "the fowls of heaven" (Job 35:11); (2) the firmament of heaven (Gen. 1:8), where are the sun, moon and stars; and (3) the abode of God and his angels, to which Paul says he was "caught up" in a trance. Elsewhere, this heaven is spoken of as "paradise" and "Abraham's bosom."

C. S. S., Morrison, Ill. 1. Explain II. Cor. 12:2-4. 2. What did Paul mean by a thorn in the flesh? What were the thorns? 3. Name some of the ways in which, in this age, we may offend our brothers by eating meat.

1. See reply to Mrs. J. M. M., given above. 2. Although not positively certain, it is the popular opinion that, under this figure of speech, Paul referred to an affection of the eyes, or a weakness of vision, from which he is said to have suffered. Some writers believe that the "thorn" referred to certain troubles in Paul's domestic relationships. 3. The orthodox Jew abhors the flesh of swine and other "unclean beasts," nor will he eat of blood or anything containing blood. Deut. 14 contains a list of these unclean meats.

A. M., Duluth, Minn. 1. Are rent, profit and interest forbidden and condemned throughout the whole Bible? 2. Was Jesus the first great master to proclaim socialism abroad to the open world? 3. Is the fact that the early Christians practised communism, or socialism, the main reason for the enmity of the capitalist class, and the persecutions under the various Roman Emperors?

1. No. Usury and extortion are condemned, but not the reasonable and legitimate profits of business. (See the parable of the pounds, Luke 19:12-27.) 2. He did not proclaim socialism in the modern sense of that term. The reforms he advocated were in the hearts and lives of men, not in the organic state or nation. He denounced injustice and oppression, but advocated the recognition of proper law and authority. (See Mark 12:17.) His parables frequently showed the righteous use of riches and denounced their abuse. He pointed out the danger of loving wealth and pleasure, of pride, of indifference to the rights of others, of neglect of the poor, of having the heart hardened by riches. (See Matt. 19:22; Mark 10:24.) But at all times the essence of his teaching was that his kingdom was not of this world, but a spiritual one in the hearts of men. Some of the ancient prophets taught along lines of social and economic as well as moral reform, yet they have never been called socialists. 3. They did undoubtedly, in some instances, carry out the principle of having all things in common, but their communism was of the beneficent co-operative type, and was never a menace to the State, although accusations to that effect were made against them. Their antagonism to pagan doctrines and worship naturally brought down upon them the full vengeance of the pagan powers.

S. A. H., Omaha, Neb. Is it true that it is only within comparatively recent times that cities have tried to keep streets clean out of regard to the public health?

No; it is a mistaken impression not founded on fact. In London, England, a law was passed as early as A.D. 1297 that the streets should be kept clean. In 1309, it was a punishable offense to throw refuse into the streets. Of course the people of that day had more difficulty in keeping streets clean, as there was no adequate sewerage system and the drainage was faulty. Paris had a sewer system at an early date; it is doubtful, however, if this system was of great value in keeping the streets clean.

C. F. N., Concord, N. H. Who wrote the words and music to "Rule Britannia"?

The words were written by James Thomson. The music has been ascribed to Dr. Arne. A German writer has made the claim that the air is found in Handel's "Occasional Oratorio," this, however, has not been proved to the satisfaction of critics.

O. P. M., Los Angeles, Calif. At what period was New York a city of 50,000 inhabitants, and at what period a city of 100,000?

New York had a population of 50,000 between 1790 and 1800, as the census of 1790, the first one taken, gave the number as 33,131, and the census of 1800 put the number at 60,489. It had 100,000 inhabitants between the census of 1810 and the census of 1820, as the former gave the number of inhabitants as 96,373, and the latter as 123,706.

D. Y. U., Harrisburg, Pa. From what plant is ginger made, and where is it found?

Ginger is made from the root of the amomum zingiber. It is a native of India and China, but has been transplanted to the West Indies and is grown there with success.

Mrs. D. F. R., Lovilla, Ia. The Sadducees did not believe in a resurrection of the body; then please tell us what the Pharisees believed about that.

Rev. Dr. Green says: "The Pharisees held certain great doctrines, as that of a resurrection and future life, with a tenacity unknown to the people at large." If we remember that Paul was "of the strictest sect of the Pharisees," and mark the importance he attaches to this belief in his epistles, we may clearly understand the wide difference which existed between Pharisees and Sadducees.

P. P. H., St. Albans, Vt. Will you give me the main dimensions of the great cathedral of St. Paul's, in London, England?

The length from the east end to the grand portico is 510 feet; breadth, south to north portico, 282 feet; height from ground to cross, 404 feet (nearly twice as high as Bunker Hill Monument); circumference of dome, 420 feet; entire circumference of the building, 2,292 feet; diameter of ball, 6 feet.

A. C. P., Kokomo, Ind. I remember that there is a place in the Old Testament where it is stated that God's anger was kindled. Is it true that the writer of the book was treating of some unevolved element of God's nature, that he did not fully understand, and he, therefore, wrote down the word "anger"?

This does not necessarily follow. There is a "righteous anger." Righteousness must be at variance with wickedness. There is an anger fully commensurate with love, having love as its source, its motor, and its end. We our-selves have often to be cruel to be kind. Read Eph. 4:26. God loves the sinner, but hates the sin. An earthly judge may be moved to indignation by crime, yet deal mercifully with the culprit. Your other queries do not lie within our category.

S. McA., Warren, Mass. What is the pyx in Roman Catholic churches?

It is the little ornamental box or casket in which the consecrated wafer is kept.

Rev. J. J. Robinson, Albion, Ill., writes: "I am exceedingly glad to read your brave and sensible comments, at various times, in reference to the utterances of certain university professors, such as Eliot, Foster and the faculty of the University of Chicago; but I think the danger of these writings is greater than you, or the religious people of America, have even begun to realize. As you rightly say, in itself this teaching 'is neither dangerous nor even clever, but simply ridiculous; . . . it is to be regretted chiefly because of its pernicious influence on the students.' That influence, however, will be, I fear, vastly more potent than is generally realized, judging by the silence with which these teachings have been met by the leaders of Christianity. I have been a teacher of youth for many years, and I know something of the implicit faith the youth has in his teacher at school or university. It far outweighs any counteracting influence possessed by the minister of the Gospel. I therefore look with grave fear—with great astonishment—at the conspiracy of silence, if may so call it, and the effect of these uncontradicted teachings of our colleges and universities upon the rising generation and the future of our beloved Christian faith. I am pastor of three country churches, and have been pastor of eleven M. E. churches in Wisconsin, and could tell you of a growing indifference among our young people here in this Middle West."

We are glad to hear from our readers on this subject, because it furnishes evidence that the country is waking up to the necessity of a vigorous campaign in behalf of the old Book and the old Gospel.

M. A. P., Passaic, N. J. Explain I. Cor 15:29. What is the meaning of baptizing "for the dead"?

See the better arrangement of this passage given in the Revised Version. According to Dean Alford, Canon Wordsworth, and others, practice was prevalent among the converted Greeks of baptizing by proxy those who had died without baptism. The apostle demanded a belief in the resurrection of Jesus as a prerequisite of conversion; therefore the ridicule he casts on this practice.

E. C. G., Hampton, Ia. Can you tell me who said: "I would rather be right than be President"?

It was said by Henry Clay in one of his most important speeches.

A. R., Yardsley, Pa. Give the width of the Isthmus of Panama at its narrowest part; also state how long the Panama Canal will be when completed.

The Isthmus of Panama at its narrowest is only thirty-seven miles wide. The Panama Canal will be about forty-six.

ONE of the principal attractions of London just now is what is known as "Tiny Town" at Olympia. It consists of 100 miniature people from two and one-half feet high, and aged from twenty-one to seventy-two years. For their use there are twenty carriages and horses. The "town" consists of a church, town-hall and circus, with shops and dwellings in keeping with the miniature surroundings. The little people of "Tiny Town" are of various nationalities.

Dear Dr. Klopsch: The pictures have arrived, and are beautiful! Beyond all expectation, so lifelike! The calendar baby is so likelife one feels impelled to stoop and kiss it—lightly, lest its slumbers be disturbed. Kindly accept my thanks.

Exceeds Highest Expectations

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I thank you very much for the beautiful picture and calendar. The Story Bible exceeds my highest expectations. I hope to do much good by giving it into a family where the Bible is an unknown book. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is without exception the best paper published. I have shown all to a number of neighbors, and one at least will subscribe. I have been a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for ten years.

AROUND THE HOME HEARTH

A Bit of Talk With the Men Folk

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

THE phrase is homely, but we all know what it means. The men folk, God bless them, are the strength and stay, the foundation and the supporting walls of every household worth living in. When a home is composed altogether of women folk it is shorn of variety and loses half its charm. Husbands, fathers, brothers, sons, their coming and going, their loud cheery voices, their decided opinions, their love of argument, and even their almost universal tendency to wet-blanket any proposition made them, are, on the whole, engaging qualities that somehow complete the sum of domestic happiness. As for the wet-blanket tendency, they cannot help it. It is ingrained in the fibre of the masculine nature, and more than half the time when they oppose, or contradict, or discourage the women they care for, it is in order that there may be discussion and that they may have the pleasure of yielding to persuasion.

When the men folk are American, it almost goes without saying that it is their highest delight to serve, gratify, and, if you please, indulge the women who belong to them. An American husband enjoys talking affairs over with his wife, and is seldom reluctant to accept her conclusions as worthy of consideration. Sons and brothers are loyal to their families, and fathers joyfully wear themselves out that the daughters of whom they are so proud may have no unsatisfied wish.

This, however, is simply talking about our men, and can hardly be regarded as an address made to them directly. Suppose my readers accommodating and kind, and willing to let me change from the third to the second person. I wonder if you, dear paterfamilias, as I fancy you reading THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in the mellow light of the lamp when your day's work is done, ever entertain the idea that your wife's working day is rather longer than your own, and that in most cases her housekeeping is carried on under difficulties. I heard the other day of a woman who had a serious fall, from which she suffered for weeks, because the back porch, that had long been in need of repair, had been neglected until one of its planks broke beneath her weight. You, of course, never forget to see that every part of the home that comes under your supervision is made as trim and safe and comfortable as it possibly can be. But you know as well as I that a good man and true may forget to mend a gate, to see that a window sash is what it should be, and to remedy a leaking roof.

A delicate woman, who does her own washing and who has never had any outside help in the management of her home, would be more than grateful if some day a wagon should stop at the door and her husband should surprise her by the gift of a washing machine.

Another woman whom some of you may have met is a good deal troubled because those boys of hers, whom she carried in her arms and rocked to sleep when they were babies, for whom she has saved and scrimped and denied herself all the years when they were growing up, are now so forgetful of her comfort that they never have a moment to spare for mother, and use the home over which she presides as if it were only a place where they may eat and sleep. It seems a pity, does it not, if this be your mother, that you should fail in making her happy when she has spent all the years of your life in being good to you?

There is just another word I would say to the men folk in general, and it is this: Don't find fault at the table. The temptation to do this often overmasters the best of you, because when you sit down to breakfast you are in a hurry to get away, and when you sit down to supper at night you are weary. I remember a man whose habit it was to ring the changes in the matter of fault-finding straight through every meal that he took in the privacy of his family. He was seldom restrained by the presence of visitors, and was, on the whole, a disagreeable personage to have about, although he was an elder in the church, a high-minded and conscientious man, and, in brief, the salt of the earth.

Once, when he was dining at the house of a friend, he proved so very genial and such good company that a young lady who had hitherto known him only in the bearish guise of a man at liberty to speak his mind in his own house, could not understand the metamorphosis. "Oh," said her mother, "that gentleman is what I call a street angel." I am sure, as I write, that the good men to whom I am venturing to preach this little sermon do not deserve the title of "street angels." Yet, my friends, if you ever are assailed by the faintest temptation to criticise or complain of a lack in the cooking, or a mistake in the catering, or a lapse in the good management of the women at home, stop a moment and remember that here silence is golden. If there is to be real home happiness in this world of ours, men folk and women folk alike, wherever they are, must pull together.

THE WINTER WIND

OH, the Winter Wind is a jolly elf
As he sings through the forest aisles.
He cares not a jot for glory or pelf
As he travels his merry miles.

And he quickens the pulse and brightens the eyes,
And he blows the ships to port;
The breeze of the summer for lullabies,
But the Winter Wind for sport.

Conversational Blunders

A GENTLEWOMAN, whose conversational gifts are acknowledged to be excellent, has an unfortunate habit of repeating every statement she makes two or three times in the course of a half hour. She is not satisfied with telling her friends once for all that yesterday she took a trip out of town to visit her mother, or with explaining in a single sentence that Uncle Robert called at nine o'clock in the morning and left a message from Aunt Sarah. Having related a story once, she repeats it in a slightly varied form two or three times before leaving the subject. She does this especially, and with wearisome iteration, when she is telling what she herself said or did on a definite occasion. In consequence of this defect in her daily talk people dread her appearance, and she is privately voted a bore notwithstanding that she is really clever and at times almost brilliant.

A conversational blunder of a different kind, but one that is equally fatal in its effect upon listeners, is frequently made by people who have a reputation for talking fluently and well. Usually these people are beyond middle age, but not always. They have accumulated a fund of anecdotes, and they bring them in at every opportunity until their families and friends are so familiar with the stories that they are ready to take flight at the first sentence. When young people are in the company of older ones they should cultivate patience in the hearing of a thrice-told tale. With the aged, memories of the present are often dim, while memories of the past are vivid and strong. There comes in old age a hardening process to the brain, which often accounts for the fact that stories are repeated over and over. Yet we all know many old people who have never felt this indurating process, who are not tedious nor tiresome, and who do not repeat the same stories over and over. This conversational blunder is largely a matter of habit, and we should guard against its commencement in ourselves. The trouble is that those nearest us refrain from hurting our feelings by candidly telling us our fault. Perhaps they are aware that we would not receive fault-finding in a gracious spirit. We may, however, be frank and even severe in the court of our own consciousness, and if we have fallen into a rut or drifted into a custom of telling the same stories again and again, why should we not call a halt?

Allied to these errors is another, and it is equally undesirable. There are numbers of people who constantly interlard their talk with expressions and expletives far from elegant. "Heavens!" "Gracious me!" and similar phrases drop from pretty lips and are so nearly akin to profanity that they cannot be defended. We do not need in our common talk these little phrases, that have no meaning and are much like blots of ink on a fair page. Slang attracts many of us to our undoing, because it frequently crystallizes in a word or two much that requires a longer time to say. A man the other day remarked that when he said that somebody was "up a tree" or "up against it," etc., he painted a picture in colors more striking and effective than he could have done had he simply said that his friend was in circumstances of embarrassment. Undoubtedly there is a picturesque quality in some of our current slang. Equally, it is a mistake to use it too often.

—C. S. Always thank any one who does you a kindness. Your question as to whether you should allow an acquaintance whom you casually meet to pay your fare on the streetcar must be answered in the negative. Pay your own fare.

WHEN the bell rang for dinner, Rose went down with all her charms about her. She had removed her plumed hat, but a comb set with brilliants circled her black hair, and flashed a thousand darts into the senses of those who looked at her. The Captain met her with outspoken words of admiration. Arent was dumb with wonder and delight until a glance from Virginia restored him to himself. He was in his handsomest uniform and ready for the race course.

"The town has forgotten the Stamp Act," he said. "Rich and poor are making bets, and talking of Justice Artaveldt's Corisande. It is not the tyranny of England that amazes the streets this morning; it is the presumption of the man."

"The city grows crazy," said Madame Van Vroom; "yet they must go to a horse race! I am against such foolish ways."

"It is the way of the world from the beginning," said Virginia. "This morning the Governor was speaking to Rose about it. He reminded her that Sodom and Nineveh were racing and betting, and feasting, and dressing, with fire and the sword at their gates."

"Far-fetched were the Governor's examples," answered the Captain, "and it was very ungrateful in him to compare New York to Sodom and Nineveh. Very kind has New York been to Cadwallader Colden, and well he knows her citizens are honorable men, true men, good men, all of us; at least, most of us; there may be a few bad men, I——"

"Plenty to serve for examples, Captain, without going back thousands of years for them. I know a few myself;" and Rose laughed merrily, and touched Arent's hand, and then answered his adoring look with a smile so speaking that he comprehended instantly he must corroborate her statement.

"I, also," he added, "I also know bad men—many of them. But I thank God, all the women I know are angels of goodness and beauty!"

"Stuff and nonsense!" ejaculated Madame. "Plenty of women only middling to bad. I could name a few of them."

"Enough said, Katrina. We must make an early start, two o'clock at the latest."

The crowd went with them to the Artaveldt course, and they found another crowd already there. A large tent had been erected for the invited guests, and beautifully dressed men and women rested in its shade, or strolled over the green grass. Every one was laughing, arguing. Merchants, traders, and mechanics stood in groups conversing; farmers were sitting stolidly in their wagons; negro women selling cold chicken pie, or freshly fried crullers; and on the river there was a great number of small boats, gay with flags and finely dressed parties and pleasantly noisy with the sounds of conversation, laughter, music and singing. It was a happy scene, for it was both a race and a social reunion; and the atmosphere was full of the harmony of a humanity that believed itself to be making merry.

Suddenly a strange, restless feeling took possession of the outskirts of the course. Men gathered together, stood for a few moments, and then hastily left the field. Very soon Joris, with a face white and angry, passed rapidly along the line, and was seen speaking with passionate gestures to his father. At the same moment there came from the city a confused sound of bells and drums and human voices. A silence ominous and inquisitive stopped the talkers, even in the midst of their sentences, and as Joris said a word or two here and there, in the assembled company, men hurried away to their vehicles—their wives and daughters following in a kind of sullen, silent anger.

"He was walking with Rose in the starlit garden"

Captain Van Vroom was among the first to call his party together. "What is the matter, Jan? whatever is the matter?" asked Madame.

"Robbery! Tyranny! Slavery! That is all, Katrina; not our lives—our lives we may keep, if like cowards and slaves we will live."

"That Stamp Act again?"

"Yes—here is the carriage. Arent will drive you home. I am going with Fred Philipse to the Mayor's office. When I shall get home I know not. Keep Arent by you—the soldiers may turn ugly."

"And the race, father?"

"I care not, Arent, what is done about the race. More is at stake now than dollars and horse fame. The Lady Rose, your mother and sister take safely home, and suffer no impertinence from those redcoats in the kitchen. If one rude word they say, rough them! Knock them down! Kick them out! God help us!"

"Come, Captain."

"Ready, Philipse."

Then Arent looked helplessly at his sister. He could not drive; he knew no more of driving than he did of plowing; and charged with the care of the three women he loved best in the world, he feared to touch the reins. Virginia understood his dilemma. She whispered a few words to Rose, and Rose went to the young man.

"Captain Van Vroom," she said, "pray let me drive. I want to drive so much! Oh, you need not fear to trust me, and you can sit at my side, and give me help, if I need it—which I shall not."

So the drive which had turned Arent sick with apprehension was after all a happy drive. In spite of the public anxiety, it ended in smiles and was followed by an evening that four young hearts never, never forgot. For Joris joined them at the tea table, though the news, he said, was "as bad as could be. There will be three mass meetings to-night," he continued; "one at the Exchange Hall, one at Fraunce's Tavern, and an open-air gathering round the City Hall. Sooner or later this quarrel will end in war;" and he uttered this decision with a proud solemnity, quite unconsciously touching the sword at his side.

But never yet was Love silenced by war, or rumor of war. His whisper is clearest and sweetest when drums beat and arms clash, and the loved one rides away to death or victory. Virginia drew closer to her lover, and tighter held his hand, as they sat together in the dim room speaking of things sorrowful and yet to come. For lovers desire this luxury of woe and sweet uncertainty. And no one that night interfered in their delicious confidences. Madame was passing in and out, but busily occupied with her household affairs and her compulsory guests. She thought the men were more impudent than usual, and more familiar with the slaves. She was afraid they were putting insubordination, perhaps even incendiarism, into their stupid minds. She was suspicious of every movement, fearful of every strange sound, anxious for her outspoken husband, and frightened lest Arent should be drawn into a quarrel that she could not help feeling was almost hopeless for the colonists.

Arent was walking with Rose in the starlit garden. In that still, scented place Arent found the eloquence that is of the inner and nobler man. He told his love in his own plain, childlike way—"I love you. You love me. I am yours. You are mine. Who or what shall part us?"

Nothing could be simpler, nothing more irresistible. She caught love from his bending face. His touch made her tremble with joy.

At length she became alarmed at his influence over her, perhaps also a little weary; for she was not accustomed to encourage feeling that went much below the surface; so that when Virginia called her, she was cold and disillusioned by her own withdrawals. Arent was too happy to note any change; it was to Virginia she made her complaint:

"It is shameful!" she said, as she uncoiled her hair, and flung aside her splendid robe, "shameful! It is even cruel! Why are women made so suceptible to a man's arm, or the touch of his lips! I vow we are the most helpless of creatures. I have said things once to-night that I must unsay as long as I live. I wish I was ugly and fifty years old; yes, I vow I do."

"Why did you go into the garden with Arent? You should have stayed with Joris and me."

"Virginia, if I had done so you would both have looked a thousand reproaches at me. Believe me, it was for your sake I went with Arent."

"Had you no other reason, Rose?"

"Sure, my dear. I wished to get rid of Joris."

"You are only talking, Rose."

"It is all I can do—at present. It a bad, uncomfortable world, Virnia; nothing but tyranny, robbery, avery, war, love, and such exasperions! In faith, a bad world, my ear."

"I wish it were better for your ake. It ought to be better."

"Oh, it does well enough. I don't eally want it better. I like it as it , not as it ought to be. Let us go sleep. I am tired of the day and s indiscretions." She raised herself little on her elbow, drew Virginia's ace to her own, kissed it, and then ith a sleepy sigh said:

"If you meet me in the land of reams, be so polite as to forget rent, and Joris, and the Stamp Act."

Virginia laughed and promised; and r at least ten minutes there was either sound nor movement. Then irginia said softly:

"Rose, are you asleep?"

"Very near so."

"I let Joris see the handkerchief."

"Yes?"

"He was delighted with it—I gave to him."

"I am not in the least astonished. ow will he wear it?"

"He said only over his heart."

"He will fold it carefully in white aper, he will fasten the ends of the ring with wax, and his own seal—'oris.' Then he will write on the ver 'From dear Virginia,' and put elow your name the year 1765, and e month of the year, and the day of e month, and the hour of the day; nally, he will put it in his desk, or is top drawer, or wherever he keeps is love tokens. And in plain truth will do the right thing."

"Rose?"

"The exactly right thing. One nely lover in all New York, with a ve gift over his heart, would be nny."

"Funny?"

"Yes. The King gave honor to the ibble in London. I wonder if it ould be possible to induce Governor olden to wear a Strawberry Handrchief. I would cheerfully resign ine. What thrills! What romances! hat delightful misunderstandings ight follow! Mrs. Colden might beme jealous!"

"I suppose your handkerchief is romised?"

"Who to?"

"Arent."

"Do you suppose so? Do you? I elieve myself to have more intelligence."

"Arent would proudly wear it over is heart."

"There! I know it. He would wear on his cap. He would make it into love knot, and wear it at his throat. e would frame it, and glass it, and ang it for a picture in his cabin. es, I should like to give it to Arent, ut I dare not."

"Then who will have it from you?"

"Chiefly my washerwoman. Kiss e, Virginia, and then for goodness ake let us bury this weary day in a ng, deep sleep. Good-night!"

"Good-night, dear Rose."

CHAPTER FOUR

A HOUSE PARTY

THERE are hours in which the most trifling cross will assume he proportions of a calamity, and Madame Van Vroom was not ignorant of such occasions; but on this ight of disappointment and anxiety he had substantial reasons for her earful looking-forward into the fuure. Never before had she seen her ood-natured husband so stern and etermined in manner, and so reckss in speech; and what might come f two such dangerous weapons at is passionate hour, she was afraid imagine.

She was also troubled about Arent. With pain and disapproval she had watched him walking with Rose in the garden; for she knew that, however great his love for the beautiful girl, it could never meet with any real encouragement and success. "Poor Arent!" she kept whispering to herself, "he will love away his very soul, and then in some cruel hour he will awaken, and he will cry out 'Moeder, it was all a dream!'" Nor was she quite easy about Virginia and Joris. Certainly she had no suspicion of their engagement. That event would be so completely outside of all the family plans and expectations, she could hardly imagine it as possible. Almost angrily she put the thought away, and yet Joris came so often, and Virginia always seemed to know he was coming—how was that? Besides, it was not Rose but Virginia that drew him to the house; he came quite as often when Rose was not with them.

These things were matter sufficient for anxious speculation, but they were attended by other small worries that added to her sense of trouble. The soldiers in the kitchen were making merry over the passage of the Stamp Act, and the slaves, instead of spinning, were drinking, and she was afraid to interfere. When Arent came in from the garden she intended to ask him to do so, but at that time Arent was not wisely available.

If she went to the door, which she was frequently impelled to do, the sounds from the city frightened her. The beating of drums, the ringing of bells, and the confused noise of human voices shouting, singing, quareling, assailed her ears, while the atmosphere showed red and lowering with the rising and falling of flame. It was only the torches in the hands of men marching to rendezvous, or lighting up some place of meeting, and she suspected nothing worse; but it was unusual and unnatural, and helped to intensify the restless, uncertain feeling of the hour.

She did not expect the Captain until late, perhaps midnight, but he returned very early, and for once he acknowledged utter weariness. He threw off his coat with an air of temper, and had little of his first enthusiasm about him. Katrina knew better than to ask questions. She gave him his house jacket and slippers with her own hands as he was removing his shoes.

"Very tired art thou, dear one."

He succumbed at once to the gentle service, and as he lifted his head he smiled lovingly into her sympathetic face.

"I see also that thou art displeased. What has happened to grieve thee so much, dear Jan?"

"How can thou ask such a question? All the things that we feared have happened to us. Now it has come to this pass; the men of New York—I mean the good men who love her—must fight for her."

"Fight! Oh, Jansen!"

"Well, then, we are traders, and we will fight with our own weapons. Donner! we will pinch England harder than she can pinch us. Into the Valley of the Shadow of Hard Times, shut up factories, angry and hungry men, without work and without bread, we will push her."

"A great thing you propose, Jan. God only knows how it can be done."

"Well, then, by God's help it will be done. At John Cruger's there was a large company discussing the matter quietly—our best merchants, lawyers, and the like, Katrina—and they have a plan which thou would call 'tit-for-tat,' but which I say plainly is a good plan."

"Not the sword, Jan?"

"It will cut deeper than the sword. See, here it is—if England will cripple our commerce and trade, we will shut up England's factories. Nothing that she makes will we buy; shoes, nor hats, nor nails, nor saws—nothing at all."

"What then, Jan? What shall we do?"

Jan laughed, a strong, satisfactory laugh, then he added, "A few troubles and quarrels England will have at home, no doubt; these men will find out very soon that the Stamp Act is not constitutional, and whatever is not constitutional in England is altogether wrong. In the meantime, we will make our own hats, and our own shoes, and coats, and kirtles, and petticoats. It is high time we did so."

"Many things will be very hard on us—many things we shall miss."

"But to be free, Katrina! To be free at all risks, and through all sufferings—that was the law laid on us by our fathers. We will never break it, we will never shirk it. Vri Vriesen! Free Frisons are the Van Vrooms! So I was born, so will I die!"

"If thou dies——"

"It is right. When a man dies fighting for freedom, he has not failed. No, indeed!"

"Did no one say a word for us in London, Jan? Where was Mr. Pitt? I thought he was surely our friend."

"We have friends in London, and we have enemies, and I think our worst enemy in London is Cadwallader Colden in New York. He is a whimpering, whining dog of a fellow, that is always taking occasion, and seeking occasion, and going out of his way to find occasion for complaining of us; and then, like the wolf in the fable book, he thanks God that he is not ferocious."

"You like not the Governor, Jan, that is easy seen."

"Who does like him?"

"Lady Rose says he is a good man in his own home."

"That is nothing. That is loving himself. Judge Livingston says Colden treats both the judges and the assembly contemptuously, if they dare to differ from him. Mr. Watts called him to-day 'an old mischief-maker.' He said 'the poor body was hated by the people, who would prefer Beelzebub to him.' Yes, and he added that Colden would condemn all America, if by doing so he could make himself appear great in the controversies now going on; just because he has such an unbounded opinion of his own cleverness. Then Mr. Smith reminded us that Colden was thought to be an enemy to New York in Clinton's time; and 'tis a burning shame, Katrina, for much wealth and honor New York has given the cunning, stingy little Scot with his decorums and his slavish little tricks. The spaniel of the world he is! Let him lick the King's hands or feet if he wants to. Eh, Katrina? But one good friend we had in the house, a member called Barré. In our favor he said many grand words that before th end of May will ring in every hon in America. Yes, Katrina, they w ring in the hearts of our children f ever and ever!"

"What mean you, Jan?"

"One hundred thousand copies, y and more also, of that speech will l printed. Night and day, men will l printing it in all the big cities; ar far and wide our young men will tal it. From town to town, from villag to village, from farm house to far house, they will sow this seed freedom. Squire Reid, who is a gre farmer, Katrina, thinks it is the be way; 'scattering it ham-sam, broa east, will not do,' he said; 'we mu drill the whole country.' Well, K trina, I have worked in my garde and surely I know my peas and bea scattered broadcast would do us litt good; they must be sown in drill Yes, indeed!"

"And pray, then, how are you goin to do it? A great undertaking it wi be."

"And a great company of youn men have we ready for the wor Arent must get the Manhattan out harbor quickly. All down the A lantic coast he can sail. Many citi he can touch, and the cities can reac their outlying villages. Barré's speec should be in the hands of every ma woman, and child. It is full of livin words."

"Let me see it. Thou must have copy."

"No, I have not. Every cop brought from London is in som printer's hands; but I heard it rea by Jared Ingersoll's nephew, and can tell thee a little about it. Tha ignoramus Townshend, who is at th head of American affairs, speaking i favor of the Stamp Act, said, 'w had been planted by England's car and nourished by England's ir dulgence, and protected by England' arms.' Then Barré, who had bee with Wolfe in Canada, and who kne America and Americans better tha any one in the House, got to his fe in a passion. Ingersoll said his eye flashed, and he stretched out his arm and mocked at the English goverr ment's claim. He said we had bee planted by England's oppression, tha we had been given as a prey to he favorites, and that we had not onl defended ourselves, but also helpe England to defend herself. And ther Katrina, he told them to beware, b cause 'the Americans were Sons o Liberty, and very jealous of thei freedom, and its rights.' And thos three words, Sons of Liberty, throbbe in our hearts, and every man in th room rose to his feet. Without know ing it we rose, and some lifted thei right hand, and some touched thei swords, and I, Katrina, I found m right hand on my heart, and I fel the tears in my eyes, and John Watt cried out 'Sons of Liberty!' and w answered him with a shout. For few moments like gods we felt."

"I am glad for thee. Such moment salt a whole life, Jan."

IRRIGATION MORTGAGE BONDS

UR last financial discussion had to do with mortgage bonds and cer certificates, and we shall con- tue the subject this week, only cifining ourselves to that form of ctificate known as irrigation bonds. C late years we have heard much of, al some of us have witnessed the rracle of the water, which, gathered i regions of excessive moisture and l into arid districts, has "made the cert to blossom as the rose." Ac- cints of bountiful crops, produced ider conditions which allow the fmer to be his own weatherman, hve resulted in the development of nes of farms on land which, under fmer conditions, grew only sage- bsh.

First, there was the land, rich in the neral salts which give it fertility, b poor in vegetation because it lay ider a rainless sky. Then came the rn with the idea that, if the melted sw water from the sides of the dis- tit mountains could be collected and ped far out over the plains, the en- ey of fertility lying dormant there f centuries could be made to yield i quota of world wealth. The suc- cs of one project begot another. Alley after valley was opened up, and i migration was invited. In capital- ing the various properties, bonds vre created and sold to obtain money f development purposes. These bds were the promises of the devel- onent companies to pay back the rney borrowed, at a subsequent date, vh interest at intervals for the use oit. And as a guarantee that they vuld do so they offered liens on the iigation project as a whole, and, in sne cases, on the farms under culti- vion in particular.

The Carey Act

The opportunity to arrange the lat- t form of security was provided by t contract into which the farmers e ered when purchasing the land and vter rights. Farms and water rights vre paid for at the rate of a certain pcentage, cash down, and the rest in anual instalments. Mortgages thus c ated were used to secure the bonds a a one-and-a-half rate. In other vrds, each $1,000 bond was secured vh $1,500 worth of mortgage. As t annual instalments of each mort- ge were paid off, the equity of each bidholder became the larger. And i cases where such ideal conditions e sted the projects were successful. It not all were so ideally conducted, al in some cases great financial loss vs sustained.

n certain regions irrigation pro- jts were started, surveys were made, dns were built, pipes were laid, fms were sold, and bonds were is- sd, all to end in failure and a return, afar as the landscape was concerned, t the former desolation. In some c es, this was due to unsound engin- e ing judgment in estimating the vter supply, in others to bad man- a ment. In particular instances, it vuld seem to have been due to fraud. S h cases were not without their uses, hvever, for the gravity of the situa- t n resulted ultimately in the framing o what is known as the Carey Act.

Under this act the lands to be oper- a d are segregated by the Secretary o the Interior, at the request of the S te Land Board, and in accordance w h plans which the Land Board has a roved for the appropriation of wter and the construction of an irri- g ion system. After these lands h e been segregated, the prospective s tler must make a contract with the o rating corporation for a water r ht before entering upon his land. S pervision of the irrigation system is maintained by the State Engineer and S te Land Board until the entire con- s uction is satisfactorily completed a l the system turned over to the set- tl s. In this way the settler is guar- anteed a perpetual water right, with a good title. The settler pays ten per cent. of the purchase price of his water right, and in his contract gives a mort- gage on the water right purchased and on his equity in the land to secure the deferred payments. These mortgages and contracts are deposited with some responsible bank or trust company, which acts as trustee.

Government Land Bonds

The Carey Act arranges to allow not more than 1,000,000 acres each to the States of Washington, Oregon, California, Nevada, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, North Dakota, South Dakota and Utah, and in such other States as may contain desert lands. A question as to its constitutionality has been raised, but chiefly along technical lines, which would not seem to militate against its practical value as a preventative of fraud. It is, in any event, as much of a government restraint as could be expected to be exerted over what, after all, are private enterprises. For, although it is true that the lands operated are "government" lands, for the reclamation of which any citizen of the United States may make application to enter, and although the project, as a whole, is under the supervision of each State Engineer, still the irrigating company is a matter of private enterprise, organized by its promoters by contract with the State. Nevertheless, the fact that the settlers must bind themselves to pay off the mortgages, which guarantee the bonds issued by the companies, gives the arrangement great stability.

This as to government lands. But there are irrigation bonds issued in many Western States, which differ from those discussed above, in that they are the result of sectional enterprise. These bonds are issued by organized districts, very similar to school districts, for the purpose of purchasing or constructing irrigation systems for their own use. Such bond issues are to be approved by a majority of the resident freeholders in the district who have paid taxes the preceding year. The procedure is quite similar to that of a school district issuing bonds to construct a schoolhouse, or a municipality issuing bonds to purchase or construct a city water plant. The bonds then become what is practically a municipal obligation. The interest on such bonds, and the maturing bonds, are paid through the county treasurer's office, by a tax levied in the regular way. The value of such bonds, as with all municipal securities, depends on the population of the district and on the value of the property subject to the tax lien.

Private Corporation Bonds

Then there are the private corporation bonds, issued by a corporation for the purpose of acquiring water rights and purchasing or constructing irrigation systems. These bonds constitute a mortgage lien on all property owned by the company, and occasionally they are also secured by additional mortgages on the lands to be irrigated. As in the government lands, these mortgages constitute trust deeds, given by the farmers owning the land subject to irrigation, to secure deferred payments on water rights purchased.

So, in considering irrigation bonds, the purchaser can have his interests safeguarded in all three divisions by practically the same provisions. Which section of country to select as security for bonds purchased is also a question to be considered, not only on the proved fertility and prosperity of the section, but also on the integrity of the bond house offering the proof, and, hence, before purchasing irrigation bonds, it will be well to consider the advice of John Hays Hammond,

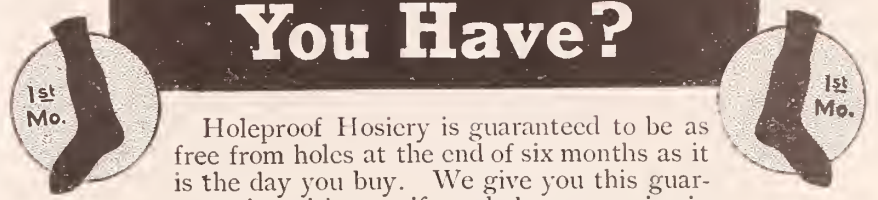
Which Hose Will You Have?



Holeproof Hosiery is guaranteed to be as free from holes at the end of six months as it is the day you buy. We give you this guarantee in writing, so if any holes appear in six months you receive new hosiery free of charge.

Costs Same as Common

Common hosiery has no such guarantee. It costs you just as much as "Holeproof," but at the end of six months it is worthless. You spend hours darning it when for no extra expense you can have "Holeproof" and do no mending whatever. Why not have the best when it costs just the same?

Insist on the "Holeproof" trade-mark as it is reproduced below. Many have imitated the guarantee but none have equaled the quality.

We pay an average of 63 cents a pound for Egyptian and Sea Island cotton yarn, but common hosiery is made from cotton costing about 12 cents a pound.

We use 3-ply yarn in the body and 6-ply in heels and toes. Ordinary hosiery uses 2-ply throughout.

Help or Hindrance—Which is Your Sweeper?

IT ought to be the biggest kind of a help—but is it? There's many an exasperating thing a sweeper can do—and will do—if it's not the National. Think of the numberless ways of the ordinary sweeper that would try the patience of an angel—

Then remember that the National has none of them. That's the difference.

The National
Roller-Bearing Carpet Sweeper

The National Brush is made of full, short tufts of imported Hankow Chinese bristles. They dig out and pick up every scrap of paper, lint, dirt, thread—everything. But never injure the rugs.

The National has a patented Anti-Tipping Device—can't dump the dirt till you want it to. The Dust Pans open (one at a time) with Independent Dump Levers.

The National Handle is ferruled with a steel ring—no splitting or coming out.

The National Brush is released for cleaning by a second's touch of the thumb and finger.

The National operates on Dust-Proof Roller Bearings, 50 per cent easier running than the others.

The National will work harder and longer for you than any other sweeper made. And look better all the time. Fully warranted.

The best of it is—the National costs you no more than the hindering kind. Ask the livest dealer in your town—he's sure to have them.

THE GOSPEL NET*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

"NOW when he heard that John was delivered up." Jesus was told that John had been put into prison by Herod, the ruler of Galilee. John had been brave and outspoken in reprimanding Herod. John was probably imprisoned in the rocky fortress of Machaerus, nine miles east of the northern end of the Dead Sea.

"He withdrew into Galilee." The action of Herod probably hastened the beginning of Jesus' ministry in Galilee. Herod must be shown that he could not imprison the Gospel. On his way from Judea to Galilee Jesus stopped two days to preach the Gospel to the Samaritans, and many believed on him.

"Leaving Nazareth, he came and dwelt in Capernaum." The opening sermon of his Galilean ministry was naturally delivered in his home city; as he stood in the synagogue in Nazareth, having been invited in the customary way to read and expound the Scriptures from the roll which he held in his hands. That day he read from Isaiah, chapter sixty-one. And his comment was: "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears." It was startling to those who heard him, and when he was come out of the synagogue they tried to do him violence by pushing him over the hill; but he disappeared, they knew not how, but God and the angels knew. And then it was he came and dwelt in Capernaum; and after that, for three years, Capernaum was "his own city." If we ask why he chose Capernaum, we will find the reason in the statement that "the people sat in darkness," that it was "the region and shadow of death."

Jesus Preaching from a Boat by the Shore of Galilee

Going Where Needed

A brilliant and highly educated young minister had before him two alternatives: to become the assistant pastor in a large and influential church, or to go into a logging camp, where Sabbath-keeping was unknown and the name of God was used only as a swear word. He chose to go to the logging camp, and when asked why, he replied, "Because I wish to go where I am most needed."

After several years of service in the logging camp, where through his efforts a great change was made, a call came to him to go to China. And he went there for the same reason that he had gone to the logging camp.

Capernaum, all Galilee, needed Jesus. It had a mixed population of Romans, Syrians and Jews. "Galilee of the Gentiles" was the name of contempt given to it by the Jews of Judea. "Can any good come out of Nazareth?" is a saying of theirs, showing how they rated the people of Galilee. But certainly the teeming, turbulent multitudes in Galilee needed Jesus.

Nazareth had rejected him. Did Capernaum welcome him when he took up his abode there? Yes; only the devils cried out, "Let us alone." And Jesus compelled them to take their departure. The people gathered in throngs at the seaside when Jesus preached, and they brought their sick to him to be healed, and later on we shall hear how he healed all that were brought to him. Yes, Capernaum welcomed Jesus. But alas for Capernaum! "for if the mighty works which have been done in thee had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day." So said Jesus himself (Matt. 11:23). And more terrible still, "It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment than for thee."

All that the traveler in Capernaum sees to-day is a few carved stones, supposed to be a part of the synagogue given by the centurion. Also, there is a very humble rest-house, or monastery, where all who come are made welcome.

"And walking by the Sea of Galilee." Dean Stanley says: "The Sea of Galilee is the most sacred sheet of water which this earth contains." And it is so because Jesus walked beside it and on it. He slept upon it, rocked by its billows. He preached upon it, with a fisherman's boat for his pulpit. He performed miracles of healing upon its shores. He appeared through its mists to his apostles after his resurrection. It was in the afternoon of an April day that it burst upon our enraptured vision. We had been riding all day from Nazareth, along the Plain of Esdraelon, when suddenly we came to the brow of the hill, and a thousand feet below, like a sheet of molten silver, the Sea of Galilee lay spread out before our enraptured vision. Like painted ships little vessels, with sails, dotted it here and there. It was altogether more like a delicious dream than a reality. Presently we began to descend the winding roadway down the hillside, passing innumerable trains of camels, and at nightfall we found ourselves in Tiberias, about midway of the western shore of the sea. And for supper we had fishes from the Sea of Galilee. It was to us almost a sacrificial meal. It is said that on one occasion a dinner was given to a rabbi when there were three hundred kinds of fish served from the Sea of Galilee.

That day when Jesus left Nazareth he came to Capernaum, at the northern end of the sea. The Sea of Galilee vas at that time a great thorough-'are, covered with boats of traffic and)leasure and passage, and yet so illed with fish that it was a funda-nental law that any might fish in the Sea of Galilee so long as they did not mpede the free passage of boats. And o numerous were the fish that their ins, as they went in great schools, gave the water a ruffled appearance.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Many times Jesus walked by the Sea f Galilee, and all along the way he ound opportunities for deeds of nercy, so that sometimes he had no eisure so much as to eat (Mark 6:31). Capernaum by the sea was not a place f retreat for Jesus. It has been said hat from no other centre could his ame have so gone throughout all Syria; nowhere else could he have so rawn round him the vast multitudes vho hung on his lips, from Galilee, rom Decapolis, from Judea and from eyond Jordan.

The Fishers of Men

"And they straightway left their ets." In his walking beside the sea esus came across Peter and his rother Andrew, mending their nets. esus had spent that wonderful Sab-ath of healing at Peter's house; so he vas not a stranger to the fisher broth-rs. And when Jesus said to them, Come ye after me, and I will make ou fishers of men," they were ready to bey him.

He saw two other brothers in the oat with Zebedee, their father, and e called them. And they left the oat and their father and followed im. Thus Jesus chose the first four f his followers: Peter and Andrew, ames and John, not yet called to be postles. But already they had spent ne holy Sabbath day and night alone vith Jesus, and listened to his teach-ngs (John 1:35-42).

"I will make you fishers of men." And thus a new avocation for men vas created! Jesus did not call the our fishermen from empty nets, but rom nets that were filled to breaking vith fish. Those four men were not ailures as fishermen. It is true they ad just been having a little bad luck, had toiled all night and taken noth-ng," but that was not usually their ondition. But how quickly their nets vere filled when, at the word of Jesus, hey let them down again! Jesus had ome lessons to teach those fishermen y giving them a haul of fish. First, a esson of obedience. Peter was a eady pupil. "Nevertheless, at thy vord I will let down the net." Second, hat he had the power of God to be heir helper. Witness how Peter fell pon his face before Jesus when he aw the great multitude of fishes. Third, Jesus wanted to impress them vith the thought that he had a great vork for them to do: many fish, many nen. Fourth, a lesson in self-denial; t might have been easier for them to ave left empty nets than full ones to ollow Jesus. Fifth, that as the nets vere filled with all sorts of fish, so, as shers of men, they were to gather in ll sorts and conditions of people.

It was quite the custom in those ays for a wise teacher to gather about imself a school, or coterie of learners. And so Jesus' call to the fishermen ould hardly have created any surprise r comment. On the day following the shing scene Jesus added two more to is group: Philip and Nathanael (gen-rally called Bartholomew). Later, esus called six other followers: Thomas, Matthew, James and Lebbeus sons of Alpheus), Simon (not Peter) nd Judas Iscariot. They were men f common, practical affairs, who knew fe. They needed the instruction of esus, and the uplift that would come rom daily association with him and a miraculous endowment by the Holy pirit before they should be able to do he work of fishing for men. How nall the company of men Jesus gath-ered about himself! how great the "net," large enough to cover the whole world! "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." And the "fishers," how their tribe has increased! From twelve to millions, out of every tribe and nation. No man's nationality is a bar to his becoming a "fisher of men."

As to the Gospel nets. There is a great diversity in them.

First, the Sunday School net. Two million four hundred and eleven thousand three hundred and seventy-three "fishermen" (teachers) in all the world are gathering in the youth and the older ones. Some of the "fish" are so small that they are like the minnows, but we will not let them escape, so we put them in "the cradle roll." Some are so large and strong we hold them by putting them into "the adult department." And all the way along, between the cradles and the adults, are good-sized fish and middle-sized fish that we call our "primaries" and "juniors." They have all been sorted, in order that we may give each kind the care they need. All in the Sunday School net have been counted: 25,432,936. And such a variety of fish! It is said that six hundred varieties of fish have been counted from the Sea of Galilee. But in the Sunday School net there must be many more kinds, because they are found in every part of the world!

Special Service Mission Nets

That is a kind of Gospel net they have over in England, that we have not yet seen in the United States. The "fishermen" are wise men and women, who go to the different seashore places where the children are spending the summer, and they hold delightful services on the beach. They know how well the children like to dig in the sand and play with shells, so they teach them to write texts of Scripture in the sand, and make them beautiful with shells, and how to make maps in the sand, locating the Sea of Galilee and Jordan River, with little houses of sand to locate the cities and towns that Jesus either visited or lived in when he was in this world. Sand pictures are made by the children, and prizes are given for the best.

Be Glad this Good New Year

BE glad this good New Year!
It means another chance for victory;
To triumph where you fail;
To make your will more strong, more true,
When sin and self assail.
Be strong this good New Year.

Be glad, this sweet New Year!
It means another opportunity
To let your heart be kind
To needy ones you did not see—
Not meaning to be blind.
Be kind, this sweet New Year!

Be glad this fair New Year!
It means a little time—another day,
For noble thought and aim;
For time to love—to work—to pray,
And sinners to reclaim.
Oh, do all this, this Year!

The Doctor Book Is Excellent

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I want to thank you for my calendar. I think it just fine. I dearly love children, and that seems so real. Before the Doctor Comes I think excellent. I had planned to give it away, but like it so well I have decided to keep it. I shall tell my friends about it. Thank you for your words of help and kindness through this grand paper of yours. I hope it will always be so that I can have it in my home, wherever I am. EDA MACLEAN.

Among her Choicest Treasures

Dear Dr. Klopsch: Permit me to send my heartfelt thanks for the exquisite photogravure of "Dreamland." It certainly is one of the most beautiful pictures I have ever seen. I do not see how you give such an exquisite Christmas gift free, besides the picture of the "Daughters of Dorcas." I shall have it framed and it shall be among my choicest treasures. Again thanking you for such a gift,

MRS. (H. A.) M. J. ELLIOT.

A Triple Surprise

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I was very much surprised to receive the book, Hero Tales, so soon after renewing my subscription; also more than pleased with the "Dreamland" calendar, and very much surprised to receive "Daughters of Dorcas," as I did not expect that. I do not see how you can give so much for so little. I never intend to be without THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, as the sermons alone are worth the $2.

READ HOW 2 men make $12,000 a year raising eggs : :

FOUR years ago the Cornings, father and son, both in poor health, and without experience, began egg-raising at Bound Brook, N. J., with only thirty hens. To-day they have one of the greatest egg-producing plants in this country, and a business that, with 1953 hens, paid last year a clear profit of more than twelve thousand dollars.

When the publishers of the FARM JOURNAL learned what these two inexperienced men had actually done, they decided at once that their subscribers should know all about an operation so important. They saw that any one with "gumption," woman or man, could raise eggs by Corning methods, which had succeeded both on a small and on a large scale. So these practical egg-raisers were induced to describe their methods fully in the

CORNING EGG-BOOK

(entitled "$6.41 per Hen per Year") which tells just HOW they made their splendid success. It will interest every one who wants a safe, paying business, that can be built up without large capital or long training, and also the million families who need plenty of fresh eggs for table use. There is a great demand in all cities for "nearby, selected fancy eggs," and the few who can furnish an unfailing supply, winter and summer, get very high prices. This is one of the most precious of the Cornings' secrets. The book tells the whole story—where they find their market, why they raise only white-shelled, sterile eggs, how they keep hens laying regularly in winter, when they hatch chicks that are to do their best work in December and January, how to mix the feed that produces the most eggs, how to prevent losses, how they found the best breed for egg-producing, and how their whole system works to that one end—eggs, EGGS, EGGS. It gives photographs of their plant, and complete working plans of their buildings, which can be made in sections, large or small, as needed.

Next year the Cornings expect to have twice as many hens—that is, 4000. Will they make twice $12,000? Take the FARM JOURNAL and find out.

The FARM JOURNAL publishers believe that thousands of readers, of this paper, women as well as men, will want to learn how two novices could in four years make egg-raising pay a profit of $12,000 a year; so they have arranged to sell the Corning Egg-Book in combination with to increase its subscription list to ONE MILLION for next year.

Farm Journal is the standard farm and home paper of America; made for fruit-growers, truckers, poultrymen, stock-men, dairymen, suburbanites, village people, housekeepers, boys and girls. It is clean, brief, bright, "boiled down," intensely practical, "Cream, not skim-milk," is its motto. It is thirty-three years old, and known everywhere. "Judge Biggle" and "Peter Tumbledown" are characters better known to many than Hamlet or Micawber. Its poultry department is famous for the practical value of its contents. It is well printed and illustrated. It has now more than 650,000 subscribers, but won't be happy until it gets a million, which it expects in 1910. More than half a million of its subscribers pay five and TEN years ahead, which shows rare confidence in a paper. It never prints a medical, fraudulent or trashy advertisement, and it is famous among high-class advertisers for its extraordinary "pulling" power.

How to Hear God's Voice*

EVERY conscientious Christian desires, above all things else, to walk in the path of righteousness; but all of us often grope after it blindly.

Not only are we, especially those of us who are not naturally clear-sighted and quick-witted, in doubt frequently as to the expediency of a particular course; but the "rights and wrongs," the ethical aspects of it, puzzle and confuse us also. Then we long for the "great voice as of a trumpet," which shouted in the ears of the inspired seer of Patmos.

It will be observed that when this voice was heard, John was "in the Spirit." If we also could be "in the Spirit," we might hear God's voice.

How can we rise to that exalted state? It is probably the same condition of mind into which Paul rose when he prayed in the temple. He calls it "a trance," and in it he, too, heard the Voice, outlining exactly the course which he should pursue. It will be observed that he was in prayer at the time. It is doubtless while we are in prayer, our spirits rising on its wings from these murky lowlands of earth to the clear upper air, that we are most likely to hear God's voice.

And when he speaks, how shall we understand him?

In the scorching arraignment of the Jews, described in the eighth chapter of John, Jesus implies that they cannot understand him because they are evil. They are not "of God." Hence they cannot comprehend his words.

How can we learn the language in which God is likely to speak to us?

Doubtless it is learned as any other is learned—by study and practice. The man who does not read his Bible, who has no acquaintance with the words which God has spoken in the past, will not recognize the words which he speaks to-day.

"The voice of the Spirit," says Dr. David J. Burrell, "is, as ever, heard to-day among the children of men. God does not leave himself without a witness in the case of any man. He speaks with 'many voices, and none of them is without signification.'

"Lo, the poor Indian, whose untutored mind
Sees God in clouds or hears him in the wind.

But not all voices laying claim to divine authority are the true voices of the Spirit.

"The youth in the Book of Proverbs heard, on the one hand, the voice of Wisdom crying, 'How long will ye love simplicity? Turn you at my reproof!'

"But Folly, also looking forth from the casement, called, 'Stolen waters are sweet and bread eaten in secret is pleasant.'

"Even conscience is so often perverted by habit that we cannot rely upon it. The preacher is not always a safe guide, nor the consensus of the church, as history tells us.

"How, then, shall we discriminate?

"The touchstone is Scripture. It is the one and only 'infallible rule of faith and practice.' Search the Scriptures. The man who believes his Bible is safe, though he find himself in a very cyclone of conflicting voices. He lives, as mariners say, 'in the very eye of the storm.' He can speak as John Knox did, who, on being admonished of the wrath of Bloody Mary, as he was walking to Holyrood with his blue Genevan cloak over his shoulders and a Bible under his left arm, replied, 'All hell cannot harm the man who hath in his left hand a safeguard for the right.'"

It is seldom that the man who prays continually, and daily saves time to study his Bible, fails to decide on the right course; for thus he can hear the voice of God directing his steps.

Candles Under Bushels*

LIFE demands a constant exercise o the judgment. The chief end o education should be to strengthen thi leading faculty. Judgment and reaso are but two phases of the same quality —the quality which usually, more tha any other one, determines a man' success in life.

This is because Providence has s arranged our lives that a trifle to much of this or a trifle too little o that may spoil them. We are to worl enough, but not too much; eat enough but not too much; study enough, bu not too much; and so on through ever human function.

Among them all there is probably not another which requires the fin discrimination that is needed in th obtrusion of personality. The over shy or over-modest man is at fault The vain and egotistical man is equally at fault. He who "blows his ow trumpet," and talks constantly of him self, may be more offensive than h who sinks out of sight, declines respon sibility, and blushes to have his nam spoken in the market place; but he is perhaps, no more blameworthy.

One reason why the Bible seems t lay more stress upon the suppressio of boasting than upon the necessity fo self-assertion may be because men ar far more prone to the latter than t the former. The human heart usuall thinks more highly of itself than i ought; which indeed seems sometime to be a happy circumstance, since th average course of life tends so greatl to discourage and distress us, and w need much support in order to pre serve our self-esteem.

But even when we are conceited an over-proud, we do not always "let ligh shine." We may be presumptuou and forth-putting, yet without shed ding a single ray of light. It is no alone the unduly self-deprecating ma who hides his light under a bushel nor he who is blinded by self-interest fear, depression, suspicion, or the lov of luxury. The "light" of the ma who brags and boasts, who wishes t preside at every meeting, "talk all th feast," and generally, in the slang o the day, to "run things," may also b "darkness." He makes his cause un popular, and sheds around him any thing but light; and all this, perhaps when his heart is really full of goo intention.

The trouble with such a man is tha he has not attained that "golde mean" which alone brings success.

You may say, "He probably has n idea that he is hiding his light unde a bushel. He may think that he i doing everything just exactly right."

Very true, and a discouraging fea ture of life, if we stop to think muc of it, is the consciousness that we ca seldom appraise properly our own ef forts. The Scripture injunction i plain: "Brethren, if a man be ever taken in a fault, ye which are spiritua restore such an one in the spirit o meekness, considering thyself, les thou also be tempted." But in thes modern days nothing short of a scan dalous crime is ever so treated. W should not dare to tell our fellow church-members that they are over bearing, conceited, unintentionally in jurious to our society; and few of u would endure a similar imputatio with patience.

No, we must, from time to time search deeply our own souls, and try to fix for ourselves the happy mediu between letting our light shine an hiding it under a bushel. Nobody els is likely to do it for us.

Yet it is unselfishness, and uncon sciousness of self—and always prayer prayer, prayer—which will help u most to reach this "golden mean."

Zelaya's Forces Crushed in Battle

ALL doubt as to whether the followers of Zelaya would be able to put Madriz, the successor chosen by the late dictator, in the Presidential chair of Nicaragua, or Estrada would become the dominant factor in the turbulent republic, has been settled decisively on the field of battle. Rifle shot, the bayonet and the machine gun have done their work as the Nicaraguan court of last resort, and Estrada is the victor. The army of the late dictator was not only defeated, but captured. No more decisive action has occurred in the recent struggles of the Central or South American republics. Arms, munitions of war, the soldiers and the generals who led them, are at the disposal of the victorious insurgent leader.

President Madriz, almost by an ironical turn of fate, was being proclaimed President of Nicaragua almost at the very time Estrada's troops were sweeping everything before them and clearing the way to the capital city of Managua. On Monday and Tuesday the two forces clashed in battle at Tatumbla Hill. The regular army fought well, but they were weakened by long marches and the lack of proper rations and they were repulsed. The army of the insurgents, though exposing themselves with great recklessness, had but slight loss.

A day or two later, Estrada forced the final conflict at Recreo, a few miles north of Rama, which is the key to the military situation, commanding as it does the road to the capital and the road to the coast. Estrada found Zelaya's forces strongly posted, but opened the battle by an attack on their front. This was led by two of Estrada's generals, while he took a part of his army and gained the enemy's flank and rear. First, the field guns began firing rapidly at long range, then, as the lines came closer, the bark of the machine guns mingled with the heavier detonations; then came the crash of rifle volleys as Estrada's men came rushing forward through the brush. For three hours the struggle went on, the insurgents standing a little farther forward at the end of every rush. The lines of the insurgents finally met at each side. Caught in a trap, the defeated generals hoisted the white flag, and the firing ceased, to be followed by the hearty cheers of the victors.

The news spread rapidly, and the crowds, even in Managua, did not hesitate to cheer the victors. Zelaya, at this writing, is on his way to a Mexican gunboat, under a heavy guard. Before this strikes the eye of the reader he may be safely on Mexican soil or captured by the revolutionists.

who, in an address before a Y. M. C. A. meeting in New York the other day, said:

"I think there should be some drastic legislation in connection with the flotation of mining companies—and many industrial companies, too—to compel them to publish, before flotation, reports of engineers; also to compel the companies to issue full monthly and annual reports as to their financial status.

"I think it would be well also to compel such companies, before going to flotation, to have on printed prospectuses a conspicuous skull and crossbones, such as is used as a mark of danger in the case of poisonous medicines, to call the investors' attention to the fact that such an investment must be deliberately considered before taking, and then only on the advice of the financial doctor."

The bond house is the financial doctor when it comes to purchasing irrigation certificates, and one cannot be too careful in selecting a physician.

An Exceptional Issue of 6% Bonds Secured by a Thousand Farms

Here are brief facts about one current issue of Irrigation Bonds They will illustrate what ideal security lies back of such bonds when the issues are rightly selected.

The Bitter Root Valley Irrigation Co. owns one of the largest irrigated fruit land projects in the world. The Company is composed of well known men who are wealthy, experienced and capable. The land to be watered consists of about 40,000 acres in the heart of our greatest fruit belt—in the famous apple region of the Pacific Northwest.

A large part of the valley has been under irrigation for many years, so the possibilities of the land have been demonstrated. Fruit land in the valley has lately sold as high as $1,000 per acre.

The water rights are unassailable, and the total water supply is more than sufficient for all needs. For the irrigable land is distinctly limited by the mountainous bounds of the valley.

$2,500,000 Invested

The Irrigation Company has invested in the project about $2,500,000, or about twice the total bond issue. And the bonds are secured by a first mortgage on all the property which the Irrigation Company owns.

The bonds are additionally secured by first liens on the lands and the orchards watered. These liens are given by individual land owners in payment for the land and the water rights. Forty per cent. of the price is paid down, and the balance, secured by the liens, is payable in annual installments.

To secure each $1,000 bond there are deposited with a Trust Company as trustee $1,400 of these first liens on farm land.

The average price at which this land has been sold is about $200 per acre. The minimum price at present is $250 per acre. Yet the bond issue is limited to $30 per acre, or to less than one-sixth the average selling price of the land.

Double Security

Thus the bonds have double security. The first is a mortgage on all the property which the Irrigation Company owns, and the Company's investment is nearly twice the whole bond issue. The second security is these first liens on farm land—on land which is worth more than six times the amount of the bonds which it secures.

One can hardly conceive of more ample security. Yet these bonds pay six per cent. interest, because the demand for irrigated land is so great that the projects are very profitable.

Part of these bonds mature each year from 1914 to 1919. One may have his choice of maturities.

Ask for the Facts

In the past 15 years we have purchased 75 separate issues of Reclamation Bonds—Drainage and Irrigation. All have been secured by first liens on good farm land, and not a dollar of loss has resulted to any investor.

Irrigation bonds have now become the most popular bonds that we handle. No other large class of bonds offering equal security now pays six per cent.

We have issued a book on Irrigation Bonds, based on all this experience. Every investor, small or large, owes to himself its perusal. Please write for the book to-day. Cut out this coupon so you won't forget.

The Galilean Ministry

By Mrs. M. Baxter

AFTER His temptation, we learn from Luke 4:14, 15, our Lord "Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee; and there went out a fame of him through all the region round about, and he taught in their synagogues, being glorified of all."

It is not every man whom Jesus calls to leave his ordinary occupation to become a disciple. Paul expressly directs his Corinthian converts: "Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called." But every man who would be a real Christian, and not a sham, is called to present his body a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is his reasonable service, or spiritual worship. And every man or woman who is a real disciple is called in the words of Paul to a life of self-renunciation. Christ "died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them and rose again." Nothing short of this is discipleship, and such discipleship can be carried on, not by our natural power or will, but only by the grace of Christ dwelling in us. And this is possible. even in the midst of all the rubs of family life, of business, or of service, or whatever our calling may be. It is self that we are called out of; Christ that we are called into.

"Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men." Andrew had already brought his own brother Peter to Jesus, and the two brethren had brought Philip into touch with him; and Philip Nathanael. It is impossible for one who is a real disciple to be indfferent to the spiritual condition of the unconverted around him. Life communicates life. There is something in the presence of one in whom Christ lives which encourages hungry souls to seek Christ for themselves. Some faces, such as those of Fletcher of Madley, the late Rev. W. Pennefather, of Mildmay; the late Rev. W. E. Boardman, Mr. Hudson Taylor, and others, have been used of God to inspire faith in the fact of the reality of a life lived with God. There are not only some who are conscious fishers of men, but sometimes even unconscious. But no man can make himself a soul-winner. "Follow me" is the first necessity, and, then, "I will make you fishers of men."

The two disciples did not suffice. "Going on from thence, he saw other two brethren, James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, in a ship with their father, mending their nets; and he called them. And they immediately left the ship and their father and followed him." This is true discipleship; immediate, unquestioning, uncalculating obedience to the Lord. With this little band of followers, "Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the Gospel of the kingdom," the detail of which is contained in Matt. 5, 6 and 7; the Sermon on the Mount, which gives the tone, and the good news of a kingdom of righteousness, according to God's standard, such as will exist when Christ reigns on earth during the thousand years.

But this was not all. Our Lord also went about "healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people."

Our Biggest Battleship Launched

AMONG passing events of general public interest we note the launching of the Utah, the latest addition to the Navy, which took place with the customary ceremonies on Friday, December 24, from the New York shipbuilding plant in Camden, N. J. The vessel is the largest battleship in our Navy, and was launched without the slightest hitch or accident, and the occasion was made memorable by the fact that the christening party had traveled all the way across the continent to officiate. In the party were Governor William Spry, of Utah; Mrs. Spry and their son James; State Senator Henry Gardner and Mrs. Gardner, ex-State Senator Simon Bamburger and Mrs. Bamburger, Senator Reed Smoot and Miss Chloe Smoot, Miss Julia Bamburger, Senator Sutherland, Judge Samuel Steward and Mrs. Steward, Mr. John Sharp, president of the Agricultural Board of Utah; Miss L. M. Jean Cott, dean of the University of Utah; Mrs. Bonemart, the Misses Alice and Eva Wrathall and Dr. S. E. Baldwin.

On every side, among the multitude present when the ceremony of naming and launching the vessel was over, was heard nothing but congratulations and expressions of delight. The clear brightness of the day drew together over ten thousand persons, and as the magnificent triumph of the shipbuilder's art gracefully glided from her cradle the very skies above seemed to echo back their plaudits.

Early in the day the friends and families of the employees gathered in the yard, attired in their gala costumes, reflecting a veritable kaleidoscope of moving color. Raised high over their heads was a draped platform, glowing with the national colors, where, at the announced hour, appeared the fair sponsor, Miss Spry, and her party. Much higher above their heads towered the bow of the vessel, dwarfing almost into insignificance her builders and sponsors. Miss Spry, at a signal from the naval architect, Mr. James Swan, uttered the words, "I christen thee Utah!" and, as if instinct with life, the stern of the vessel gracefully dipped, the magnificent hull gently slid along the ways, and the Delaware received another offspring to her care. The multitude grew wild with enthusiasm, and thousands of American citizens will long remember the day of the launching of the Utah.

Called Higher

Dr. Alvarado Middleditch, of Pasadena, Calif., passed away April 26, at his home.

Mrs. B. F. Severance, of Shelburne Falls, Mass., who passed away recently, had been a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD since 1882. She was an earnest Christian, and it was a great pleasure for her to assist those less fortunate than herself.

Among those whom God called home during the past few months was Mrs. J. O. Denniss, of Pattsville, Colo. She was the daughter of William Chamberlain, and was born in Cincinnati in 1856. She had been an active leader in church affairs and had been president of the W. C. T. U. She is survived by her husband and two children.

Loves Her Bible Best of All

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I have received the beautiful calendar and picture and the Red Letter Bible, offered by you as a premium. I am exceedingly pleased with each and all, especially the beautiful Bible. I am telling my friends about it, and doubtless they will embrace this rare advantage. I thank you very much indeed.

MISS LAURA E. KOONTZ.

Be Well Without Drugs

I will help you to

Vibrant Health and Rested Nerves

After my university course, I concluded I could be of greater help to my sex by assisting Nature to regain and retain the strength of every vital organ, by bringing to it a good circulation of pure blood; by strengthening the nerves, and by teaching deep breathing, than I could by correcting bodily ailments with medicine. It is to my thorough knowledge of anatomy, physiology and health principles that I attribute my marvelous success. I have helped over 44,000 women. I can help you to

Arise To Your Best

I have given to each woman that satisfaction with self which comes through the knowledge that she is developing that sweet, personal loveliness which health and a wholesome, graceful body gives---a cultured, self-reliant woman with a definite purpose, which makes her the greatest help to family and friends. She is a Better Wife, a Rested Mother, a Sweeter Sweetheart. She adds to the beauty of the world, thus contributing to its refinement, cultivation and education. I can help you to make every vital organ and nerve do efficient work, thus clearing the complexion and correcting such ailments as

Constipation	Irritability	Indigestinn
Weak Nerves	Colds	Dullness
Rheumatism	Nervousness	Weaknesses
Sleeplessness	Torpid Liver	Catarrh

This work is done by following simple directions a few minutes each day in the privacy of your own room. In delicate cases I co-operate with the physician. I regard medicine for reduction as dangerous, and bandages and reducing appliances do not remove the cause, hence only give temporary results. In correcting faulty habits of digestion and assimilation, I build up the strength while I am reducing, or developing you.

This is practical common sense.

Think it over and write me to-day for particulars.

Too Fleshy or Too Thin

When every organ of the body is doing efficient work, there will be no superfluous flesh and no bony, angular bodies. I have reduced thousands of women 80 lbs., and have built up thousands of others 25 lbs. What I have done for others I can do for you. It would do your heart good to read the daily reports from my pupils. Here are some of them:

"My weight has increased 30 lbs." "My kidneys are much better."
"My eyes are much stronger and I have taken off my glasses."
"I have not had a sign of indigestion or gall stones since I began with you."
"I weigh 83 lbs. less, and have gained wonderfully in strength. I never get out of breath, the rheumatic twinges have all gone, and I look and feel 15 years younger."
"I am delighted with the effect upon my catarrh."
"Just think of it! To be relieved from constipation. Entirely free after having it for 30 years!"
"Have grown from a nervous wreck into a state of steady, quiet nerves."
"The relief from backache alone is worth many times the money, and I haven't had a cold since I began with you."

Write me to-day, telling your faults of health and figure. If I cannot help you, I will tell you so. I study your case just as a physician, giving you the individual treatment which your case demands. I never violate a pupil's confidence. I will send you an instructive booklet, showing correct lines of a woman's figure in standing and walking, FREE.

A Good Figure is Economy and Means More Than a Pretty Face

I have corrected thousands of figures as illustrated below. Style is in the figure and poise and not in the gown. The gown in Fig. 1 cost $250; the one in Fig. 2 cost $6.00. Fig. 2 is the same woman as Fig. 1, developed and in correct poise. Figs. 3, 4, 5 and 6 show actual photographs of pupils before taking up my work. (They have given me permission to use them). They all stand, now, as correctly and appear as well as Fig. 2.

Miss Cocroft's name stands for progress in the scientific care of the health and figure of woman.

SNOW-BOUND; AN INCIDENT OF THE LATE BLIZZARD

"Best Thing Mr. Taft Has Ever Done"

The Press Universally Praises His Visit to the Bowery Mission as a Unique Event and Noble Precedent

THE newspapers are filled with articles upon the recent visit of President Taft to the Bowery Mission. As the topic is a national one, we devote space to the reproduction of some of these comments below :

Not Likely Soon to Forget

Daily Times, Brooklyn, N. Y.

THE President had a reception he is not likely to forget very soon, and incidentally it may be said that he is equally unlikely to listen with patience to those fastidious citizens who complain of the appeals that are made to them, especially in this Christmas season, for such small donations as make possible such relief as this mission extends to those whom no one else cares to relieve. There is nothing of the snob or the Pharisee in the make-up of President Taft; he is a plain, hearty, genial American, who is willing to be on the friendliest possible terms with all of his fellows who have anything of manhood in them, no matter if, as he said last night, they may be down on their luck.

Well Within His Presidential Duties

Evening Mail, New York City

Until Mr. Taft spoke at the Bowery Mission last night no American President, we believe, had ever addressed the "down-and-outs." Coxey and Frye and Kelley led so-called "armies" of them across the country in the soup-kitchen days of 1894; but they obtained no audience with Grover Cleveland, and Coxey was taken into custody for not observing the "keep off the grass" signs at Washington. Candidates for office—this a very recent fashion—have addressed meetings of street characters in the small hours of the night. But last night's was the first heart-to-heart talk between the official embodying the national sovereignty and the workless American. He frankly admitted a mixture of motives in coming down to the Bowery. "I don't know much about the Bowery," he said, "and I have always had considerable curiosity about it." As head of the Red Cross Society, he knew Dr. Louis Klopsch and his effective influence for good, and knowing also his relation to the Bowery Mission he had made the visit, realizing "that the best part of the Bowery must be where Dr. Klopsch and the Bowery come together." The President's manifested concern for their welfare is more than an outpouring of his native kindliness; it is well within his duties as a citizen and as our chief magistrate.

"The Big Fellow" in the Bowery

New York Morning Telegraph

Big Bill fared much better in the Bowery than in Carnegie Hall. In the latter place he was rushed by ill-mannered hand-shakers, and had the narrowest escape of his life from a painful, if not disastrous, fall from the stage. At the Bowery Mission they didn't do anything worse than the utterance of a deal of Bowery breath, and that was all in the way of welcome. It was thus borne in upon the Big Fellow, what every New Yorker knows, that the Bowery, as a slum, is an exploded superstition, as commonplace and prosy as Fifth Avenue on a rainy Sunday.

A Remarkable Precedent

Columbus, O., News

President Taft's recent visit to the Bowery Mission was an incident unique in the history of that noted thoroughfare. He was the first President of the United States who ever officially visited the Bowery. Mr. Taft's excursion into the East Side was a proper recognition of one of the greatest religious works in the city—the Bowery Mission, where "crooked men are made straight."

It is almost impossible to compute the good which has been done by this Mission, the number of men, down and out, who have been braced up and given a fresh start, or the number who have been saved from despair and death. It is one of the many humanitarian enterprises undertaken and carried forward by that remarkable paper, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and its remarkable proprietor, Dr. Louis Klopsch.

Eliminates Rancor from the Class Struggle

New York Daily People

There, in the presence of five hundred men, all of them willing, anxious, able to work, but condemned to idleness by a social system that bars the wage slave from the opportunity to exercise his labor-power unless some employer can whack profit out of him—there, facing such a sight, stood the chief representative of capitalism—and, did what? He did, unconscious though the deed was, contribute his share to eliminate rancor from the class struggle in the only way that rancor can be eliminated, to wit, by exemplifying the utter lack of intellect on the part of the ruling class regarding the social question, hence the utter futility of looking to its representatives for help.

It should not be doubted that President Taft felt sick at heart at the sight of the human waifs crowded before him, and that he spoke sincerely when he told them: "I assure you that your fellow-citizens and more fortunate fellows aren't the greedy and oppressive persons some would make them out to be, but more than ever are their hearts open to help the suffering, and the desire to do so is growing every day." A clearer picture of helplessness before the social problem can with difficulty be conceived.

Man to Man

Denver, Colo., Post

There was a something friendly, a touch of unaffected democracy, in that visit made by President Taft to the Bowery Mission. He went neither to patronize nor to dispense commonplace platitudes. He talked to the inmates of the Mission as a prosperous, plain man, addressing plain men smitten by penury; but he indicated the uncertain character of personal prosperity in a republic, and suggested that courage, even on an empty stomach, was a sound American quality that might, by the hazard of the unexpected, switch the poorest man into affluence. The color of youth has not yet departed from his imagination; and you figure him as a man with the heart of a boy as he took that drive in the storm to the Bowery Mission, to leave there the memory of a plain man's cheering words. Clearly the episode was a case not of the gift but the giving.

Bridging the Chasm Between Rich and Poor

Standard Union, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The thing which Mr. Taft attempted, and doubtless partly accomplished, was the breaking up of the belief on the part of the very poor that there is a gulch which separates them from those in more fortunate circumstances. The eradication of such an opinion is important. The moment a sufficiently large portion of the people obtain the notion that the rich and powerful care nothing for the unemployed and poverty-stricken, that they live in a different world, that they have no sympathy for those without a dollar, and are unwilling to lend a helping hand, that moment a positive danger arises. President Taft's presence in the Bowery and his words must carry some conviction that the bond of fellowship extends from the White House or the palace of the millionaire to the ten-cent lodging houses.

How the Contrast Struck Him

Providence, R. I., News

President Taft always has been the ward of good fortune, and while he has deserved to so be and has rendered very valuable services to his country in many ways, he must have thought hard of the difference between his life and that of the unfortunate men about him. In reminding them of the more general inclination nowadays to help those who have been crushed by fortune, either through their own carelessness, some lack of grit, or other cause for which they were perhaps not wholly responsible, he must have kindled the fires of hope anew in some breasts.

Few Public Men Could Do It

Buffalo, N. Y., Commercial

President Taft is a man of wide sympathies and so obviously genuine in his expression of them that no one has ever suspected him of insincerity. Few public men could go down to address a crowd of waifs, strays and human derelicts on the Bowery and not strike one false note. As head of the Red Cross Society, he knew Dr. Louis Klopsch and his effective influence for good. He made the visit realizing "that the best part of the Bowery must be where Dr. Klopsch and the Bowery come together."

The Bigness of His Heart

Kansas City, Kas., Gazette-Globe

President Taft did not go to the Bowery Mission "from the seat of the mighty to the bottom pit of despair" to make a parade. He did it out of the bigness of his heart, as he had done in Manila, to cheer those who are down in the world and need the encouragement of a hopeful word.

Calls It a "Thankless Task"

Pittsburg, Pa., Sun

President Taft in his time has been called upon to undertake thankless tasks, and to make speeches under circumstances that were anything but inspiring, but we doubt if he ever came to a place where he faced a more thankless task, or found himself at greater loss for words that would ring true, than he did the other night when he rose to address the flotsam and jetsam of New York gathered in a Bowery mission. What could he say? What could any one say? The President did the best he could, but at best it must have sounded queerly in the ears of the human derelicts before him.

The Real Bowery Yell

Philadelphia Inquirer

Bully for the President! He attended a gathering of denizens of the slums at the Bowery Mission, 'way down town, hearing the real Bowery yell for the first time and making what was, perhaps, the biggest hit that any President has ever made among the lowly.

The "Best Thing" He Has Done

St. Louis, Mo., Dispatch

President Taft's visit to the Bowery Mission in New York, and his address to the unemployed and homeless men he met there, may be accounted among the best things he has done since he attained the Presidency. The visit and the speech can hardly have failed to carry not only a new hope, but a helpful energy, to the heart and the will of some of the forlorn men in his audience, and as a consequence the results may be beneficial beyond all calculation.

"You Done Us a Heap of Good"

Saginaw, Mich., Courier-Herald

This excursion of one of the busiest men in the world down to the seat of vice, immorality and poverty in the New York Bowery reflects another side of Mr.. Taft's character. It needs no explaining how the Bowery tramp called after the President: "Bill, you done us a heap of good." The personality of the man had revived the flickering spark of manhood and hope that their ill-fed, ill-cared-for bodies contained, and made them realize that in America there is a chance for all men.

Taft's View Better Than the Pessimistic

Boston Post

It is to be hoped that the unemployed at the Bowery Mission in New York took President Taft's call on them the other evening in the right spirit. It is not an unmixed solace for men down on their luck to see at close range a President of the United States, very much up on his. Yet it may be an inspiration to renewed activity and hope. Mr. Taft told them that as "earnest Americans" they still had a chance. That was much better than the "bottom of the pit of despair" phrase handed them by the superintendent of the Mission himself.

Harvest Time in Samaria

A LITTLE TOUR AROUND SAMARIA

By Professor M. P. YOUNG

*Assiut, Egypt **

MOST travelers enter Samaria from Judea. Halves of the same mountain they are, yet how different in disposition and in history! Samaria is as open and fair as Judea is secluded and austere; and the life history of each is in full accord with what nature seems to have predestined.

To the prophets, Samaria is the older sister, standing nearer to the world and taking precedence alike in good and evil. The more forward to attract, the more quick to develop, she was always less able to retain. The patriarchs came first to Shechem, but later chose their homes about Hebron. The earliest seats of Israel's worship and the earliest rallies of her patriotism were upon Mount Ephraim; but both church and state ultimately centred in Jerusalem. After the disruption of the kingdom, the first prophets and heroes sprang up in the richer life of northern Israel; but the splendor and endurance of prophecy and kingship remained with Judea. And so, though we owe to Samaria some of the most brilliant flashes of Israel's patriotic life, the bulk of her history is full of scorn—scorn for her traffic with foreigners, for her luxury and her tolerance of many idols. Pride, "fulness of bread," and prosperous ease, then rottenness and swift ruin, are the chief notes of prophecy concerning her. Today, while pilgrims throng on either hand to Judea and to Galilee, none seek Samaria save for one tiny spot of her surface, and this is but the scene of a wayside saying by Him who journeyed in this land as a casual passenger.

But if hardly holy land—if hardly even national and—there is no region of Syria more interesting and romantic. The traveler, entering from Judea, is refreshed by a far fairer landscape. When he reaches the vale of Shechem, he finds himself at the true physical centre of Palestine, from which the features of the whole country radiate and group themselves. Historical memories, too, cluster about the paths of Samaria more lavishly than even those fountains which render her such a contrast to Judea—the altars at Shechem and Shiloh, the fields around Dothan, the palm tree of Deborah, the wine-press of Ophrah, Carmel and Gilboa, the vineyards of Naboth, Elisha passing to and fro, Jehu's furious driving, and a dozen other important events.

On the Highways of Samaria

The openness of Samaria is one of her most prominent features and tells most in her history. Few invaders were successfully resisted. It is a singular fact that we have no account of the invasion by Israel. In the battles of her history that are recorded the chariot is always mentioned, and all the long drives of the Old Testament are within her borders. It was in Samaria that we have recorded the race of Ahab against the storm, the furious drive of Jehu, and the long drive of Naaman from Damascus. Contrasted with this, we have only two meagre references to chariot driving in Judea—in the one case the chariot carried a corpse, and in the other it bore a dying man.

The most prominent characteristic of Samaria is her central and dominant position. Nothing comes with greater surprise upon the visitor to Palestine than to discover that, with all her advantages of defense, Jerusalem lies on a barren and awkward site, and that both natural and historical precedence have to be given, not to Mount Zion and the City of David, but to Mounts Ebal and Gerizim, with Shechem between them. As seen from the regions across Jordan, she occupies the topmost point of that long ridge which runs through Palestine, and from which valleys lead off into all parts of the kingdom. Joppa, the principal seaport, stands three miles nearer than to Jerusalem; Cæsarea is but thirty miles away, the rich plains of Esdraelon but eighteen. From Samaria spring the only great roads that lead to the regions east of Jordan.

It is therefore natural that the story of the patriarchs brings both Abraham and Jacob, on their entrance to the Promised Land, at once to Shechem, and that the book of Deuteronomy selects Ebal and Gerizim as the scene of a great inaugural service by all Israel on taking possession of the country. This place was selected by one whose ruling principle was the centralization of Israel's worship in one sanctuary. On account of this strategic and commanding position we find Samaria closely connected in her history with the tribes east of Jordan, and with Carmel on the west. Both Abraham and Jacob came from the east to Shechem. Manasseh was settled on both sides of the river; Ephraim gave its name not only to the western mountains, but also to a wood on the eastern side; Elijah, the prophet of Samaria, was from Tishbeh in Gilead, and Elisha crossed Jordan to anoint Jehu. In a similar manner we find the prophet of

THE WORKINGS OF PROVIDENCE

"And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God."

WE have here Paul's epitome of Providence, his summing up of human life and experience under the superintending hand of God. Had he been a materialist, he would have left God out of the question, and said, "You are a part of a great, merciless machine, wound up by chance and controlled by circumstances, and your sufferings are due to the inexorable movements of fate, against which you struggle in vain." Had he been a Stoic philosopher, he would not have said, "All things work together for good," but, "You are in the hands of an awful system, of which evil is an inevitable part," and his exhortation would have been, "Resist the evil with the bold front of an unflinching spirit." Had he been an Epicurean, he would have said, "Chance has projected evil into the world. Fight chance the only way in which you can, by drowning all your cares in a sea of sensual pleasure." But Paul was neither a materialist, nor a Stoic, nor an Epicurean, but a Christian philosopher. He believed that God's plans are eternal, that human suffering is a part of the necessary discipline of life, that eternity alone is the final interpretation of time, and that "all things work together for good to them that love God."

Under Divine Protection

Note the boldness of this Pauline declaration: "All things work together for good." Had Paul known nothing of the shocks and storms of life, had his career been one of uninterrupted inspiration and unabated triumph, then it might be urged that the audacity of the proposition is evidence of ignorance of the facts involved. But Paul's life was interwoven of sunshine and shadows; in fact, he knew much more of the storms of life than of its calms. The vision of the past was ever before him: the prisons through which he had passed, the uproar at Ephesus, the earthquake at Philippi, violence at Jerusalem, trials with the churches, chains at Cæsarea, shipwrecks and stripes, while before him passed scenes of anguish which were far beyond his power to describe; and yet, towering above these dark and painful memories, we hear him exclaim, "All things work together for good to them that love God." He thus compresses the universe into this one little word of three letters, all!

Glorious truth! We are not alone in life's vicissitudes! God's eye is upon us, and his arms encircle us. We are not helpless, for the infinite Deliverer is ever present, even when we are unconscious of his presence, inspiring with wisdom, imparting strength and enabling us to come off more than conquerors over all the trials and difficulties of life, the toils and sufferings, defeats and crosses, gains and losses; all things seen and unseen, near and remote, dark and bright, good and evil, are harnessed as swift steeds to the chariot of the divine purpose, and nothing can permanently obstruct its progress.

Harmony and Co-operation

Again, let us notice the law of this Providential process: "All things work together." And what is this but the law of co-operation? Nothing in the universe below the being of God is complete within itself. Everything leans upon and helps to bear up everything beyond, below, above, and around itself. The dewdrop works with the sunbeam, the seed with the clay, the bee with the flower; the valley with the mountain, the rivulet with the river, and the river with the ocean; the heavens lean upon the earth, and the earth reflects the splendor of the heavens from its laughing valleys, its snow-crowned mountains and its ever-changing sea. There is no isolation anywhere. The faintest trace of matter, the most delicate, microscopic cell has its place in the universal creation, and performs its function, not only for itself, but in behalf of all. The gases that compose the air we breathe work together with life-giving and health-sustaining power; eliminate the oxygen, and this old world would be shrouded in death; the seasons work together, spring and summer, fall and winter, in a grand procession of beauty, order and fruitfulness.

Light is beautiful, but light cannot form the exquisite picture. Shadows must lie there, a dark background upon which the light can pencil its beauty. The sunshine and shadow must work together. Why, God cannot paint a rainbow until he has unbraided a beam of light into its seven prismatic hues, to borrow from and lend to each other entrancing loveliness. So also the Lord knows how to blend bright and dark things in human life, so as to produce the most happy, holy and heavenly character. Oh, my friend, you can afford to be patient and trustful, for God is moulding you to a pattern brighter than angelic being, even according to the image of his Son. The blow of the hammer and the incision of the chisel may be painful, but these are necessary to the removal of imperfections and to the revelation of the angel that is lurking in the hiding places of your being. God is the great, infinite Sculptor, and you may depend upon it he will not overlook the roughness, nor fail to smooth down the rebellious grain!

All things work together. The lightning in its livid rage only purifies the atmosphere; the thunderbolt that prostrates the giant oak, beneath which many found shelter, lets the sun shine upon a spot of earth that had hitherto been full of darkness; the cloud that overspreads the sky is frequently but the shadow of an approaching blessing. Some flowers must be trampled upon before their fragrance is detected, and it is likewise true that human hearts must be broken before their wealth of sympathy and love becomes productive.

Strength and Love Through Suffering

Then, again, we should remember that things are not always as they appear. The sun appears to rise and set, but science places it in the centre of a family of worlds; the stars appear to rove about without restraint, but they, too, are fixed centres, fastened to their points in space. The rainbow appears to be a dense and permanent arch of beauty, reared against the solid sky, but philosophy etherealizes both the bow and the sky. And so in human experience, we are deceived by appearances. It seemed a cruel fate that tore Joseph from his father's arms and sold him into slavery; but God lifted Joseph from a pit to a throne and made him lord over all Egypt. "All these things are against me," exclaimed Jacob, when the outrayings of Providence were no longer discernible; but at that very moment the horses and chariots were on their way to carry him down into the land of plenty. It seemed a great calamity that turned aside a professor of natural science from his self-appointed way, but Scotland gained through that the ministry of Thomas Chalmers.

A Divine Hand at the Helm

It is hardly possible for us to appreciate the force of the original verb, "work together." The thought is that there is a beneficent power grasping, subordinating, overruling and directing all things for the largest measure of good. True, this good may not always be apparent, but it is none the less real. We cannot measure the movements of Providence by the swift beating of our little timepieces. God's clock strikes once in a thousand years. It is not a question of calendar, but of character. The thought of the text involves the largest good. This is the goal of the divine intent. God is not absorbed in gratifying our temporary whims. He will not condescend to our petty wants, as the indulgent parent who pampers the spoiled child by granting the sweetmeats for which it cries. God's medicine is not always sweet. It is sometimes bitter-sweet, but if it is necessary to our highest good he will not withhold it. The statement of the text employs a singular verb with a plural noun, denoting t harmonious workings of Providence, and we m rest assured that this power is working in our l half every moment. Though we deny it and res it, the process continues, silently and savingly, su ordinating all things to our final good, yes, a making even the stumbling-blocks of life steps ward the throne.

Oh, what comfort there is in this thought! The can be no wreck, for God's hand is at the helm; the can be no calamity, for his wisdom and power ove rule for good all that comes to me. The promise in the present tense, not that in some æon of et nity these things shall result in good, but here a now, amid the changing scenes of life, poised as are in a probation bounded by two eternities, it the believer's privilege to look through and beyo all secondary causes and agencies to trace the fo prints of God as upon the billows moving forwa to the accomplishment of his beneficent purpos and to know that "all things work together for go to them that love God."

"God Thinks of Me"

It is this thought that gives me my position in t universe. If God thinks of me, loves me, a watches over me, it is because I am a part of h plan. I may be but a rough pebble, yet I have n place in the great universal mosaic. I am essenti to the unity and perfection of the whole. I am he but for a day. I am not a tenant, but a touri Eternity is my race course, and the universe is n home. All things are in league with me; yea, th are my servants, "working together for good "Therefore I shall not be afraid for the terror l night, nor for the arrow that flieth by day, nor for t pestilence that walketh in darkness, nor for the d struction that wasteth at noonday. A thousa shall fall at my side, and ten thousand at my rig hand; but it shall not come nigh me." Yea, I sha not tremble when death knocks at the door, for l comes as the messenger of God, bringing my pas port to yonder world out of sight, still working f my eternal good.

Standing thus, strong and secure, the future flam with light, the clouds roll back, the eternal da draws nigh, and although dark questions arou me rise and the path is not always plain before m eyes, faith brings the distant near and enables n to sing with John Burroughs:

Serene, I fold my hands and wait,
Nor care for wind or tide or sea;
I rave no more 'gainst time and fate,
For lo! my own shall come to me.

The stars come nightly to the sky,
The tidal wave unto the sea;
Nor time nor space nor deep nor high
Can keep my own away from me.

Good Resolutions

SOME persons hesitate to make resolutions fo fear they will not keep them. They will no promise, lest they fail of performance. There little reason in such an attitude, for every life making promises all the time. A life without prom ise of some sort is a contradiction of terms. Wha the promise is need not be proclaimed by the lip although so to proclaim it may often be the best o helps toward its fulfilment. We are always "i honor bound" to some course of action or other. W have given hostages to the future, though we ma never have signed a pledge or taken an oath. Th hostage is our past reputation and our present cha acter. It may be forsaken if we will, but if it b worthy, to forsake it is faithless indeed. Men nee not to make fewer promises, but they need to b more careful that all their promises be wort keeping. L. CHILD LABOR DAY—By Rev. J. M. FARRAR, D.D.*

LAMENTATIONS is a long word. But its length you need not fear. You can put it in a tear. It means sorrow, crying out for help. Jeremiah is called the weeping prophet. His tears, I think, fell into his ink. With this tear-ink he wrote the sad look of a child into a book, and called it Lamentations. He tells us that cruel taskmasters made little children carry heavy burdens of wood. Bundles so heavy and large that the children fell under them. These children were made to work, work, work. Day by day it was all work, and no play. They had no music, and their dance was turned to mourning. Their, "Oh, I am so glad!" was changed to, "Oh, I am so sad!"

BUT this, you say, was a long, long, long time ago. Why should we have any dread about those who are dead? But you juniors must not forget that a long, long, long time ago is like Halley's comet: it comes back again after a long, long, long time away. Thousands of children are falling under their burdens to-day. Falling and dying, and there are only a few who are crying.

THIS is "Child Labor Day," and every minister in New York is asked to write his Lamentations for the children. You did not know there were any slave children in America? There are more than 2,000,000 children to-day who are slaves to hard work. Just think—of these 790,623 are little tots! Let us see if we can get a picture in our brain of 2,000,000 children at hard work, with little pay and no play. If we had all these children in Brooklyn at one time, where would we put them? There are more than 500 acres in our Prospect Park. If the 2,000,000 children would stand close together, we could put them all in the park. But they must sleep standing up, as there would not be room for them to lie down. The police would soon be after them—"Move on, move on, no place for you here." Suppose they came out of the park like an army, with twenty-five in each company. There would be 80,000 companies. I will ask the police to let them march past the church, so that you can all see them. Here they come in companies, with ten feet between each company. March, march, march; tramp, tramp, tramp! They are slave children, and we will give them long marches. Push them, drive them, make them march twenty-five miles a day. After a long time watching them pass the church, a telegram will tell us that the first company is marching past West Point. March, march, march, on, on, on, past the church. Another telegram states that the first company is passing the Capitol at Albany. On, on they march, and as the last company passes the church a long-distance telephone message says the first company is marching into Troy, nearly 152 miles from New York. All these are children in our country working like little slaves. It makes us sad, it makes me mad. Sad, it is too bad!

IF you stay to see them all march by, you will miss your dinner, and Sunday School, and evening service. If you watch them all pass, you will be marked absent from school on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. You can see the first companies passing to-day, and when you are coming to prayer meeting on Friday night you will see the last company going by. Is it not awful that such a sad story must be written in "tear ink," with the pen of 1910? The story of overworked children! Child slaves, with no outlook but their graves!

A PROFESSOR of Columbia University says he talked with a man who lives in Brooklyn about how little children work in this Brooklyn man's Texas cotton fields. He asked him how early the children began to work. His answer was, "At six, and younger." This Brooklyn-Texas man described the way a bag is slung about the neck of a child, who drags it on the ground, so that he can pick cotton with both hands. The professor asked how big the boy had to be before he was strong enough to drag the bag. The answer was, "We make the bag to fit the boy." We believe they should make the boy to fit the bag. They should take good care of the boy's body, and good care of his mind, and good care of his soul. Make him big and strong, and able to carry the bag that need not drag. I am sure my juniors will pray for and work for the National Child Labor Committee, who are trying to free these child slaves.

WHILE the army of children is marching past I will tell you a story of one little child, not able to march. He was working in a mine, and a heavy piece of wood he was helping to carry fell on him and broke his back. "He fell under the wood." For many months he was in the hospital. When he was strong enough to go out, a nurse took him to church. It was Child Labor Day, and an offering was taken for the society. When a tall man passed the collection plate the little cripple said, "Hold it lower, please." With tears in each word he said, "Hold it lower, lower; low enough for me to stand in it. I want to give myself for this work."

His Inspirational Message

reference to the contrast which his own circumstances presented, his obvious wish that some helpful stimulus might go out from him to his hearers, gave those keen discriminators between the true and the false a clear sight of the man behind the title. It was a real service which the President rendered in the right spirit—real because the spirit was right.

"One Touch of Nature"

Jersey City, N. J., Journal

It was no sermon President Taft delivered—just a plain talk, glowing with human sympathy. That he touched the hearts of the unfortunates in the Mission was evidenced by the ringing cheers they gave him. When he said "Good night, boys," at the close of his talk, many of the grizzled veterans of the road gave vent to their feelings in muffled sobs. What's that the poet says about one touch of nature making the whole world kin?

"That Was a Man"

St. Louis, Mo., Times

President Taft has so far given no more unmistakable evidence of his kindliness and wisdom than he did yesterday when he addressed the men of the Bowery Mission. But that was a man with a big brain and a good heart who went into the byways yesterday and reminded his brothers that they were, indeed, his brothers.

An Inspirational Speech

Baltimore, Md., Star

It was quite an inspirational speech that the President delivered on the Bowery, after his Carnegie Hall address, and the reception of his remarks can have left no doubt in his mind concerning the properly receptive attitude of those who sat before him. He talked to his audience as to men who were up against hard luck for fair, and assured them that the world was not so cold and indifferent to them as they might infer. He told them that this is a land of opportunity for them, if only they will get firmly on their feet and earnestly endeavor to make it so.

Never Did a Better Hour's Work

New York World

President Taft never did a better hour's work than when, hoarse with a heavy cold, he braved the deluge of Monday night to speak to the men in the Bowery Mission. It is not a thing that any man who heard him is going to forget, nor does its cheery message end with the audience that heard it or the famous street that yesterday could talk of so little else.

An Earnest Appeal for a Worthy Cause

THE Bowery Mission, "the place where God makes crooked men straight," would welcome additional contributions toward the great work carried on by godly men and women at the "Gospel Lighthouse."

Clothing for the naked, shelter for the homeless and bread for the hungry are the requirements.

Which of these two verses of Holy Scripture would you prefer to hear?

Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, but shall not be heard: or,

Come, ye blessed of my Father. . . . I was hungry and ye fed me, naked and ye clothed me, sick and ye ministered unto me. . . . Inasmuch as ye did it, etc.

If you can send a contribution for the Bowery Mission, do so; it will come in very opportunely. Address

THE YEAR'S SPLENDID BENEFACTIONS

Over $140,000,000 Given to Education, Benevolence, Missions, Churches, and Various Worthy Causes

Jacob Schiff

Charles M. Pratt

Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Sr.

James A. Patten

George T. Oliver

ALL previous records in gifts for benevolence, philanthropy and charity were eclipsed in 1909. It was a year of truly magnificent giving, the grand total amounting to $141,250,000, which is over $40,000,000 in excess of any previous year. Some of the greatest individual gifts have already been recorded in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at the time they were announced, but the total aggregation of public benefactions for the twelve-month is so phenomenal as to demand more extended notice.

Notable Gifts to Education

The cause of education is one that has proved most worthy in the eyes of many of these lavish donors, for it has received $54,766,603, or somewhat over a third of the whole. Chief among the gifts of this class were the $10,000,000 from Mr. John D. Rockefeller to the General Education Board, to bring its endowment up to the $50,000,000 mark. Mr. Rockefeller also gave Chicago University $1,177,000. The late millionaire John S. Kennedy bequeathed to Columbia College $2,500,000, to Roberts College, Constantinople, $1,500,000, to the Presbyterian Board for educational purposes $1,500,000, and to other educational institutions $1,375,000. Mr. Carnegie gave to the Pittsburg School of Applied Science $2,000,000, and $1,840,000 to other institutions of learning. Mrs. Sage bestowed $250,000 on schools and colleges. The late Senator Vilas, of Wisconsin, bequeathed $2,000,000 to Wisconsin University; Mrs. Newcomb, of Louisiana, bequeathed $1,500,000 to the Newcomb Memorial School, New Orleans, having already given $1,000,000 during her lifetime; Dr. D. K. Pearson, whose great gifts to education and religion have made his name known throughout the nation, gave $100,000 to Chicago Theological Seminary, $25,000 to Piedmont College, and $1,000,000, divided in smaller amounts, to several other institutions. Charles M. Pratt, the oil magnate, added $1,700,000 to the endowment of Pratt Institute, Brooklyn; Miss Helen Gould gave $150,000 to the Girls' College at Constantinople; Benjamin N. Duke supplemented his earlier gifts to Trinity College, North Carolina, by a new donation of $750,000; George T. Oliver, of Pittsburg, gave $500,000 to provide a pension fund for the public school teachers of that city, and Levi I. Shoemaker gave $500,000 to Yale University. These are among the largest of many gifts for education.

Many Millions for Benevolence

In the domain of benevolence the most notable gifts were these: $1,000,000 from an anonymous donor to establish a Home for the Aged in New York State; $5,000,000 bequeathed by Mrs. Christopher Magee to endow a hospital for women in Pittsburg; $2,500,000 bequeathed by John S. Kennedy to the Presbyterian Hospital, New York; $1,500,000 from the same donor to the United Charities, and $750,000 to the Charity Organization of New York; Mrs. Sarah Todd, of Pennsylvania, gave $750,000 to endow a Home for Aged Women in Carlisle, Pa.; John D. Rockefeller gave $150,000 to the "Sea Breeze Home," New York; Mrs. Sage gave $200,000 for a Home for the Relief of Aged Women, and $180,000 to found an Industrial Home on Long Island, N. Y.; W. K. Vanderbilt gave $500,000 for a Home for Cripples at Chautauqua, N. Y.; Elizabeth F. Noble, of Mansfield, Mass., bequeathed $500,000 to humane and anti-vivisection societies; Charles M. Schwab gave property valued at $500,000 for a Foundling Asylum on Staten Island, and Mrs. Sarah Morris, of Chicago, gave $400,000 for a Children's Hospital in that city. Thomas Murdoch, merchant, of Chicago, bequeathed between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000 to a number of deserving religious, educational and charitable institutions.

Below are the leading benefactors of the year. The entire list would fill many columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

To Missions and Churches

There were gifts aggregating over $1,000,000 for the protection of animals, and for the promotion of humanitarian work among the dumb creatures. The bequests and gifts to missions reached a total of $12,500,000, of which the Presbyterian Church received $5,750,000, American Bible Society nearly $1,000,000, the Methodist Church $2,000,000, Baptist Church $1,500,000, and others in proportion. For church work also the benefactions were unusually liberal, the special gifts for this purpose amounting to nearly $9,500,000. This great sum represents gifts to building funds, church extension funds, endowments, etc.

Among the multitude of charitable institutions the year was one of large financial realization, and gifts running from the hundreds well up in the thousands were numerous, so that many of these deserving organizations begin the new year on a better footing than ever before. Altogether, the year has been rich in financial benefits for good works of many kinds. The possessors of wealth are showing in many ways, and in increasing numbers, that they realize that riches are a trusteeship, not an absolute ownership, and that, properly used, they may be made to redound to the glory of God and the benefit of mankind.

MANY STATES SWEPT BY STORM

A Scene on West Street, Near the Docks, New York City

The Shovelmen Clearing Madison Square, New York

WITHOUT the slightest intimation of what was to come, Christmas Day broke fair and clear along the Atlantic Coast, from Virgia to Maine. In the reach from Connecticut sth there had been but little snow, and another "een Christmas" was the expression passed from nuth to mouth as holiday seekers started out to ps the day with friends or relatives, in the countor in distant towns, with no thought that nature wld cover the ground with such a snowy mantle tlt trains would be buried in the drifts and their Cristmas calls would be prolonged to holiday visits.

Every one who happened to be a few years older tm the person he was talking to would tell, as one lo over from a past age, of the way the snow used tcome the last of November, and how Christmas Ly was ushered in to the musical sound of the sighbells. Then came the biggest storm in twenty yrs, and the "green Christmas" story was put a ay until people forget what a time they had gettig home and how cold they were in the trains sled from Massachusetts to Washington.

A little before noon a few white flakes came gently dn from a gray sky. Gradually the flurry develod into a heavy snow storm. The wind rose, and wpped it into little hillocks, which soon became big os, and drifted it over the car tracks and over the fces, and all who could made themselves snug for a ad night. It snowed heavily until well into the nt day, when thousands of men were put to work inthe cities to dig out the streets and also the streetcs, which had been unable to move and had been tl only shelter, in many places, for the half-starved psengers who had to stay in electrics as their oy refuge. Relief expeditions were sent out to fil the trains which were reported to have started, b had not reached their destinations. The storm, wch beat in upon the coast, strewed it with wrecks, a many a ship which sailed proudly out of port a d or two previously will shortly be posted at t Chambers of Commerce as missing.

Massachusetts suffered severely. Nearly every ship in the harbor of Gloucester, the famous old fishing port, sustained some damage, while grave fears were felt for the vessels on the far-off fishing banks, which might never again see the white spume dash over Norman's Woe. High waves beat over the sea-wall at Salem, and people in the exposed part of the city were ready to leave for points of safety if the sea rose much higher. Beautiful Nahant, on its peninsula, found itself an island, for the water covered the neck which reached to the mainland. One of the worst disasters was at Chelsea. This city was nearly burned to the ground some time ago. Now it has too much water. The tidal wave, which came with the storm, beat over the sea-wall, flooding a large district to the height of the second story windows and making twelve hundred people homeless. Volunteers secured rowboats and took the marooned occupants out of the upper stories and rowed them to places of safety. There was much suffering from the bitter cold. Several people were unable to escape and were drowned. The town of Hull was much exposed, and, according to the latest dispatches, it is not all there, as incoming steamers report that cottages from the shore are drifting about the bay, some nearly whole. The shore is strewn with broken masts and shattered hulks, silent witnesses of the gale's fury.

New York was covered with a heavy blanket of snow. The suburban trains were soon out of commission. Some of those on Long Island were in the drifts for twenty-four hours, and the men made their way to near-by farmhouses and purchased food. Some attempted to bring back coffee, but after the bearer had disappeared several times in the depths of the drift he was glad to get to the car with the empty pail and the sandwiches. Two trains for Bath Beach were snowed in. They were crowded with pleasure-seekers, who were compelled to spend nearly a whole day as prisoners, with their own homes almost in view. One Coney Island car was missing twelve hours, and the people who stood up all night in it will probably date all events in their existence hereafter from Christmas night in a snowbank.

Twelve thousand men and two thousand trucks were put at work in New York City to clear away the snow, but it was several days before all the streets were clear, as the main thoroughfares were first dug out by the shovelmen. Trucks were hired in New Jersey to help carry the snow to the water front.

South of Philadelphia the storm raged furiously, and no trains came up from Washington. Two thousand people camped in the station at the Capital, and the President could not leave the city to meet an engagement in New York. Our cover picture illustrates an incident on the Pennsylvania Railroad, where a train is being dug out of a drift, while the farmers bring food for a proper consideration. No; the climate has not changed, and we can still look for old-fashioned storms at holiday time.

The Great Storm

IN many States the winter is proving a severe one, and there is much suffering among the poor in consequence. In some sections the snowfall has been the heaviest known since the great blizzard of 1888. Traffic has been seriously impeded, trains being stalled on many roads. The storm's toll of death and devastation has been a heavy one. It is well for those of us who are sheltered in comfortable homes, and enjoy domestic blessings regardless of winter's icy reign, to remember the poor at this arctic season. In every locality where the severity of the winter has been pronounced there are opportunities for kindly deeds and little acts of helpfulness, the doing of which ought to be a pleasure as well as a sacred duty. In our great cities, East and West, the storm has had full sway, and the suffering in many homes of poverty is keen and pitiful. Winter is a cruelly hard time for the poor. The Bread Line at the Bowery Mission is a reliable thermometer of the state of the indigent, and it is now crowded nightly beyond all precedent. These men and lads come from well-nigh every State, and many of them have been reared in comfortable homes; but now, as waifs and strays, they are grateful for the warm coffee and the rolls that give them nourishment and courage to keep up their quest for employment. Don't forget the Bread Line, and don't overlook the needy in your own neighborhood. You will sleep the sounder and enjoy life the better all through this winter, when you honestly feel that you have done what you could for those less fortunate than yourself.

The Press on Mr. Taft's Bowery Visit

THAT President Taft, in his recent address to the unemployed at the Bowery Mission, struck a popular note which has sounded far and near is made evident from the almost universal press comment upon the incident. His visit is hailed as a unique historical event, a worthy precedent and an object-lesson to other statesmen, an example well within his duties as the nation's Chief Magistrate, a noble, magnanimous act, the influence of which, both socially and politically, it would be difficult to estimate at the present time. Some of these comments appear elsewhere in this issue, but it is impossible to reproduce more than a mere fraction of the whole. They practically constitute a vote of thanks from the whole American people, which the President has fairly earned by his big-heartedness and his generous words of sympathy for an unfortunate but deserving class, who needed just such a kindly uplift as he gave them that stormy winter night, when he faced them on the Bowery Mission platform.

Following a Bad Example

FORMER President Zelaya is evidently following the bad but unprofitable example of Castro, who continued to claim that he still held office long after his country and the world was done with him. Zelaya resigned in due form, and made his way to the seashore, to embark on a Mexican warship. He had a heavy guard to prevent the populace from showering him with hard and unwelcome attentions. In a day or two he was on Mexican soil, where he issued a declaration that he was still President of Nicaragua and that Dr. Madriz only held the office temporarily.

As Zelaya made a formal resignation to the Nicaraguan Congress, it is difficult to see on what he bases his claim that he is on leave of absence. It is probable that if Madriz has a successor it will be the revolutionary general Estrada, who would make a better public official than either Madriz or Zelaya. As Mexico has given her word that she will be responsible for Zelaya's future, it is difficult to see how he could return and foment trouble in Nicaragua without involving the country of President Diaz. The United States would be warranted in taking strong action if Zelaya were allowed to return and be, as before, a disturbing factor in Central America, which is trying to settle down after almost continuous wars and usurpation of power by dictators.

It is said that Mexico fears that the United States wishes to get possession of Nicaragua, and that this country will hem her in on both sides. This is a nightmare on the part of Mexico. The United States does not want Nicaragua, but she will see that she does not break every international law and shoot Americans after a farcical trial. It is interesting to note that, as added testimony comes in, it is clear that Groce and Cannon died like heroes. Whichever party wins, all reparation possible will be demanded by our State Department.

The Mangling Mania

THOSE who believed that the crusade against the vivisectionists was a mere passing wave of feminine sentiment are finding out their mistake. Many of the best people in the country are making common cause with the movement, which proposes to put a stop to the frightful cruelties practised on the lower animals in the name of Science. For the moment, interest is centred upon the charges made against a leading New York institution, where the methods of dealing with living animals have been exposed by a former employee in a way that has shocked the public. In all likelihood, these revelations—which unmask cruelties so hideous as to be almost incredible—will lead to a thorough investigation of the system pursued in vivisection operations there and elsewhere. Indulgence in the mangling mania, as modern vivisection may well be denominated, is a sort of pseudo-scientific craze, on which we will doubtless look back with shame as civilization advances. It is very questionable whether any one should have the right to torture animals under the plea of scientific necessity. That right, once granted, is capable of the grossest abuse, as the recent disclosures have shown. There is no law, human or divine, which confers on man the right to torture, maim, mangle, or slay indiscriminately the dependent creatures over which God gave him a dominion that was meant to be beneficent and humane, but which some have interpreted to imply any degree of brutality they choose. What is needed now is not a law to impede proper scientific research, but to restrict and punish scientific savagery, no matter whether the offender be influential or unimportant. Such a law will have the cordial support of every humane and right thinking person.

One-Talented People

WE are not all gifted with many talents. We can imagine one who is in poverty and has little influence and few friends, saying, "If I have any talent, it is at most but one"; that is to say, if you have it in your power to do any good at all, it is the least in the world. But how do you know this? Have you drawn upon your stores of mind, heart, time, opportunities to the utmost? Have you gone to the bottom of your purse? It looks very small, perhaps, and almost empty; but there may be great riches hidden in it.

A young girl with much tenderness nursed an aged relation when she was well-nigh forsaken by her kindred. At length the old lady died. She left a small amount of money to be divided among a number of heirs. She left also an old watch, the only value of which appeared to be as a keepsake, for it had been worn for many years by the owner and had her likeness in it. This watch was to be given to whichever one of the heirs might choose to take it instead of five hundred dollars of the money distributed. One after another examined it and turned away indifferent. They cared nothing for the picture of the old lady, and saw no value in the worn-out watch. But the warm-hearted girl, who had been nurse of her who died, made the choice which the others despised. She was ridiculed for her tender-heartedness—which they called foolishness—that led her so to choose; but she had chosen for love's sake and was satisfied. What was her astonishment when, months afterward, a secret spring in the watch was accidentally touched, an unsuspected extra casing flew open, and there was discovered a wealth of diamonds!

So what seems to be your one poor little talent may have enfolded in it undreamed-of treasures. may be only a solitary virtue—fidelity, truth, pers verance, sincerity, consideration for others. matter what it is, open it, use it, try every spri of influence. Only thus can you be sure that y have found out all the Master has entrusted to yc and for which he will expect a good return.

GENERAL NOTES

—A GOLD MEDAL, in memory of the Hudson-Fulton Celebrati in New York, was lately presented to Queen Wilhelmina Holland by the Hudson-Fulton Celebration Commission.

—THE CAUSE of Zionism makes indifferent progress. In t Zionist Congress in Hamburg, held the closing week in Dece ber, a resolution calling upon well-to-do Hebrews to pled themselves to emigrate to Palestine within a few years caus an acute division of opinion. Theoretically, Zionism see attractive, but practically its fate is doubtful, for another ge eration at least.

—LEOPOLD FERDINAND, the new King of the Belgians, is n in his fiftieth year. He is a popular favorite, fond of hunti and motoring, energetic and vigorous, mentally and physical He has traveled a great deal abroad, and explored and hunt in the Congo, and it is understood that he favors very huma reforms in that country, which may ameliorate the sad con tion of the natives.

—CAPTAIN BERTRAM DICKSON, former British Consul at Va says that every year, in August, a great fete is held at t top of Ziarat, on Jebel Jude (a mountain in Mesopotam 7,000 feet high), to do homage to Noah, local tradition in cating this peak as the Ark's resting-place. The villagers ev point out the place where Noah descended, and in a near- village, Hassana, they show his traditional grave.

—NOW THAT THE Mann-Bennet bill for the suppression the "white slave" traffic is to be reported to Congress after t holiday recess, people generally will expect to see some defini legislative action in the right direction. This question is n confined to individual States; it is one with which the Fede Government must deal, and deal drastically. As we understa it, the measure before the Interstate Commerce Committee be reported to the House is probably sufficiently comprehensiv but if not entirely so, it should be made broad enough a sweeping enough for the purpose. There is no class save t criminal which can have an interest in opposing legislation th aims at the preservation of home purity, the protection youth, the stoppage of vicious immigration and the detecti and punishment of a class who have proved themselves t worst enemies of society.

—IN A PAMPHLET on "Armaments and Their Results," M Andrew Carnegie, the millionaire philanthropist, says: "La year Britain spent upon army and navy, in round number £70,000,000 ($345,000,000); Germany, £48,000,000 ($233,00 000); America, £97,000,000 ($470,000,000), £32,000,000 ($16 000,000) of this upon war pensions. This expenditure w before the day of Dreadnoughts, now costing about $12,000,0 each, say £2,250,000. The naval expenditures of nations, a hence the dangers of war, are to be much greater in the futur and the end thereof, no one can foretell."

Shirtwaist Girls' Strike

THE greatest women's strike of the nation, which has been in progress since November 3, is still unsettled. Two hundred girls, shirtaist makers in a shop in New York, undertook to ganize a union. The proprietors, learning of their tempt, laid them off, but gave as a reason that the shion in sleeves had changed and that they would ve to let some of the girls go. They believed this ory until they learned that others were hired in eir places, when they brought the matter to the tention of Local Union No. 25. This trouble ocrred last September, and would never have grown its enormous proportions had it not been for the titude of the police and courts, which the strikers garded as persecution. The Woman's Trade Union eague, and other labor organizations, in harmony ith a sympathetic press, took the side of the girls the conflict, and 30,000 women shirtwaist makers, ost of them girls around nineteen years of age, ed out of the various shops. As it was the busiest ason of the year for them, many of the manufacrers made concessions to the strikers and took em back to work. At the present time there are 000 of the girls who are still on strike. It was ought that the trouble was settled by compromise easures proposed, but at five mass-meetings held New York on the evenng of December 27 the ompromise, agreed to by e manufacturers and a lect committee of the hirtwaist Makers' Union, as rejected by the girls, ho insisted that the last aragraph did not uneuivocally recognize the xistence of the union, hich they claimed was esential. The Associated Vaist and Dress Manufacrers declare that they ill never accede to that emand. President Isaac . Hyman, of the Manufacrers' Association, said, We will not consider that emand of the strikers for moment. We insist upon e right to employ union nd non-union employees, ithout discrimination, nd from that stand we ill not budge." One of e surprising features of he contest is that some f the leading society wom-n, including Mrs. O. H. P. elmont and Miss Anne Morgan, daughter of J. ierrepont Morgan, the reat money king, have een among the most efficient supporters of the girls i maintaining their strike. Now that the conflict as been narrowed down to a fight against the manfacturers for an open shop, time will be required to ll whether they will succeed or fail. While it is dmitted that some of the manufacturers have reated their employees well, it is generally believed at in most cases the girls were working too any hours, on too small pay, in unhealthy quarrs, and that they had grievances. There is symathy, human and divine, for the poor sewing-women, ho pick their eyes out and pierce their hearts with needle in their attempt to make a living for themlves and their families, and insufficient remuneraon or ill-treatment of them is naturally resented y a just public, as well as by themselves. The rophet records the divine objection to the starvaon wages that were sometimes paid in his day in ese words:

I will be a swift witness against those that oppress the hireling his wages. (Mal. 3:5.)

Society Ladies Visiting the Shirtwaist Strikers' Headquarters, New York

umbered with the Saints

Miss Ella Mooney, of Red Hook, N. Y., died reently, leaving an estate worth about $100,000. She ad an artistic taste and skill, and in her will she ft $15,000 to the National Academy of Design, in ew York City, to aid pupils to study art in foreign ountries. She was a devout Christian, and left oney to a number of benevolences. In the will she ave a description of the kind of monument she anted erected over her grave, and indicated this pitaph to be cut in the marble: "Make her to be umbered with the saints in glory everlasting." Her ith in Christ and obedience to his commandments d her to expect a place with his followers in glory. The apostle refers to this companionship of the saints in the future life when he says:

When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. (Col. 3:4.)

A Sorrowful Holiday

Death, which seems doubly horrible at Christmas time, has been busy during the past holiday season. A husband and wife, with carriage full of toys for the children, were run down by a train and killed. A man, with his arms full of presents, fell off an elevated car fifty feet to the street and was fatally hurt. A father, loaded down with Christmas bundles, fell dead on the threshold of his home. A mother, who had made pretty little things for the Christmas tree, after the children had gone to bed at night was called away by the death messenger. A great author and his daughter had their presents ready for each other, when she was suddenly removed from him. A little boy in an Ohio town called his mother to him and said, "Mother, help me to say my little prayer; I am not going to be with you on Christmas, for I am going to die, and spend my Christmas with Jesus in heaven." A playmate, in a friendly scuffle, wounded the little fellow's scalp with his tooth, and blood poison set in, which carried him away before Christmas. The little prayer, no doubt, was the "Now I lay me down to sleep" that the mothers of most of us taught their children among the first things in life. It seems a terrible thing to have a death in the house at holiday time, and yet the advent means life and not death, and the loved ones that pass from the earth at that or any other time, through His grace are translated into the beautiful home Christ has gone to prepare. The little fellow had all there was in the Bible and Gospel and human existence when he said that to go through the gateway of death was to be with Jesus in heaven. Jesus, the child, came to destroy death and open the gateway of eternal life.

I am come that they might have life. (John 10:10.)

Lost Picking Flowers

George Venechanos, a Greek who has a bakery at 54 Cherry Street, New York, with his three-and-a-half-year-old daughter Sophia and his wife's sister took a trolley ride out to the Eagle Rock Reservation, on top of the Orange Mountains, to have lunch under the trees. Little Sophia went from bush to bush, picking huckleberries; then she gathered her hands full of daisies and brought them to her father. She went from flower to flower until her hands were full, and started back for her father; but she went in the wrong direction, and sank down tired just as dark came on. She cried and then waited for her father to come, as he always had come to her, wherever she was, when she cried. Fatigued with her sobs, she fell asleep. The father missed her after a while, and beat around through the sumac and scrub-oak, but without success. The West Orange police station sent a number of men and the neighborhood supplied still more, and the woods were carefully searched with lanterns until morning. A young farmer named Courtney, going to his work the next morning, hearing her cries, went to her and found her with face all scratched and bruised and her clothes torn. He carried her back to the hotel, where she was soon claimed by her parents, who had been almost distracted.

It might have been well for the father to have exercised a little more careful parental oversight, and thus to have saved trouble both to the child and to himself. Children are constantly straying away from the shelter of parents into the forest and night of danger. Often there are flowers of temptation so beautiful that they woo them step by step away from safety. Fortunately, there are many instrumentalities employed for searching the woods and finding the lost child. At the head of such institutions is the Great Shepherd, who leaves the ninety and nine to find his lost sheep, and who has described in his parable the joy felt at its recovery.

How think ye? If a man have a hundred sheep, and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leave the ninety and nine, and goeth into the mountains and seeketh that which is gone astray? (Matt. 18:12.)

Buddhist's Tribute to Christianity

Dr. Wu Ting Fang, the ex-Chinese Minister, before departing for his home in the Far East, made his farewell public appearance in this country at the Christmas exercises of the Presbyterian Chinese Mission in East Thirty-first Street, New York City. He was introduced to an audience of 150 Chinese, ranging in age from three years upward, by Rev. Huie Kin, the superintendent of the mission.

"I find myself in a very awkward position," said Dr. Wu. "I have never before appeared in the role of a preacher. I have made some speeches, but to occupy a platform like this, and on Sunday—this is my first experience. But it gives me great pleasure to see this gathering. It is very good in you, ladies and gentlemen, to spend so much time and money for the uplift of my countrymen in this far distant land, where there are so many temptations that they are easily led astray. I see before me youngsters that receive instruction here. I hope they will profit by this. Christianity teaches you to be good citizens, to be moral men, and to love God and your neighbors. If you observe the tenets of Christianity you will become good citizens and you will be welcomed wherever you go. When a man reverences God and loves his neighbor he cannot but be a good citizen. Therefore my advice to you is to learn as much as you can while you are here, to act up to it and be good Christians."

All of the great religions of the world have some elements of truth in them; that is what makes them great. But none of the rest have the high morals of Christianity, and none are able to save the soul as it does. The tribute of this distinguished Buddhist to Christian faith and morals is as beautiful as it is singular. Dr. Wu advised that which the Master said was obedience to the Ten Commandments:

Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets. (Matt. 22:37-40.)

A Helpful Book for Invalids

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I received the book and also the pictures, and am more than pleased with them all, especially the book Before the Doctor Comes. It was a great help to me, as I have been quite sick, and this book, with its instructions, helped me a great deal. Many thanks for your kind wishes. I more than appreciate THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and could not do without it. After I read them I pass them to a dear friend, who is not able to subscribe. I ask God's blessing upon the good you are doing throughout the world. MRS. LEO MCGRATH.

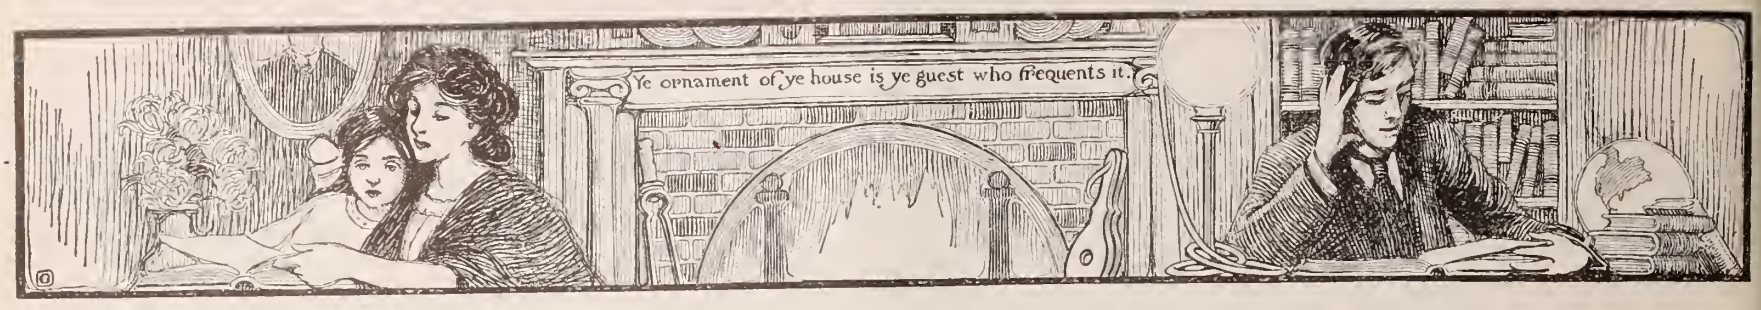
CONCERNING THE SUPERNATURAL



By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

THE lights were turned low and the glow of the fire on the hearth was the only illumination in the room. Several of the neighbors had come in to wish Mr. and Mrs. Wallace many more happy wedding days. The friendly feeling in the little community impressed itself on every household, and there was never a joy that all did not share, nor a sorrow with which every one did not sympathize. Many villages like Pleasant Corners are scattered over the country, villages in which the clustered homes, while standing apart, seem somehow to belong one to the other.

The Wallaces had been married fourteen years, and they were accustomed to declare that each year of the fourteen had been fuller of contentment and solid satisfaction than its predecessor. They had five children. None of these were just then present, though Estelle, the eldest, had pleaded with her mother to let her stay downstairs the entire evening. There were lessons to prepare for the next day, and the mother had been firm in reminding her daughter that it was well to finish the home-work before going to bed. Her real reason had been that a ripple of excitement had lately swept over the town in reference to the supernatural.

A short time previous to this evening an aged couple had passed away. They had not been together during the latest years of their life, their separation being due to poverty and to that semi-barbarous provision for the old and indigent that sometimes keeps a husband in one institution and a wife in another when they are too poor and feeble to care longer for themselves. There should always be homes for aged people in which married pairs might remain together; and there are, of course, many such, yet the greater number are specially for old women or for old men.

Mr. and Mrs. Bliss had been worthy and respectable, but by successive calamities everything they possessed had drifted out of their reach. Their children had died before them, and they were alone in the world when both, in different places miles apart, were taken ill. Mrs. Bliss had passed the crisis and was getting better, so that her doctor and nurse felt easy on her account. She was one of those sweet old ladies whom every one loves, a sunbeam in the household where there were the usual varieties of difficult, crabbed and queer old women. The nurse came into her room at dawn and found her wide awake. "Why did you not tell me," she said, "that John Bliss died last night? I ought to have been told that my husband was so ill. No one told me, but it makes no difference. I shall be where he is before noon to-day." Her words had proved prophetic. Strength left her, and in a few hours she and her husband were reunited.

Naturally, the talk around the fire turned on the topic that was interesting every one. It seemed a beautiful thing that the love between the aged people, who had spent fifty years together, should have been strong enough to make itself felt in a way that had made the wife aware that her husband was gone. "Call it telepathy, or what you will," said the doctor, as he looked around the circle, "I believe it was a direct message from the soul that departed to the soul still here. Why not? Are we not every one of us supernatural, spiritual beings, clothed upon with flesh? Yet we are so literal that we lose faith the moment any one speaks of that which is beyond our comprehension."

"There is a pretty story," said the minister, "in a little book by Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, entitled 'The Empty Crib.' Twin sons of Dr. and Mrs. Cuyler, many years ago, were ill at the same time with scarlet fever. They were six years old. One had been removed from the manse to the house of a friend, in the hope that he might not develop the illness. He did, however, become ill and was lying in his little bed one day when he had a vision. To some one coming in he said, 'Georgie has been here. He came and looked at me and smiled, and then went away.' At that very hour Georgie had died, but in going to the 'upper fold' he had shown himself somehow, for a happy instant, to the little brother he was leaving."

"We need not," said Mr. Wallace, "believe in ghosts and apparitions, if to our minds they do not appear convincing. The machinery of clairvoyance, and much that is done for money by mediums and psychics is offensive to sensible people. A friend of mine, widely known as a poet, one day received a copy of a spiritualistic paper. In it she found under capitalized headlines, 'Great News from the Unseen World.' Elizabeth Barrett Browning had communicated a poem through a trance medium. My friend smiled when she read the poem, for it was an early effort of her own, that had been published anonymously and had made the circuit of the globe. Why should we refuse to take the comfort we may, notwithstanding these deceivers, in the fact that the veil between us and the other world is very thin, and that to some fortunate ones whispers from the invisible land are heard in sweet music? In ancient times God sent his angels often to comfort and sustain those whom he loved when they were in peril. Surely the great all-Father is not less able to send his messengers now than he was in the centuries that are past."

Some one who thought the conversation might better take another turn went to the piano and began to play. Mrs. Wallace lighted a lamp, and Estelle, who had finished her home work, came to the door, asking if she might not sit up a while longer, as it was mamma's wedding day, and they were to have refreshments.

WOODEN SHOON

Little Dutch baby with wooden shoon,
You were not born to the golden spoon.
Never fear, darling, for homely love
Is watching your brave little steps above.

Misunderstood

"The reason you do not succeed better in training your Katherine," said a wise grandmother to a perplexed mother, "is because the child is misunderstood. You had an idea that when the dear Lord sent you a daughter he had made her after the exact pattern of yourself. Precisely the opposite thing has taken place. Katherine is not like you, nor like her father, nor very much like her brothers. Probably you would have to go back a hundred years and search among the ancestors to discover from whom Katherine inherits her traits of mind. We all can see that she resembles the miniature of her great-great-grandmother. It is curious, is it not, that a little child can come into the world, freighted like a ship that has crossed the sea, with characteristics and peculiarities that are an inheritance from the long ago. You reprove Katherine for being too impulsive. You do not consider the fact that her nature is still undisciplined. Why do you keep her at home under your own hand? She would improve faster in every way if for a while at least she could be among strangers."

"Do you believe," asked the mother, "that a little girl of twelve should be sent away to school? Is she not safer and more likely to grow into beautiful and symmetrical development if she is kept in her home? Who can understand her if her mother fails?"

"I know how you feel about it, and yet I am of the opinion that for some children, if it can be afforded, a school at a distance from home is very desirable. The day will come in the future when you and Katherine will draw near to one another, but there will continue to be friction until she reaches you along the pathway of womanhood. You love her and she loves you. You are obeyed, as a rule, whenever you speak, and the child tells you the truth. Acknowledging this, there is still no little irritation in the relation that exists between you. Frankly, do you understand your daughter as you do your sons?"

"No," replied the mother, "I must confess that Katherine is an enigma to me much of the time. I do not understand her moods. I am often conscious that I have not taken the right course in my dealings with her. Whether I ought to send her to school, or let her remain at home, or for a while allow her to go on a long visit to an aunt or cousin, in whose house she could live while attending school, are among the decisions I must soon make. Anyway, I thank you for your counsel."

"There would be little use in being a grandmother and having brought up one's own family, if one had not gained a clearer vision where the second generation is involved. I am only asking you not to repeat errors that I once made myself."

FINE AND INSTRUCTIVE

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I have received the Hero Tales of American Life, and consider it a fine and instructive book. MRS. N. L. BRADLEY.

THE STRAWBERRY HANDKERCHIEF

A TALE OF COLONIAL DAYS IN OLD NEW YORK

BY

AMELIA E. BARR

"WHEN we left Cruger's," continued Jan, "the people were shouting the three words p and down the streets. Turn hich way you would, you heard hem calling to one another, 'Sons of iberty!' and William Smith, whom we iet in Maiden Lane, told us Isaac ears, John Lamb, Marinus Willet, Iott Bancker and others were then nd there forming a patriotic society o be called the 'Sons of Liberty.' Arent must join it. Where then is Arent?"

"Very sensible is Arent; he is asleep n his bed," said Katrina.

"Sensible, I fear not. With the ther men he ought to have been."

"He was with Lady Rose in the arden."

"A stop must be put to that foolishness. See thou to it."

"See to it thyself, Jan. To thy sons t is thy place to speak. Thy duty is iot mine."

"Well, then, it is thy duty to speak ome wise words to thy daughter. This fternoon I saw some carryings-on beween her and Joris Artaveldt that I will not have. I like not that young nan; he has such a cock-sure military nsolence."

"He is a middling nice young man, as men go, Jansen; but I take no worry bout Virginia and Joris. He has not had the secret to touch her heart."

"I wonder me at what Virginia sees n him. For a son-in-law I will not have him. Never! Remind her that she is promised to Batavius De Vries, and Batavius she will marry, and that very soon. I will not give bad fortune and Joris Artaveldt the scope of more opportunities."

"Prepare thyself for a disappointment. Virginia will not marry Batavius."

"I swear she shall marry him. In Boston he is now, next week he will be in New York. Very soon we settle that matter—in a wedding we will settle it."

"Whatever art thou thinking of? In such a way as that my daughter cannot be married. It would be shame and sorrow to both of us, and also there are no marriage clothes ready, and——"

"Very few clothes will do now. I tell thee it will soon be scandalous to have on a fine dress. Nothing English will be worn—only homespun and homemade for good men and women."

"That is to be seen. I believe it not. Women will give up many things, but their silks and satins and fine clothes will not be among them."

"Never before have I heard thee talk such raving foolishness."

"Go and sleep thy temper sweet, and then the time of smiles will come round once more."

"A man must do as his wife says, there is no help for it; but listen, Katrina," and he dropped his voice until it was barely audible—"Listen! Pretty soon now, we are going to do the deed that has been the secret of our hearts these many years—we are going to strike for our freedom—we are going to be free."

"Jan, be silent. Thou art talking treason."

"Now it is treason; but soon, Katrina, we shall call such words patriotism and Americanism."

In the morning early there was a message from Mrs. Colden. She said they were going to their country house at Flushing that day, and she wished Rose and Virginia to join them there. Virginia was reluctant to go. The journey to Flushing was disagreeable, and she had little sympathy with the Colden family. But social prestige was as powerful then as now—perhaps more so—and the Captain, though totally disapproving the Governor politically, was not opposed to his daughter mingling socially in a set regarded as the highest in the land.

Early on the following day the two girls were escorted to Flushing by Arent, who captured the Colden ladies the first hour of his visit. They urged him to remain for a few days, but Arent had been selected for certain work in the Southern colonies, and purposed leaving by the night tide.

Arent's parting with Rose was in a crowd, and she gave him no visible token of interest. But on his face, and in his eyes, there was that wonderful light that is always the reflection of some secret only Love can impart; and though Rose would not talk of him, and snapped in two Virginia's fine opinions of her brother, her interest in the young sailor was not to be denied.

"You pretend that for Arent you do not care; but I am sure you love him a little, Rose; is not that the truth?" asked Virginia.

"Say I grant so much?"

"You may safely do so. Love is invincible, Rose. You will have to submit to it."

"Love is not invincible. Love is constantly conquered by duty and other nobler virtues."

"A victory like that no woman could gain."

"If you believed you could gain it, you would gain it. If you despaired of gaining it, you would rightfully lose it."

"Postmasters and postriders were continually examined by Colden"

"Suppose your lover should leave you, Rose? Would it not kill you?"

"No. Of that sorrow I should soon cure myself."

"How?"

"I would not permit one hope to enter my heart, not one hope of any kind. If you are a reasonable creature no passion will survive the death of hope."

"Is there any passion you would die for?"

"Yes."

"Love?"

"Guess again."

"Honor?"

"Now you touch the truth. I would die for my honor, for my religion, for my country, for my father. So then honor, faith, patriotism, and filial affection are stronger than love—a fussy, aching, selfish little passion love is."

"Oh, Rose, surely you have never been in love. It makes men and women angels."

"Has it made Joris an angel? He looked like a very disappointed man."

"Very handsome I thought him."

"I believe you. I'll swear you have built altars to him in your heart."

"I do not speak of Joris to any one but you."

"You are a darling, and I am as ill-natured as can be."

"But why?"

"Because I have to bear all sorts of disappointments for the people I care nothing about. Arent would have stayed a few days here, but for that southward business. If father had come to New York, in three weeks I might have been in London, instead of watching in this wilderness town."

"New York is not a wilderness town, Rose."

"What then? Its best business streets are shaded with trees."

"The trees are beautiful."

"But fancy trees in Pall Mall, or Holborn! My dear Virginia, we are on the edge of the wilderness."

"New York is a great business city, and I will admit nothing contrary. And is not this a lovely house?"

"I will say anything you wish. And I do think we shall make a creditable pretense of amusement. But nothing ever happens at the Coldens. Now at Aunt Portman's something unusual is always on hand—an engagement, a lovers' quarrel, a runaway match."

"And here there is much the same thing in moderation."

"I hate moderation in anything. Fancy a moderate lover! Does Joris love you in that fashion? Pray now tell me, what extremities he vows?"

"He knows I should not credit extremities. I trust his simple word, and he trusts mine."

"What miraculous faith! I would not trust a woman out of sight and hearing, nor a man even while he was in the act of protesting."

"Joris is——"

"Absolute perfection. And behold him walking in the garden. Velvet coat and breeches, satin vest and silk stockings, diamond buckles and lace ruffles, and sure as I am a sinner, the Strawberry Handkerchief at the last gold button!"

Then the girls went to the window and watched the young man. Joris was walking with the air of one who possessed the world and the fulness thereof; his figure admirably set off by his blue velvet coat trimmed with silver. Yet conspicuous amid all this finery was a small pocket from which was shown a triangular bit of cambric, delicately embroidered with a bunch of strawberries.

Virginia hardly knew whether this exhibition pleased or displeased her. Perhaps she would have preferred a sealed packet in a secret drawer, in a locked desk; perhaps she liked the overt confession that his love was already given. But his appearance was so handsome that either way seemed the right way; and she began to hurry her toilet.

It was not difficult to make people

Let the New Year Bring Van Camp's

Let home-baked beans—the indigestible beans go with the rest of the Old Year's mistakes.

It is time to realize that there are better ways for preparing this premier food. Millions have already proved it.

There is a way to bake beans so they won't be mushy and broken and flat.

There is a way to make them digestible, so they will not ferment and form gas.

But one cannot do this without a steam oven. You must let us bake your beans.

Meat is enormously high now, but beans cost the same as of old. And beans are 84 per cent. nutriment.

Beans have more food value than the choicest beef, yet they cost but a third as much.

They can be used to cut your meat bills in half. But they never can do it, and have your folks well pleased, until you learn to serve Van Camp's.

Our future and fortunes are at stake on baked beans. That's why we are careful about them.

We pay for Michigan beans, selected by hand, four times what some beans cost.

We use only whole, vine-ripened tomatoes. Plenty of tomato sauce can be bought for one-fifth what we spend to make ours.

We use steam ovens heated to 245 degrees. Thus we make beans digestible, yet we leave them nutty and mealy and whole.

These things are essential if you would have your folks glad when you serve baked beans.

Van Camp's BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE PORK AND BEANS

It is true there are plenty of ready-baked beans inferior to your home-baked dish. But it is easy for you to avoid them.

There are no home-baked beans which compare with Van Camp's. It is time that you knew this fact.

Van Camp's will become, when you know them, almost a daily dish. You'll buy them by the dozen cans. Please start the New Year by finding this out.

The Strawberry Handkerchief

uncomfortable at Governor Colden's dinner table that day. His efforts to introduce subjects alien to the one great subject in every mind generally ended in the very heart of that dispute.

"Suppose we take a stroll by the seashore, and watch the sunset," said Mrs. Colden, and she added, "there is a lovely little cottage a mile away. An English gentleman—nobleman, some say—built it, and brought there a young wife whose beauty was marvelous. One day he gave the key of the place to the Governor, and asked him to keep it until he returned. He has never returned."

"And the girl wife?" asked Rose.

"She may have gone away with him. Some people believe she did, or——"

"Or was murdered, perhaps."

"He loved her passionately."

"I remember hearing of a nobleman who had run away with a beautiful girl, and who after a year's absence returned to England without her. Perhaps I am on the edge of discovery!" cried Rose.

In a short time the party were strolling towards the deserted cottage. Mrs. Colden opened the door and they entered. An air of unspeakable sorrow permeated the empty place. It had been left evidently at a moment's notice. Nothing had been removed or put away. By the hearth there was an empty cradle, with the most dainty furnishings.

"It is all too pitiful," cried Rose. "Did no one ask what came of the poor lady?"

"Why not suppose that she went away with her husband?" said Virginia. "They may come again."

Rose and Virginia together went twice more to the deserted home. It was to both the event of the visit. The time passed in its usual course, given over to what was called diversion. But Rose was throughout the whole week distrait and unlike herself, and Joris, irritable with her contradictions, asked Virginia, "What is the matter with my Lady Rose?"

"Rose cannot give you favors she gives to no other young man in this company."

"She is dreadfully cross and pettish."

"She is in love."

"And you, Virginia, are so exceedingly clever and beautiful, and have become a toast."

"And let me tell you, Joris, I am unhappy at our secret engagement. My good father and mother ought to know."

"I will speak to your father when we return to the city. I know not how to break the subject to my father."

"Until you have your father's consent, it will be folly to speak to my father. The first thing he will ask is, 'What message from Justice Artaveldt do you bring?' And if you say, 'I have no message,' he will answer, 'Then it is not my time to speak.'"

"But he will not, he cannot, refuse his consent to our marriage."

"I think he will refuse. Many years ago he chose a husband for me, and lately very often he speaks of him. It is Captain De Vries. Do you know him?"

"Know him! I know nothing about him! But if he interferes between you and me, I will know him, and that to some purpose. Why did you not tell me this story before?"

"Joking I thought my father was. But now I see that my father is in very earnest, and my mother also told me his heart was set on marrying me to Captain De Vries."

"We go home to-morrow. I will then ask for his consent to our marriage. If he says yes, well and good; if he says no, we must be married without his consent."

"That is an impossible folly, Joris. It could never be."

"What should prevent it? Am I not your equal?"

"Yes."

"Yes. Is that all you can say? I believe in my soul, Virginia, you are jealous, because I have wasted a few attentions on other beauties. As for Rose, I hope she will not return with you."

"Never mind Rose. She is the same sweet Rose, only she is in despairing love."

"With Arent?"

Virginia nodded gravely.

"I thought the wind might come from that quarter. Well, then, she is her own mistress in a year. She can marry as she wishes."

"No. Race, caste, pride, wealth, family, religion, a score of things control her. Such a marriage can never take place. She knows it, and so she suffers. We must bear with her. She is doing her best to forget—a hard thing it seems to do. There is Arent, too—poor Arent!"

As they were speaking they were joined by Rose. She bowed to Joris, and said, "Come, Virginia, let us walk once more as far as the empty cottage."

Then Joris offered his company, but it was refused; and the two girls walked alone to the sorrowful place.

"I cannot help feeling as if the poor lady was murdered, Rose," said Virginia.

Rose was standing before the mirror combing her long black hair. She turned with ivory comb lifted in her hand, and letting her loosened tresses fall around her, she looked at Virginia. Her face was white, her eyes full of fear, her voice low and thick. "She was not murdered, Virginia. She was loved to the last. If she had been murdered I should have known it as I sat in her chair to-night."

"But how? I cannot see."

"I will tell you. I have lived in old English houses and castles red with murder. I have seen, I have heard, and I have felt the wraiths of evil fate. Virginia, murder tells its tale and will not be dumb. Fifty years, one hundred years, three hundred years, is not the date of the bond to the place of their blood. They haunt it, Virginia. They make you shiver as you tread upon it. They whisper the crime till the walls of the room repeat it. If you go to sleep you dream of the dead. If there had been murder in that cottage, I must have felt it. Virginia, you cannot tell how good it has been to live in this new world, in new houses unstained by blood, and unhaunted by the furies of ancient crimes."

"How sensitive you are, Rose! Such a nature is a great suffering."

"The suffering made me sensitive when I was four years old. I knew the ghosts of Cressacre Castle—a queer, bad lot they were, men and women."

"Oh, Rose, what did you do?"

"Prayed for them. That was what most of them came for. Poor souls! I wonder if they miss me. I will say a prayer for their peace this night. I may soon be among them."

"Rose! Rose! What are you saying?"

"When Arent and I parted, it was the end of the world—to me. The end of love is the end of life."

"This beautiful world, Rose——"

"Is just a still waste, in which I have lost everything."

"Arent will return to you."

"I forbade him."

"Why did you forbid him?"

CHAPTER FIVE

THE UNWELCOME LOVER

THE passage of the Stamp Act had for a few days an influence on New Yorkers best expressed by the old-fashioned word dumfounded. In their hearts, the great merchants of the city had believed such folly impossible to the English government. Yet they heard the bill had passed without amendment, debate, protest, or dissenting vote. It seemed incredible.

No wonder that for a few days they remained silent and passive. It was the wisdom of an anger that meant to take no false step. Yet the Governor chortled and snickered at the ominous silence, and was quite sure the Act would enforce itself. Even the fiery Otis had told Boston, "If the Act becomes a law, we can only submit."

The tone of New York was very different from the first. "There is not gold and silver enough in all the colonies to carry this Act through!" cried John Watts. "What can be expected but open opposition?" said William Smith; and John Moran Scott in the New York Gazette wrote boldly, "If the interest of the mother country and her colonies cannot be made to coincide, then the connection between them ought to cease, and sooner or later must inevitably cease." Thus New York at this early date plainly pointed to independence.

Indeed it soon became impossible to restrain the growing tide of popular indignation. From New York a constant flood of inflammatory papers was scattered over the country, and this secret correspondence of the "Sons of Liberty" baffled the government's utmost vigilance. Postmasters and post-riders were continually cross-examined by Colden, but to no purpose. In fact, the great majority of men in the country were secret colporteurs of liberty, and their reticence and faithfulness was so perfect that the authorities never succeeded in proving a single case. To be continued

A LITTLE TOUR IN SAMARIA

Samaria contending with the Baal-worshipers of Carmel on the west. Here was carried on one of the mightiest contests chronicled in the history of the children of Israel. It was a contest between the one Jehovah and those deities that had been carried over from Egypt and whose places of habitation had been adorned with majestic temples and sanctuaries.

The Tower of Jezreel, from Which Jezebel Was Thrown, as Related in II. Kings 9 Chapter

The Samaritans remained in Palestine during the exile, and were ever afterward held in contempt by the Jews. Though separated socially and politically, they did not give up their Judaistic faith. Even to this day the feast of the Passover is observed, and the tables of the law are read as in the days of old. They have always regarded Gerizim as more sacred than Jerusalem, and have clung to it as the very Mount of God. It was within its shadow that the Great Teacher for once and for all threw aside all geographical limitations and gave to the religion of Israel the charter of universal worship: "Neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, shall ye worship the Father; but the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth."

Christ came in contact with the people of Samaria only once. This one great discourse did not involve the proud records of the early history of Samaria, nor of its inhabitants; but it was a simple and plain lesson about the soul needs of a sinner. As we sit by the well during the last midnight hour of our stay in Samaria our hearts are touched with the great need of its wicked and sinful inhabitants to-day. And as we look over the dirty Moslem villages of filth, sin and vice, and then think of our supreme obligation, there comes to us anew and in an ever-living way the words of Christ: "The fields are white unto the harvest. Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he send forth laborers unto his harvest."

How to Win God's Blessings*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

MANY times Jesus spent the night alone on a mountain-top in prayer; in all probability he did so on the night preceding the day when he was to formally appoint his apostles, those who were to be his ambassadors and representatives, those who were to be the foundation pillars of his church. The mountain thus made sacred still stands to view. The traveler from Nazareth to Tiberias sees it in the near distance, just before beginning the descent down the hillside to the Sea of Galilee. It is a hill rather than a mountain, being only sixty feet high, but it looks higher, rising from the level plain. It is peculiar in having a double summit, hence the descriptive name "Horns of Hattin." Delitzsch calls this mountain "the Sinai of the New Testament." But Mount Sinai of the Old Testament was a barren, rocky, almost inaccessible mountain, between eight and nine thousand feet high, rising out of a desert plain. From its summit the law was given to Moses by the Almighty God, who said that no man could look upon his face and live.

Christ Preaching on Hattin

While on Hattin, the Mount of Beatitudes, the words which fell from the loving, living lips of the Lord Jesus were written upon the tables of the heart. With the awful grandeur of Sinai, when fire burst forth and the mountain trembled, let us compare, in the words of Condor, the scene on Hattin:

"We may understand that our Lord, on being joined by some of his disciples, began to descend the mountain side, meeting the stream of people, which rolled itself about him, gathering at every step, till he found a sheltered spot. Seating himself on a rock, where all could see and hear him, he looked around on his disciples seated at his feet. The multitude was seated, or stood on the grass, or on the scattered boulders and rocky ledges, the mountain flowers painting the turf and perfuming the air; the ravens and daws flying in and out among the cliffs; above, the calm, blue sky; and far below the blue lake, with its city-studded shores. Then, amid the solemn, happy quiet of his Father's works, looking round on not many wise, not many mighty; but on faces bronzed and weather-beaten, figures bent with toil, cheeks worn with care and thin with hunger, eyes that had wept bitter tears of the oppressed that have no helper, and the poor that have no comforter, the great Teacher begins to speak."

Among our treasures we have a picture which came to us from Japan, drawn by the Christian girls in the Ferris Seminary. Outlined upon the peculiar Japanese rice paper is Mount Fuji, which is to all the people of Japan a sacred mountain, almost worshiped by them. But when the Christian girls had learned about Jesus giving the Beatitudes on the mountain far away they conceived the idea of connecting his teachings with their own mountain, and so making it sacred indeed. So on the sides of the mountain which they had drawn they wrote in Japanese letters all of the Beatitudes. With a touch of fine poetic sentiment they wrote in the snow, at the top of the mountain, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." We believe that teachers would find the boys and girls in their classes would be much interested to outline the Horns of Hattin and write the Beatitudes on the sides. Perhaps it would be well to provide each with such an outline, and have the writing done during the lesson time. The superintendent might make a very effective blackboard exercise according to this suggestion.

The Beatitudes as Horns of Plenty

The Beatitudes appear to us as eight horns of plenty, from which the Lord Jesus lavishly poured out upon his hearers the fulness of blessing.

Upon those poor in spirit he promised a blessing which included the whole kingdom of heaven! The only hearts that could not receive such a blessing were those already filled with a too good opinion of themselves and their belongings.

The rich blessing of comfort was promised for those who mourned, because they deserved the sweetness of the consolation which comes from God in all life's trials.

For the weak there was a blessing promised whose measure was the whole earth. For them who had heart hunger and heart thirst for the sweetness of the Christian life Jesus gave the promise that they should be filled. The horn of blessing he poured out upon those who were themselves merciful in their dealings with their fellow-men: "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy."

To the pure in heart should be poured out the greatest blessing of all, for they should "see God," not in heaven alone, but day by day God would reveal himself unto them.

A blessing should be poured out upon those who not only would not quarrel themselves, but would try to keep others from quarreling. They should be called "the children of God," for he is the God of peace, and his children are peacemakers.

And Jesus poured out blessing upon those who are persecuted for righteousness' sake—the blessedness of persecution! He would have them know that "holy suffering is a glorious thing," and that persecuted Christians will find themselves in great company, even of the prophets, "for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you."

The Beatitudes of Jesus in Human Lives

Did those who listened to Jesus that day on the mountain put into practice the principles which he gave them? Let us compare Peter with himself, with the timid follower that he was when he denied that he was one of Jesus' disciples at the taunt of a maid-servant in the high priest's palace, and the brave defender of the faith that he was when he stood in the hall of the Sanhedrin, face to face with the high priest, defending Jesus as a Prince and Saviour whom God had exalted, and charging with his death those in whose presence he stood. What had wrought so rich a change in Peter but living according to the precepts of Jesus?

Think of James and John, so fiery and vindictive in spirit that Jesus called them "Boanerges," the Sons of Thunder, when they wanted him to call down fire to destroy the Samaritans for refusing to listen to his teaching. Think what a change must have been wrought in John that it was his wont to lean on the heart of Jesus, and that his tenderness became so great that when Jesus was about to die upon the cross he gave him his own mother to care for as a son should do.

And James, fiery and vindictive in the beginning, became most tolerant and forgiving. It is related of him by Clement of Alexandria that, when he was being led to execution, his accuser was so stung by remorse that he confessed his faith in Christ and asked James to forgive him. James replied,

"Peace be with thee," and gave him a brotherly kiss, and had him for a companion in martyrdom.

There was Thomas, the man of little faith among the apostles. But so changed was he that he traveled farther, perhaps, than any other apostle, save the apostle Paul, to preach the Gospel. To-day there is a sect in India calling themselves "St. Thomas Christians." Their faith is of such a fibre that in nearly 2,000 years it has not lost its vital principle.

How shall we account for Judas? Simply as one who would not allow the beatitudes of Jesus to enter his heart and transform his life into Christ's own image.

We recall two ancient pictures which we have seen: the first represents an evil man; in the middle of his heart is Satan, with horns and hoofs and bat-like wings, his power indicated by the trident, which he holds in his right hand. The qualities with which Satan endows the man are represented by pictures of different creatures: pride, by the peacock; licentiousness, by the goat; intemperance, by the hog; lethargy, by the turtle; anger, by the tiger; envy and deceit, by the serpent, and covetousness by the toad. The second picture is the heart of a good man: in the centre is the star of Christ, and the Holy Spirit, represented by a dove; the whole heart is illuminated with the radiance of the Holy Spirit, and all the vile creatures which were in the first heart are outside, and still on the run, even Satan himself. Lovely and noble qualities appear where before there was only evil; humility instead of pride, purity instead of licentiousness, temperance instead of intemperance, industry instead of lethargy, Christ instead of Satan, long suffering instead of anger, love instead of envy and deceit, disinterestedness instead of covetousness. Dr. Payson tells of two men who said "they were never happy until they ceased striving to be great men." The only good reason anybody can have for wishing to be great is

> To be the best that he can be
> For truth and righteousness and Thee.

The Beatitudes Not Out of Date

"Blessed are the poor in spirit." Making the most of one's self for the glory of God is a laudable ambition. The root of such an ambition is not pride, but humility. The great Hillel said, "My humility is my greatness, and my greatness is my humility."

"Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." Some one has said that "to be made strong is to be comforted." Every noble soul would prefer to be made strong, rather than to have the cause for mourning taken away.

> Look up, take hope, the sun still shines,
> Though clouds at times obscure it;
> The man who cries and mopes and pines
> Will add to woe, not cure it.
> Look up, God lives, God lives, God reigns;
> Take heart, nor brood nor sorrow;
> A bit of courage often gives
> The strength to meet to-morrow.
> —Geo. A. Warburton.

"Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." A meddlesome old woman was sneering at a young mother's awkwardness with her infant, and said: "I declare, a woman never ought to have a baby unless she knows how to hold it." "Nor a tongue, either," quietly responded the young mother.

A tailor of Mannheim, Germany, made a breastplate that not even the modern rifle bullet can pierce. So will angry and cruel words fail to wound a meek and quiet spirit.

DOES RELIGION PAY?*

THERE is something almost revolting in the attitude of any one who goes into any sort of work under false pretenses of disinterested piety. The man who engages in regular business is openly in it for profit. Everybody knows it, and everybody generally thinks that, so long as the man is honest, it is a good thing to engage in business. Not always in Europe, but in America usually, the business man ranks in honorable esteem with the professional man; while he far surpasses him in wealth.

But when one goes into religion, or into friendship, or into society, for what one can make out of it, he is considered despicable. Some people even take the lofty stand that all art and literature should be unpaid, and that those noble branches will never attain to their true development and beauty until we arrive at the state which Kipling has so eloquently pictured:

> When only the Master shall praise us and only the Master shall blame;
> And no one shall work for money and no one shall work for fame;
> But each for the joy of the working.

Yet, so long as a condition of mendicancy is considered deplorable, as it surely is to-day, and rightly; and so long as the best country is that in which the largest proportion of the citizens support themselves, and paupers are unknown, so long must money be charged for all work, whether of hand or brain. "The workman is worthy of his hire."

But it is true to-day, and likely to be so always, that though the man who works with his brain is not usually so rich in this world's goods as he who engages in what is called "business," yet he has noble compensations. His thoughts and his books, his choice companions and his social position generally bring him much of quiet joy. The very rich sometimes possess and value similar privileges; but in far too many cases the pleasures of luxury and sense are by them regarded as the best.

We are wont to say of each sort of life (according, as a rule, to the ideals implanted in our souls in childhood), "The intellectual life, with poverty, pays best"; or, "Keep out of the so-called professions. Go into something that will make you rich. That is the way to be happy."

In the same manner, according to your ideals, you will say of the religious life, "It pays," or "It does not pay."

It does not often pay in money. The Founder of our faith had not where to lay his head, and he bids us lay up treasures not in earth, but in heaven; and yet every earnest Christian will testify that, poor though he may be, he would not give up his faith for all the "wealth of Ind." Nothing else in life pays so well in the highest and best coin, the coin of the Spirit.

Thus, in the eloquent language of Bishop Williams, "Here is a conscientious Christian business man, confronted with the opportunity of making large profits by shady methods; but he puts it indignantly away from him, saying, 'Money is nothing to me, but my peace of mind is everything.' He puts first things first. He means that, compared to the integrity of his conscience, any amount of wealth is worthless to him. The life is more than meat and the body than raiment; Jesus tells us that the first thing for us to seek is the kingdom of God and his righteousness. Moral profit and spiritual surplus alone measure the value of life. It is only as you put first things first that you can find the real joy of living and the peace of God."

An Exceptional Issue of 6% Bonds Secured by a Thousand Farms

Here are brief facts about one current issue of Irrigation Bonds They will illustrate what ideal security lies back of such bonds when the issues are rightly selected.

The Bitter Root Valley Irrigation Co. owns one of the largest irrigated fruit land projects in the world. The Company is composed of well known men who are wealthy, experienced and capable. The land to be watered consists of about 40,000 acres in the heart of our greatest fruit belt—in the famous apple region of the Pacific Northwest.

A large part of the valley has been under irrigation for many years, so the possibilities of the land have been demonstrated. Fruit land in the valley has lately sold as high as $1,000 per acre.

The water rights are unassailable, and the total water supply is more than sufficient for all needs. For the irrigable land is distinctly limited by the mountainous bounds of the valley.

$2,500,000 Invested

The Irrigation Company has invested in the project about $2,500,000, or about twice the total bond issue. And the bonds are secured by a first mortgage on all the property which the Irrigation Company owns.

The bonds are additionally secured by first liens on the lands and the orchards watered. These liens are given by individual land owners in payment for the land and the water rights. Forty per cent. of the price is paid down, and the balance, secured by the liens, is payable in annual installments.

To secure each $1,000 bond there are deposited with a Trust Company as trustee $1,400 of these first liens on farm land.

The average price at which this land has been sold is about $200 per acre. The minimum price at present is $250 per acre. Yet the bond issue is limited to $30 per acre, or to less than one-sixth the average selling price of the land.

Double Security

Thus the bonds have double security. The first is a mortgage on all the property which the Irrigation Company owns, and the Company's investment is nearly twice the whole bond issue. The second security is these first liens on farm land—on land which is worth more than six times the amount of the bonds which it secures.

One can hardly conceive of more ample security. Yet these bonds pay six per cent. interest, because the demand for irrigated land is so great that the projects are very profitable.

Part of these bonds mature each year from 1914 to 1919. One may have his choice of maturities.

Ask for the Facts

In the past 15 years we have purchased 75 separate issues of Reclamation Bonds—Drainage and Irrigation. All have been secured by first liens on good farm land, and not a dollar of loss has resulted to any investor.

Irrigation bonds have now become the most popular bonds that we handle. No other large class of bonds offering equal security now pays six per cent.

We have issued a book on Irrigation Bonds, based on all this experience. Every investor, small or large, owes to himself its perusal. Please write for the book to-day. Cut out this coupon so you won't forget.

A WOMAN DOCTOR

Was Quick to See that Coffee was Doing the Mischief

A lady tells of a bad case of coffee poisoning and tells it in a way so simple and straightforward that literary skill could not improve it.

"I had neuralgic headaches for 12 years," she says, "and suffered untold agony. When I first began to have them I weighed 140 pounds, but they brought me down to 110. I went to many doctors and they gave me only temporary relief. So I suffered on, till one day a woman doctor told me to use Postum. She said I looked like I was coffee poisoned.

"So I began to drink Postum and I gained 15 pounds in the first few weeks and continued to gain, but not so fast as at first. My headaches began to leave me after I had used Postum about two weeks—long enough to get the coffee poison out of my system.

"Since I began to use Postum I can gladly say that never know what a neuralgic headache is like any more, and it was nothing but Postum that made me well. Before I used Postum I never went out alone; I would get bewildered and would not know which way to turn. Now I go alone and my head is as clear as a bell. My brain and nerves are stronger than they have been for years."

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

O. Y., Meriden, Wyo. Women seek to have equal rights with the men. In our State they are allowed to vote. The first thing a woman should do is to show that she has sense enough to vote. Does she wear, when she is at her wash-tub, hat and lace-befrilled gowns with a body twisted out of shape? One attired in this way suggests a weak mind. It is not meant by this that her dress should be mannish. Far from it. Let the clothes be very womanish, because they are worn by a woman. She should dress as neatly as possible; that is her duty. She should dress in a way most becoming: that is also her duty. If she can afford expensive material, all right. You have a picture of two women in your mind. Which should vote?

This is a woman's question addressed to both men and women, but principally to the latter. She puts the problem very plainly. Perhaps some of our readers would like to answer her in the columns of THE MAIL-BAG.

J. M., Andover, Mass. When is the taking of the next census to begin, and how many enumerators will be engaged?

All applications for the post of enumerator must be filed not later than January 25, with the supervisors. Tests will be made February 5. The examination will be such as any applicant with a fair common school education can pass. Applicants may be of either sex, must be over eighteen and under seventy, and must reside in the district. There will be 68,000 enumerators, and the real work of taking the census will begin April 15.

M. B., Eminence, Ky. 1. Explain Matt. 25:32. 2. Are the righteous to be judged? 3. Shall the redeemed see God? 4. Is there an intermediate state between death and resurrection?

1. Read the parable of the tares. In this world the righteous and unrighteous necessarily commingle; but there will come a time of separation, just as the Eastern shepherd enfolds his sheep at night, but leaves his goats in the open air. 2. See I. Tim. 4:1; Heb. 10:30; Heb. 12:23; Ps. 7:11. 3. Matt. 5:8; Matt. 18:10; Rev. 22:4. 4. See Luke 23:43; I. Pet. 3:19. In connection with those texts it might be well to refer to chapter 6 in After Death—What? by Dr. M. C. Peters.

J. E. L., Concord, N. H. 1. Explain what the term "normal" means in connection with schools for teachers. 2. Have normal schools been long in existence?

1. The word "normal" comes from the word norma, a rule. 2. The first school especially for teachers was established by law in Paris in 1795, but was soon closed. Napoleon opened one in 1808. It was closed in 1822. In 1826 the system was revived and spread to England, America, and several other countries.

Miss E. L. H., Haddonfield, N. J. Explain Luke 18, latter clause of the eighth verse, "Nevertheless, when the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?"

Read Matt. 24:3-28, taking special notice of the twelfth verse. The passage you cite reads in the original Greek, "Nevertheless, when the Son of Man cometh, will he find the faith in the earth?" This, notwithstanding the long suffering of God. See the parallel examples given in the previous chapter, verses 26-30.

L. C. S., Rogers, Ark. Can you give me any information about St. Patrick? When did he live? What was his real mission? Is there any authentic history of his life, or is it all legendary?

St. Patrick, according to the best authorities, was born at Dumbarton, on the River Clyde, in Scotland, in the fifth century A.D. Several countries, England and France among the number, have claimed to be his birthplace, but with less proof. He was captured by freebooters, and was carried to Ireland. He escaped to Gaul and became a monk, and, after 431, returned as a missionary to Ireland. He is said to have found all Ireland heathen and left it all Christian. Various dates of his death are given: 463, 492 and 493. Legend has added so to his life that it is hard to construct an authentic history.

F. F. F., Oshkosh, Wis. 1. Is it known whose marriage it was, in Cana of Galilee? 2. What is meant by the words of the governor of the feast, as given in verse 10? 3. Are the words of Christ to his mother, as given in the fourth verse of the second chapter, fully in harmony with the fifth commandment? 4. What portion of Scripture do the Jews, and certain others, quote and believe in as touching the non-use of swine's flesh? 5. Is its use regarded as sinful? 6. What other use, if not for food, may we believe swine were intended for? 7. Is it important whether fermented or unfermented wine be used at Sacrament, seeing it is only a symbol? 8. Why was unleavened bread at the time of Christ used at Sacrament, and not now?

1. It is nowhere stated in Scripture. 2. He meant that wine-drinkers, after they had drunk copiously, were incapable of distinguishing good wine from bad. 3. In the title "woman" is no reproach. He was thirty years of age at this time. Mary herself showed no sign of being humbled or reproved; surely she is the best judge. 4. Lev. 11:7. 5. Yes, by orthodox Jews and Mohammedans 6. Certain birds and animals are natural scavengers, and consumers of carrion. 7. Since only as a symbol, unimportant. Unfermented preferably. 8. In memory of hasty departure from Egypt, and wanderings in the wilderness, when leaven could not be carried nor was needed. Our Passover is spiritual, that of the Jews was material. Unleavened bread is still required in the Sacrament of the Latin Church

R. H. W., Harrisburg, Pa. 1. Where is the topaz found, and is it ever more than one color? 2. Has it any historical significance?

1. The finest topaz comes from Brazil. The Brazilian stone is deep yellow, and almost equals the diamond in lustre. The stone is also found in Siberia, where it is of a bluish tint in Scotland, England, Mexico, Germany and America. 2. It was the second stone in the high priest's breastplate.

S. R., Fredericksburg, Pa. Is it not our duty to forgive all our enemies and all who wrong us, even if they never ask us to do so?

The last verse of Matt. 18 answers this question. Forgiveness is a quality residing in ourselves, and is independent of professions of contrition. It reacts on ourselves, making us the happier and preserving our minds at peace whether our foes remain antagonistic and impenitent or not. Only when they express contrition does our forgiveness avail them; but it benefits us all the time. We sin against God by word and thought and deed; we need his forgiveness continually, and that we cannot have unless we have forgiven our fellows. See Matt. 6:15.

M. M. L., Cherry Valley, Mass. What is the woolsack, referred to in the papers in connection with the House of Lords controversy?

The woolsack is the seat of the Lord High Chancellor of England in the House of Lords. It is a large bag of wool, covered with red cloth. In the reign of King Edward III. wool was the most important commodity in England and the woolsack was first used in the House at that time.

M. H., Bloomington, Ill. Will you please tell me why Josephus did not say anything about Jesus?

There is a passage in Josephus' Antiquities book 18, chapter 2, section 3, which refers to Jesus, his works, his crucifixion and resurrection. It is true the authenticity of this passage has been disputed by both Jews and infidels, but it cannot be satisfactorily explained away, and stands in the record to-day. There is still another passage in book 20, chapter which refers to "James, the brother of Jesus." Other secular historians of that age, notably Tacitus (see Annals, book 44, chapter 15 have references to Christ and the Christians.

H. D., Philadelphia, Pa. What can a minister mean by saying that the idea of penitence by going up and kneeling at the altar is the most damnable heresy ever introduced into the Christian Church?

He probably objects to the ceremonial form, but the objection is out of place, and the criticism harsh and ill-tempered. Kneeling is a physical expression of deep reverence. See II. Chron. 6:13; Ezra 9:5; Ps. 95:6; Dan. 6:10; Acts 7:60, 9:40, 21:5; Eph. 3:14. Kneeling is the attitude of penitence and repentance. We think you must be mistaken in saying that any one could call "heresy," as the word has no application here. "Heresy" is a belief or doctrine at variance with fundamental truths which are everywhere accepted as orthodox.

Adsum, Harrison, N. J. Rev. 2:17: What do the expressions "the hidden manna" and "white stone" represent?

By "hidden manna" is meant spiritual sustenance; the parallel reference is to the pot of manna formerly kept in the ark of the sanctuary. By "white stone" is meant distinction honors; parallel reference is to a custom the common among Oriental potentates of giving to an honored guest a polished, hard, white stone or jewel, having the new name or title so conferred on the guest engraved thereon.

M. O. T., Winchester, Ind. Explain Matt. 5:32; Matt. 19:9; Mark 10:11, and Luke 16:18.

These passages fully set forth the righteous and spiritual aspect of marriage and divorce. Questions of divorce and remarriage are not regulated by courts of law in the several States in this country.

J. B. M., Baltimore, Md. 1. Did Ahaz have a right to make a pattern of the altar (II. Kings 16:10)? 2. What became of the Ark of the Covenant? 3. Was the vessel in the temple ever replaced (Matt. 27:51)? 4. When and by whom was the Apostles' Creed written?

1. A Syrian altar, raised for the worship of other than the God of Israel. Ahaz, as the vassal of Tiglath-pileser, the spoiler of Damascus, might easily obtain permission to make a pattern of the altar; but he grievously sinned in setting up its replica for purposes of sacrifice in the land of Israel. 2. The Apostles' eed, erroneously attributed to the apostles, is st mentioned as "the Roman Creed," by Ru-us, who died about 410. Its use was first dained in the Latin Church in the eleventh ntury. R. M., Richland Center, Wis. What authority have you for saying that Abraham Lincoln was a Presbyterian?

The World Almanac, which is usually accurate. A recent work on Methodism claims Lincoln as a Methodist. He is also claimed by the ngregationalists. In point of fact, so far as shown by records accessible at the moment, incoln was not a member of any church, ough he was a truly religious man.

. M. P., Martinsville, Va. In II. Cor. 15:56, explain how the strength of sin can be the law.

I. John 3:4, "Whosoever committeth sin, ansgresseth also the law, for sin is the transression of the law." Rom. 4:15, "For where o law is, there is no transgression." It is the xistence of the law which makes sin possible.

J. McF., Waldron, Mich. Does the first clause of I. Thes. 5:23 refer to Christian experience in this life? If so, at what period in the Christian life may such a condition be reached?

Certainly; to Christian experience in this fe. Every earnest believer grows into it. Let our whole being be set apart for Jesus, and for Jesus only. We shall not have to shut up the house, for our beloved Lord will inhabit every chamber of it, and make it a permanent abiding place. Let us see to it that all be holy, all pure, all devout."—Rev. Ch. Spurgeon.

J. J. B., Marthasville, Mo. Explain the divinity of the Holy Trinity of God, how they are combined in one.

Trinitarians do not explain it, deeming it an ineffable mystery. They point to such passages as Gen. 1:26; Gen. 2:6, 7; Isa. 48:16; Isa. 34:16; II. Cor. 13:14; John 14:23; Matt. 28:19; Acts 5:3, 4.

H. B. H., Norwalk, O. 1. What language did Christ speak? 2. Is that language now spoken, where, and by whom? 3. In what language were the books of the New Testament first written? 4. Have we knowledge of Christ's understanding or conversing in more than one language? 5. Did not he, who understood thoughts and intents of men, know all languages? 6. In his synagogue holdings, did Christ use the language spoken by the people? 7. In what language was the Ethiopian reading when accosted?

1. Aramaic, a Syro-Chaldaic dialect. 2. No; all languages have very much altered since then. 3. Greek. 4. As fact, no; see next answer. 5. Could not the Holy Spirit, which imparted the gift of tongues on the day of Pentecost, also have given him power to understand or converse in any language, if occasion demanded? 6. Fischl says he did, but it is uncertain. He may have spoken to the learned men in Hebrew, the language of the Jewish Church and Jewish culture. 7. The Septuagint version, in Greek.

A GOOD CONSCIENCE*

A GOOD conscience—a conscience void of offense—what a world of meaning is included in these phrases! f every man's conscience were normal nd healthy, never having been deadened by frequent rebuffs nor warped y worldliness and folly, then he might e sure that, if it did not trouble him, e was certainly walking in the right ay.

But the metaphysicians tell us that he sensitiveness of conscience is easily ffected. It can be dulled and disorted, and, like the delicate mechanism of a fine clock, which by rude reatment is made to strike amiss, to ain or lose by jumps and starts, and o go wrong generally, can be rendered iseless for all the purposes of a good onscience.

Or a man may be born with a defective conscience. We all know individuals who are mentally weak. We hould not think of consulting their pinion on any subject. We know hat they cannot judge aright.

It is the same with consciences. In act, it is the opinion of many wise hilosophers that there are far more people with defective moral sense than with poor minds. One reason for this may be that a lack of mind is early detected, and means are set to work to develop and brighten it, while the weak moral fibre may not be seen. It is a sort of color-blindness of the soul, and color-blindness, as we all know, may exist indefinitely without discovery. If it is known in early childhood, it can often be remedied.

Dr. Banks illustrates one difficulty of conscience by the figure of the compass. It is well known that any mass of iron will affect the reliability of the compass. Therefore the Clyde shipbuilders, when testing their newly launched vessels, always send them at least fifty miles down the river, for fear the iron-stocked yards near their buildings will divert the compasses.

Thus, if we live amid evil customs, our consciences may become untrustworthy. The great power of the sin around us may divert them from their true use. This is a real peril to us all.

A story is told of an old Indian who once asked a white man for some tobacco to smoke in his pipe. The white man gave him a loose handful from his coat pocket. The next day the Indian came back and asked for the man. He had found a coin among the tobacco, he said, and he wished to return it.

"Why didn't you keep it?" inquired his friend.

"I've got a good man and a bad man here," said the Indian, pointing to his breast. "The good man say, 'It is not yours. Give it back'; the bad man say, 'Never mind. He gave it to you. It is yours.' The good man say, 'No. You mustn't keep it.'

"So I don't know what to do, and I think I go to sleep, but the good man and the bad man keep talking all night. They trouble me. Now I bring the money back, and I feel good."

"Like that old Indian," remarks Dr. Banks, "we all have a good man and a bad man within. The bad man is the temptation of the evil one. The good man is the conscience set in every human breast."

It is true of us all, as the poet said of him "who rounded Peter's dome," and who "wrought in a sad sincerity," that Himself from God he could not free.

Let us heed that inner voice. Let us never disregard and scorn it. Keep it pure, unspoiled, sensitive, and it shall help to guide us into the kingdom.

MY PIN-OAK CHAPEL

MY toils of hand and cares of head and heart
Yield sweet obeisance to the Lord's Day rest.
Pervading calm brings quiet to the breast,
Inviting soul from earth to come apart,
Nor seek life's deepest joy in things of art.
One luring tree of all to me the best,
Around or near my summer cottage nest,
Kind shelter gives from Sol's consuming dart,
Conelike its shapely dome spreads leafy shade,
Hangs round each branch and twig its foliate lace,
Affording covert safe for many a gladsome bird.
Pin-oak men call this comely shrine God-made.
Entrancing change! To night the day gives place,
Lo! sunset flames. Be still, God's voice is heard.

Our Most Precocious Boy

INTELLECTUAL prodigies are not uncommon in our country in this age of special training and intellectual development, but such phenomena as young William J. Sidis, of Brookline, a suburb of Boston, are rare indeed, so rare that young Sidis undoubtedly is the only one of his kind in the United States. Something of his unusual powers may be known from the fact that he has entered college at the age of eleven years.

Sidis entered the grammar school in Brookline at the age of six years, and passed through seven grades in seven months. At the age of eight years he was a student in the Brookline High School, and within three months was helping the mathematical master of the school to correct the papers of the other boys. He read and wrote, and could spell with surprising accuracy at the age of three years, and by the time he was four years old he could sit down before a typewriter and write about as well as the average man. He was the star orator when a student at the grammar and high schools in Brookline, and at ten years of age his orations in Greek would have done credit to a Harvard graduate. This is all the more remarkable because of the fact that such mathematical prodigies as young Sidis are nearly always deficient along other lines of mental attainment. Some of the most wonderful mathematical prodigies in history were helpless once they strayed from the realm of figures. Most of them were not of average intellectual ability along other lines, but young Sidis triumphs in the most surprising way along every line of mental effort, and he is believed to be the most remarkable boy in the world when it comes to mental attainments. His father and mother are both physicians, and his father, Dr. Boris Sidis, has achieved marked distinction for his fine work along the line of the new science of psychopathology, or medical psychology.

Young William J. Sidis is as normal as the average boy in his physical appearance, and in some of his tastes, but it can hardly be said of him that he is a "real boy," and it is probable that the world of boyhood would be robbed of much of its sheer delight if all boys were developed along the educational system devised by Dr. Boris Sidis.

Successful Egg Farming

Among people who can afford luxuries there is great demand for a regular supply of fresh eggs. The few growers who can furnish them regularly, winter and summer alike, get very high prices.

The Corning Egg-Book

(entitled "$6.41 per Hen per Year"), tells how two men, in poor health, starting four years ago with only thirty hens, made from their little egg-farm a clear profit of over $12,000 last year. It tells all about their experience, their failures, their methods; and how others, men or women with good sense, care and faithful work, can make money in the same way. Not a detail left out.

The Corning Egg-Book is sold in combination with the Farm Journal, Philadelphia, Pa., and we have made arrangements to make this Special Offer: For $1.00 (cash, money order or check), we will send postpaid the Corning Egg-Book and the Farm Journal for two years, and American Poultry Advocate two years—all for $1.00 if order is sent at once to

Don't Weep At The Ice House

Some people swell up on "emotion" ewed from absolute untruth.

It's an old trick of the leaders of the abor Trust to twist facts and make the sympathetic ones" "weep at the ice use." (That's part of the tale further on.)

Gompers et al sneer at, spit upon and fy our courts, seeking sympathy by lsely telling the people the courts were ying to deprive them of free speech and ee press.

Men can speak freely and print opinns freely in this country and no court ill object, but they cannot be allowed print matter as part of a criminal conpiracy to injure and ruin other citizens.

Gompers and his trust associates arted out to ruin the Bucks Stove Co.; ive its hundreds of workmen out of ork and destroy the value of the plant ithout regard to the fact that hard rned money of men who worked, had en invested there.

The conspirators were told by the courts stop these vicious "trust" methods, fforts to break the firm that won't come nder trust rule), but instead of stopping ey "dare" the courts to punish them nd demand new laws to protect them in ich destructive and tyrannous acts as ey may desire to do. * * * The ason Gompers and his band persisted in ying to ruin the Bucks Stove Works as because the stove company insisted n the right to keep some old employees t work when "de union" ordered them ischarged and some of "de gang" put in.

Now let us reverse the conditions and ave a look.

Suppose the company had ordered the nion to dismiss certain men from their nion and, the demand being refused, hould institute a boycott against that nion, publish its name in an "unfair list," nstruct other manufacturers all over the nited States not to buy the labor of that nion; have committees call at stores and hreaten to boycott if the merchants sold nything made by that union. Picket he factories where members work and lug them on the way home, blow up their ouses and wreck the works, and even murder a few members of the boycotted nion to teach them they must obey the rders of "organized Capital?"

It would certainly be fair for the company to do these things if lawful for the Labor Trust to do them.

In such a case, under our laws the boycotted union could apply to our courts nd the courts would order the company o cease boycotting and trying to ruin hese union men. Suppose thereupon he company should sneer at the court nd in open defiance continue the unlawful acts in a persistent, carefully laid out plan, purposely intended to ruin the nion and force its members into poverty. What a howl would go up from the union demanding that the courts protect them and punish their law-breaking oppressors. Then they would praise the courts and go on earning a living protected from ruin and happy in the knowledge that the people's courts could defend them.

How could any of us receive protection from law-breakers unless the courts have power to, and do punish such men.

The court is placed in position where it must do one thing or the other—punish men who persist in defying its peace orders or go out of service, let anarchy reign and the more powerful destroy the weaker.

Peaceable citizens sustain the courts as their defenders, whereas thieves, forgers, burglars, crooks of all kinds and violent members of labor unions, hate them and threaten violence if their members are punished for breaking the law. They want the courts to let them go free and at the same time demand punishment for other men "outside de union" when they break the law. * * * Notice the above reference is to "violent" members of labor unions. The great majority of the "unheard" union men are peaceable, upright citizens. The noisy, violent ones get into office, and the leaders of the great Labor Trust know how to mass this kind of men in labor conventions and thus carry out the leaders' schemes, frequently abhorrent to the rank and file: so it was at the late Toronto convention.

The paid delegates would applaud and "resolute" as Gompers wanted, but now and then some of the real workingmen insist on being heard, sometimes at the risk of their lives.

Delegate Egan is reported to have said at the Toronto convention:

"If the officers of the federation would only adhere to the law we would think a lot more of them."

The Grand Council of the Provincial Workingmen's Ass'n of Canada has declared in favor of severing all connection with unions in the U. S., saying, "any union having its seat of Gov't in America, and pretending to be international in its scope, must fight industrial battles according to American methods. Said methods have consequences which are abhorrent to the law-abiding people of Canada involving hunger, misery, riot, bloodshed and murder, all of which might be termed a result of the practical war now in progress in our fair province, and directed by foreign emissaries of the United Miners of America."

That is an honest Canadian view of our infamous "Labor Trust."

A few days ago the daily papers printed the following:

(By the Associated Press)

Washington, D. C., Nov. 10.—Characterizing the attitude of Samuel Gompers, John Mitchell and Frank Morrison of the American Federation of Labor in the contempt proceedings in the courts of the District of Columbia, in connection with the Bucks' Stove and Range company, as "a willful, premeditated violation of the law," Simon Burns, general master workmen of the general assembly, Knights of Labor, has voiced a severe condemnation of these three leaders. Mr. Burns expressed his confidence in courts in general and in those of the District of Columbia in particular.

APPROVED BY DELEGATES.

This rebuke by Burns was in his annual report to the general assembly of his organization. He received the hearty approval of the delegates who heard it read at their annual meeting in this city.

"There is no trust or combination of capital in the world," said Mr. Burns, "that violates laws oftener than do the trust labor organizations, which resort to more dishonest, unfair and dishonorable methods toward their competitors than any trust or combination in the country."

Mr. Burns said the action of "these so-called leaders" would be harmful for years to come whenever attempts were made to obtain labor legislation.

"The Labor Digest," a reputable workingman's paper says, as part of an article entitled "The beginning of the end of Gompersism, many organizations becoming tired of the rule-or-ruin policies which have been enforced by the president of the A. F. of L."

"That he has maintained his leadership for so long a time in the face of his stubborn clinging to policies which the more thoughtful of the workingmen have seen for years must be abandoned, has been on account partly of the sentimental feeling on the part of the organizations that he ought not to be deposed, and the unwillingness of the men who were mentioned for the place, to accept a nomination in opposition to him. In addition to this, there is no denying the shrewdness of the leader of the A. F. of L., and his political sagacity, which has enabled him to keep a firm grip on the machinery of the organization, and to have his faithful henchmen in the positions where they could do him the most good whenever their services might be needed.

"Further than this, he has never failed, at the last conventions, to have some sensation to spring on the convention at the psychological moment, which would place him in the light of a martyr to the cause of unionism, and excite a wave of sympathetic enthusiasm for him, which would carry the delegates off their feet, and result in his re-election.

"That his long leadership, and this apparent impossibility to fill his place has gone to his head, and made him imagine that he is much greater a man than he really is, is undoubtedly the case, and accounts for the tactics he has adopted in dealing with questions before congress, where he has unnecessarily antagonized men to whom organized labor must look for recognition of their demands, and where labor measures are often opposed on account of this very antagonism, which would otherwise receive support.

"There is no doubt but what organized labor in this country would be much stronger with a leader who was more in touch with conditions as they actually exist, and who would bring to the front the new policies which organized labor must adopt if it expects to even maintain its present standing, to say nothing of making future progress."

We quote portions of another article, a reprint, from the same labor paper:

"Organized labor, through its leaders, must recognize the mistakes of the past if they expect to perpetuate their organizations or to develop the movement which they head. No movement, no organization, no nation can develop beyond the intellects which guide these organizations, and if the leaders are dominated by a selfish motive the organization will become tinged with a spirit of selfishness, which has never appealed to mankind in any walk of life at any time since history began.

"It can be said in extenuation of certain leaders of organized labor that the precarious position which they occupy as leaders has had a tendency to cause them to lose sight of the object behind the organization. The natural instinct in man for power and position is in no small measure responsible for the mistakes of the leaders, not necessarily in labor unions alone, but in every branch of society. This desire for power and leadership and personal aggrandizement causes men who have been earnest and sincere in their efforts in the start to deteriorate into mere politicians whose every act and utterance is tinged with the desire to cater to the baser passions of the working majority in the societies or organizations, and this is undoubtedly true when applied to the present leaders of the Federation. We mention the Federation of Labor particularly in this article because that organization is the only organization of labor which has yet found itself in direct opposition to the laws of the land. There are other organizations of labor whose leaders have made mistakes, but they have always kept themselves and their organizations within the bounds of the law and respected the rights of every other man in considering the rights of themselves and their constituency; whereas, the motto of the Federation is just the reverse, and unless the leaders conform themselves and their organization in accordance with the laws of the land, the leaders and the organization itself must be disintegrated and pass into history, for in America the common sense in mankind is developed to a greater extent than in any other nation on the earth, and the people, who are the court of last resort in this country, will never allow any system to develop in this country which does not meet with the approval of the majority of the citizens of the country.

This must have forced itself upon the leaders of the Federation by this time. If it has not, the leaders must be eliminated. The organization which they head has done many meritorious things in times past and the people are always ready and willing to acknowledge the benefits which their efforts have brought to their constituency as a whole, but at the present time labor organizations in general, and the Federation of Labor in particular, stand before the bar of public opinion, having been convicted of selfishness and a disposition to rule all the people of the country in the interest of the few. The people are patient and awaiting to see if the object lesson which they have been forced to give to these leaders is going to be recognized and if they are going to conform themselves and their future work and actions in accordance thereto."

Let the people remember that comment, "The Federation of Labor in particular stands before the bar of public opinion having been convicted of selfishness and a disposition to rule all the people of the country in the interest of the few."

The great 90 per cent of Americans do not take kindly to the acts of tyranny by these trust leaders openly demanding that all people bow down to the rules of the Labor Trust and we are treated to the humiliating spectacle of our Congress and even the Chief Executive entertaining these convicted law-breakers and listening with consideration to their insolent demands that the very laws be changed to allow them to safely carry on their plan of gaining control over the affairs of the people.

The sturdy workers of America have come to know the truth about these "martyrs sacrificing themselves in the noble cause of labor" but it's only the hysterical ones who swell up and cry over the aforesaid "heroes," reminding one of the two romantic elderly maids who, weeping copiously, were discovered by the old janitor at Mt. Vernon.

"What is it ails you ladies?"

Taking the handkerchief from one swollen red eye, between sobs she said:

"Why we have so long revered the memory of George Washington that we feel it a privilege to come here and weep at his tomb."

"Yas'm, yas'm, yo' shore has a desire to express yo' sympathy but yo' are overflowin' at de wrong spot, yo' is weepin' at de ice house."

Don't get maudlin about law-breakers who must be punished if the very existence of our people is to be maintained.

If you have any surplus sympathy it can be extended to the honest workers who continue to earn food when threatened and are frequently hurt and sometimes killed before the courts can intervene to Protect them.

Now the Labor Trust leaders demand of Congress that the courts be stripped of power to issue injunctions to prevent them from assaulting or perhaps murdering men who dare earn a living when ordered by the Labor Trust to quit work.

"Don't weep at the Ice House" and don't permit any set of law-breakers to bully our courts, if your voice and vote can prevent. Be sure and write your Representatives and Senators in Congress asking them not to vote for any measure to prevent the courts from protecting homes, property and persons from attack by paid agents of this great Labor Trust.

Let every reader write, and write now.

Don't sit silent and allow the organized and paid men of this great trust to force Congress to believe they represent the great masses of the American people. Say your say and let your representatives in Congress know that you do not want to be governed under new laws which would empower the Labor Trust leaders with legal right to tell you when to work, Where! For whom! At what price! What to buy! What not to buy! Whom to vote for! How much you shall pay per month in fees to the Labor Trust! etc., etc., etc.

This power is now being demanded by the passage of laws in Congress. Tell your Senators and Representatives plainly that you don't want them to vote for any measure that will allow any set of men either representing Capital or Labor to govern and dictate to the common people, who prefer to be free to go and come, work or not, and vote for whom they please.

Every man's liberty will disappear when the leaders of the great Labor Trust or any other trust can ride rough shod over people and mass their forces to prevent our courts from affording protection.

"There's a Reason."

NAPOLEON'S name fills more pages in the world's solemn history than that of any other mortal. This famous painting shows him a captive, on board the English ship Bellerophon, gazing out across the solemn sea toward France, where he was once Emperor. He realizes that his dream of Universal Empire is at an end, yet is unconscious that he is soon to be banished like an outcast a thousand miles from shore to the lonely and barren rocks of St. Helena. This famous picture from Ridpath's History is but ONE of the TWO THOUSAND in the complete work and serves to illustrate but ONE event out of all the THOUSANDS which make up the history of every empire, kingdom, principality and nation, all accurately and entertainingly told in the world-famed publication, RIDPATH takes you back to the dawn of history, long before the pyramids of Egypt were built; down through the romantic troubled times of Chaldea's grandeur and Assyria's magnificence: of Babylonia's wealth and luxury; of Grecian and Roman splendor; of Mohammedan culture and refinement; of French elegance and British power; of American patriotism and religious freedom, to the dawn of yesterday. He covers every race, every nation, every time, and holds you spellbound by his wonderful eloquence. Nothing more interesting, absorbing and inspiring was ever written by man.

RIDPATH throws the mantel of personality over the old heroes of history. Alexander is there—patriot, warrior, statesman, diplomat, crowning the glory of Grecian history. Xerxes, from his mountain platform, sees Themistocles, with three hundred and fifty Greek ships, smash his Persian fleet of over a thousand sail, and help to mould the language in which this paragraph is written. Rome perches Nero upon the greatest throne on earth, and so sets up a poor madman's name to stand for countless centuries as the synonym of savage cruelty; Napoleon fights Waterloo again under your very eyes, and reels before the iron fact that at last the end of his gilded dream has come. Bismarck is there—gruff, overbearing, a giant pugilist in the diplomatic ring, laughing with grim disdain at France, which says "You shall not." Washington is there, "four-square to all the winds," grave, thoughtful, proof against the wiles of British strategy and the poisoned darts of false friends; clear-seeing over the heads of his fellow-countrymen, and on into another century—the most colossal world-figure of his time!

Questions and Answers

J. C., Scranton, Pa. Please tell me the first name of General Howe, of the American Revolution. There were only two American generals, one in New England (Connecticut), the other in Virginia. The name of the New England one is what I want.

The only two commanders during the Revolution of which we have record were the two British officers, General Sir William, fifth Viscount Howe, 1725-1814, who commanded at Boston and Bunker Hill, and his brother, Admiral Richard, Earl Howe, 1725-1799.

R. T., Riverside, Calif. 1. Explain Matt. 5:22. 2. Was the colored race black at first, or have they been tanned black by the sun?

1. Two judiciary courts were recognized by the Mosaic law, dealing with offenses according to their enormity: the first, an assemblage of the elders, or municipal rulers, convened in the gates of the cities, to try trivial offenses. This court, in the text, is termed "the judgment." The higher court was that of the Sanhedrin, called "the council" in the text. "Raca" was an expression of contempt; if used by one Jew toward another, the offense was tried before the higher court. The use of the word "moreh," here translated "thou fool," was a Hebrew form of condemnation, which if proven was punished by stoning, the corpse of the guilty one being afterward cast into the fires of Gehenna, i. e., the burning refuse-pit, outside the walls. 2. The dark coloration of the negro is due to development of a black pigment beneath the skin, protective against the heat of the tropical sun, and perpetuated by heredity.

Reader, Mount Stirling, Ia. 1. Are the Jewish people now classed as a nation? 2. If a Jew would accept the teachings of Christ, as given in the New Testament, would he yet be a Jew or a Christian?

1. They are a race, though not a nation. "Nation" implies political and governmental form and organization. 2. A Hebrew Christian.

M. E. W., Westfield, N. J. 1. What does the word "compass" mean in Acts 28:13? 2. Was there such a thing as a compass in those days?

1. "Fetched a compass" means made a circuit, or, as a modern seaman would phrase it, "sailed on a traverse," not heading toward their destined harbor. 2. The mariner's compass was not invented till 1260 A.D.

Mrs. E. MeN., Muskegon, Mich. What is the blackdamp spoken of in the Cherry mine disaster?

Blackdamp is carbon dioxide gas. It is found mixed with firedamp in mines. It is formed by fires, exhalations from the coal or ground, or by explosions of firedamp. Firedamp is an explosive gas, consisting of light carbureted hydrogen (marsh gas). It is frequently generated spontaneously from coal.

Mrs. W. B. W., Westfield, N. J. Explain Eccles. 11:3.

The previous chapter and the first eight verses of chapter 11 are a collection of proverbs current among the people at that time, so are of wide and general application. In the verse asked about the word "toward" is better rendered "in," meaning "if a tree fall in the south (country), or in the north (country), in the place where the tree falleth there shall it be."

Reader, Richland Center, Pa. I am superstitious. How can I rid myself of my foolish ideas and fears?

It is astonishing to find how many nominal Christians are fettered in this way. They know that out of thirteen who sit together at table one is no more likely to die than out of any other thirteen people; that a four-leaved clover brings no more "luck" than any other kind, except as it develops extra industry; that the new moon will serve you no better if seen over your left shoulder than over your right; that Friday is just as good a day for all purposes as any other; and the same of dozens of other senseless beliefs. They are all unworthy of intelligent beings, and especially so of those who are Christians, for we read in God's Word that no evil thing can befall those who trust in him, and that if we love him we need never fear. Our superstitions (demon terrors) are an inheritance handed down to us from the old, dark pagan days, when every one, from the priest down to the slave, believed in signs and omens. The old pagan religions were filled with fear and terror, from which the religion of Christ makes us free. Many Scripture passages condemn superstitious fear. Pray and fight until you conquer it. Never allow yourself to be governed by silly fears awakened by "signs."

W. H., Tuscarora, N. Y. What becomes of the spirit at death? Does it become dormant until the resurrection, or does it mingle with other spirits, and enter its full reward?

See Luke 23:43; I. Pet. 3:19; Mark 9:4; Heb. 12:1. These and other texts indicate an existence of activity.

The Great Teneriffe Volcano, Mt. Chinyero, in Eruption

AFTER a silence of centuries, Mt. Chinyero, a large volcanic peak in Teneriffe, Canary Islands, lately showed signs of alarming activity. The eruption began on November 18. Lava flowed down in three directions, two streams moving toward Santiago, and one toward Icod, ruining banana, potato, and tomato plantations. Two of these streams were 433 yards in width; the other was 650 yards wide. A stream of lava flowing down the Santiago Valley advanced over half a mile in twenty-four hours; another advanced only 300 yards during one night. It was possible to view the eruption with safety from neighboring peaks. Guards were set to watch the volcano and the lava streams by night and day, that the alarm might be given in good time. Immense masses of scoriæ and rock were thrown into the air during the eruptions. Gales accompanied the outbursts, and in one of these violent storms the American yacht Varuna was wrecked off Madeira. Our photograph, from the London Illustrated News, shows the volcano during a particularly violent outbreak. The whole island of Teneriffe is volcanic.

O. F. R., Lexington, Ky. 1. Is there any passage in the Old Testament which John the Baptist could have possibly construed to mean that Jesus went for him to immerse him? 2. Would it have been possible for John to have baptized all those people that went out from Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region about Jordan, by immersion? The Bible does not speak of John having any one to assist him.

1. John's baptism was simply a compliance with the long-existing Levitical ordinance for purifying and cleansing (Num. 8:7; Ezek. 36:25); officially, as evangelist and prophet, John's right to administer this ordinance to the as yet unrecognized Jesus could not be disputed. 2. There is nothing in the language of the quoted passage in Colossians. Hebrews, ninth chapter, shows the blotting out of the type by its antitype. 2. The ordinance of our Lord's Supper was instituted previous to the crucifixion; that of baptism, previous to his ascension. (See Matt. 28:19.)

C. A. G., Baltimore, Md. Explain what is meant by the petition, "Thy kingdom come," in the Lord's Prayer.

Jesus elsewhere explains it as the inception of the spiritual kingdom of righteousness in the hearts of men, which was ultimately to spread throughout the world.

Sunday School Worker, Wheeler, N. Y. What was the name of Paul's sister, and where can we find it?

There is no way of finding it, as at is not mentioned in the Scriptures.

A reader, R. C. Finley, of Connecticut, kindly sends the following in regard to a recent query: "In your issue of October 27 G. T., Sawtelle, Calif., asks about Mother Shipton's prophecy. Below find same in full. This was first published in England in 1485. All the events have come to pass except that contained in the last two lines:

"Carriages without horses shall go,
And accidents fill the earth with woe;
Around the world thoughts shall fly
In the twinkling of an eye;
Waters shall yet more wonders do,
Now strange, yet shall be true;
The world upside down shall be,
And gold be found at root of tree;
Through hills man shall ride
And no horse or ass be found at his side;
Under water men shall walk,
Shall ride, shall sleep, shall talk;
In the air men shall be seen
In white, in black, in green;
Iron in the water shall float
As easy as a wooden boat;
Gold shall be found 'mid stone
In a land that's now unknown;
Fire and water shall wonders do;
England shall at last admit a Jew;
And this world to an end shall come
In eighteen hundred and eighty-one."

M. S. J., St. Louis, Mo. Many better sentences might be framed, but the following are suggested as likely to be remembered by children:

2. Betty eats a doughnut while guarding cross Florence.

3. Great dogs are equally brave, fearless, clumsy.

4. Fat Ben eats a dozen great cucumbers.

Both "immersion" and "aspersion" (pouring or sprinkling) were used in the early Christian churches, either being accepted as valid and equally symbolical.

Is it not also true that the ordinances of baptism and the Lord's Supper were instituted after he nailed to his cross the ordinances referred to in these passages?

Bolivian Peasantry

House of Congress, La Paz

At a Bolivian Station

IN THE WORLD'S HIGHEST CAPITAL

By A. R. STARK, Callao

I HAVE recently returned from a missionary visit to Chile and the South. One of the sensations during the last few months in South America has been the crisis between Bolivia and Peru, in which the Argentine, Brazil and Chile are all somewhat involved. The crisis is the result of a boundary question between Peru and Bolivia, which was submitted to the President of the Argentine for arbitration. The decision was unfavorable to Bolivia. For the time being that country has rejected the decision.

Since then Bolivia has been on the verge of a declaration of war with Peru. In La Paz, the Minister of Argentina got his papers, with orders to quit. Several outrages were committed on Peruvians in that city, and a great number of them fled, crossing the borders to Puno, on the shores of Lake Titicaca. War between the two nations would be a calamity, and we earnestly pray that it may be averted. It is believed the United States is trying to arrange a pacific solution of the difficulty.

Bolivia is a country of which the outside world knows but little. It is a country rich in minerals, chiefly tin, silver and copper, but its surface has only been scratched. A few years ago, religious liberty was proclaimed. But this action of a progressive government did not entirely break the despotism of the Roman Church. Liberty in Bolivia will exist in proportion as Protestant principles and ideals are disseminated by evangelical workers. Many of the Bolivians are still slaves to superstition and priestcraft. There is an increasing number of Christian workers in the country, all aiming at improving the education of the people and bestowing on them the gift of an open Bible and the message of free salvation which it proclaims. Last year I visited the three most active centres of Bolivia: La Paz, the actual capital; Oruro, the centre of the railway system now in construction, and Uyuni, the chief custom house centre for a great part of the country.

Oruro is a bleak, uninteresting, half-Indian, half-Spanish-speaking, mining town. Standing at an elevation of some 13,000 feet above sea level, it is a wild jumble of mountains, with a dreary, monotonous horizon. The only vegetation is a stunted grass, and the only trees are a few shrubs in the plaza, covered over from the night frosts. Everywhere along the hillsides can be seen prospectors' holes and deserted shafts. Above the town rises an artificial hill, where the tin mines have dumped vast upheavals of waste. Miners went there in quest of wealth, and many of them found it, and then departed to a more hospitable clime. While in Oruro we were kindly entertained in the missionary home of Rev. and Mrs. Charles Mitchell, of the Canadian Baptist Mission. It was a great and unexpected pleasure to address this native gathering, composed of Spanish-speaking Bolivians and Quichua Indians. A lasting memory was a small gift toward the circulation of the Bible in Bolivia, from a grateful convert.

The journey from Oruro to La Paz can now be made by train. On the way a few small Indian hamlets are passed. Quichua and Aymara Indians crowd into the train, with heavy bundles on their backs. It was evening as we reached the Alto of La Paz. All day long we had been traveling on the great elevations. The level rays of the sun were shining on the great central snow range of the Andes, lighting up Sorata, Illamani and Quimpsi Cruz, the highest peaks of the Bolivian Alps. Far below lies this wonderful sierra city of La Paz, beautiful for its name and its situation, with its churches and red-tiled roofs, and with almost nothing to disturb the solemn stillness.

Selling Bibles and Sacred Pictures in La Paz

La Paz in many ways is unique. It is nearly the quaintest city in all South America. As a city standing nearly 12,000 feet above the sea, with a population of some 83,000, it is easily the largest city in the world at this elevation and at the same time the world's highest capital. Its Indian population is unique. In the early morning the city is astir with Indians, cholos and Spanish-speaking Bolivians; the Indians are clad in all dazzling colors of bright red, yellow and blue. In the market place Indian women sit around, with their fruits and vegetables on the ground, arranged in little heaps, to be sold for a few cents a pile. Their little black-eyed, dusky children crawl about, playing with potatoes or anything that happens to be about. Groups of llamas lumber along, with more merchandise, to the peril of crawling babies, whose mothers rush to rescue them from trampling feet.

The spirit of progress is only beginning to stir the place from slumber. At the railway station the traveler is met by a group of sturdy Indian carriers, ready to carry your baggage for a trifle. The cargador is an indispensable factor in the carrying trade. Here everything is carried on his back. The cargador will pick up a trunk or a sack of flour on his back and start off at a jog-trot pace, up and down hill, faster than you can walk. A new arrival, panting for breath at this great elevation, looks with astonishment on this feat of strength, the result of the Indians' training back to the days of the Incas.

It was a Sunday morning of brilliant sunshine as we wended our way to the American Methodist School, where a small group of missionaries and a few Christian friends, gathered from many lands, meet for worship in the city of La Paz. In the group was an earnest Swede, a couple from Canada, several from the United States and a few from England and Scotland. There was a young Spaniard, who had studied in America, and a young Bolivian, who had married an American lady. In the evening we met for a Spanish service in another part of the city. We pick our way along crooked and narrow streets, stumbling over boulders and open sewers, until we reach the open door of the Salon Evangélica, or what does service for a Methodist Church in Bolivia. The two Spanish Protestant meetings had united, and the result was a good audience, as far as audiences go in this city, and an enthusiastic meeting of Bolivians, who were coming under the influence of an open Bible and the earnest teaching of evangelical Christian doctrine.

The workers in Bolivia represent the Canadian Baptist, the American Methodist Episcopal and a Pentecostal Church. The Bible Societies are also at work. Last year my colporteurs circulated 3,000 copies of the Word of God. God bless these distant and lonely workers, as they help to plant the standard of the Cross on the highest elevations of the Andes of South America!

The American Pulpit

A SERMON TO PARENTS

By Rev. J. W. Chapman, D.D.*

A Modern Home

TEXT—Ps. 27 : 10

"When my father and my mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up."

IT has been my pleasure, in many of the cities of our country, to preach a sermon entitled "An Old-Fashioned Home," the text for which I found recorded in the Second Book of Kings, twentieth chapter and fifteenth verse: "What have they seen in thy house?"

In this sermon I made an appeal for right living, for the family altar and for the re-establishment of all those influences that have made homes so sacred in the past. I endeavored as faithfully as I could, with the memory of my own mother influencing me, to picture a Christian mother, and tried to pay a tribute to the fathers who in days past have added strength to the household and whose memories are such that their children rise up and call them blessed.

In Fall River, Mass., at the conclusion of the preaching of this sermon, one of the pastors, Rev. Dr. Swift, came to me, saying, "Your message is all right for the man who is so fortunate as to have had such a home as you describe; but there sat near me this evening one who seemed utterly disconsolate, because such an experience had not been his." And then he said, "I think you ought to preach a sermon on the modern home, and, if you wish, I will give you a text." It is to Dr. Swift that I am indebted for the text for this sermon: "When my father and my mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up."

The Homes of Our Fathers

I am quite well convinced that many of the modern homes are as thoroughly filled with the Spirit of Christ as ever the homes of our fathers were; but I am also persuaded that what we need more than anything else is a better home life. Homes in which the fathers are the priests of the household and mothers are saints in the estimation of their children. Give us such homes as these, and the cities will be better, the churches will be stronger, and the whole world experience a spiritual uplift.

Years ago, when the English soldiers were fighting against their enemies, it was found that the Scotch laddies were dying in great numbers. The disease which carried them off baffled the skill of the best physicians, but at last they learned the secret in a strange way. It was found that the pipers, near by them, were playing the tunes that reminded them of the heather and the hills, and they were literally dying of homesickness. This is one side of the picture.

The other is the story of the man who came to me at the conclusion of a sermon, and said, "My mother died at seventy-six years of age, and, so far as I remember, she never kissed me. I never knew what a mother's love was, and, in all my life, I have never known the first touch of homesickness."

There is no greater heritage for us than the memory of homes founded in the fear of God and strengthened by his abiding presence. If we are to have such homes, the fathers must exercise their priestly functions. It is not possible for many men to be great, neither is it possible for very many to be rich; but it is possible for every man to be good and true, and if he lives such a life in the presence of his children that when he comes to the end of life's journey they can stand by his grave to say that they considered him more like Christ than any one else in the world whom they have known, then such a life is worth while. And it may be yours and mine.

The Mother Must Be True

If our homes are to be as God would have them, the mother must be true. She cannot be given to worldliness, and she must be thoroughly consistent. Mothers have always influenced for good or evil in a mightier way than any other person. James Whitcomb Riley expresses this when he writes:

> My mother she's so good to me,
> If I was good as I could be,
> I couldn't be as good, no sir;
> Can't any boy be good as her.

If our homes are to be as they should, then love must abide in every room. The atmosphere must be quiet and peaceful. To cross the threshold of such a home would mean to enter into blessing. It is for such an abode as this I plead. If our homes are as God meant them to be, then the moral atmosphere of them will always be mighty in its influence.

A Tribute to Good Mothers

I was in Northfield, Mass., one season, when I heard Dwight L. Moody pay this tribute to his mother. He had a number of his friends to go up with him to his mother's house, and, calling her out on the lawn, he said, "Gentlemen, this is my mother. It was she who put her arms around us when father died. It was she who made it possible for us to have even the small comforts of life, and when we were so poor that we scarcely had food to eat or fire to warm us it was she who protected us. All that is good in my life, I think, has come from her; and I have never come near Northfield that I have not found myself walking nervously up and down the aisle of the car, anxious to reach home, that I might see my mother."

There is no greater loss to an individual than to miss this out of his life, but if it has been missed, the case is not hopeless, for "when my father and my mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up."

Over in England, years ago, there lived a woman who was not cultured, neither was she ignorant. She was fairly well acquainted with books; but one book she knew well, and that was her Bible. Her devotional study of the Word of God was never neglected. Three times a day, morning, noon and night, she drew her children to her knees, and told them how to live. When she was dying, she said, as they crowded about her bed, "Children, when I am gone, sing a song of rejoicing, for I am going home." She was the mother of the Wesleys, and I would a thousand times rather be that mother and the memory she left than the one in the city of Philadelphia, who, when a little boy went home from our meetings and told her he had accepted Christ and asked her to pray for him, scoffed at him.

Our Duty to Our Children

Down in Kentucky there lived years ago a sweet-tempered, beautiful woman, illiterate in a way, as most of her neighbors were, but with all the virtue of a good mother. She did not know much about books, but she knew the Bible, and, with her little boy upon her knees, she told him wonderful stories. She knew little of science and art, but she knew nature, and she talked to her little son about the glories of God in the world. She had no knowledge of philosophy, but she told her boy that the meanest thing in the world was to be a liar or a hypocrite and the greatest thing was to be a good man. When he was nine years of age she died, but that boy was Abraham Lincoln, and he says that all he was he owed to his mother. And I would rather a thousand times be such a mother than be one who, in the social circle of life, taught her boy to play cards, permitted him to drink, or was unmindful of her influence over him.

I put these pictures over against the so-called mother who is devoted to the world and insensible to the approach of eternity, and ask, which will you choose and which would you prefer for your memory?

A boy in New York was about to be sentenced to Sing Sing, and when the judge asked him to say why sentence should not be passed upon him, said, "Oh, your honor, if I had only had a mother!" It is true that many a boy is supposed to have a mother when he is worse than motherless.

Homes are not what they should be until fathers and mothers realize the value of the souls of their children. Two years ago, in Arkansas, a man bought two hundred and forty-three acres of land for $200. In passing over it one day he found a crystal, which attracted him, and when he took it into a neighboring city he found that it was a diamond. He sold the farm for $36,000, but now you could not buy it for $1,000 an acre, so great is the value of it. For years it was in the possession of its owner, and he was insensible to its priceless worth; but this is nothing as compared with the worth of an immortal soul, and one never will be concerned about winning one's children to Christ until he realizes their value in the sight of God and also that the only hope for them is in Jesus Christ.

This is for all without discrimination. None too rich and none too poor, none too wise and none too ignorant, none too young and none too old. A street preacher in London, speaking on the blessing of the peacemakers, who were the children of God, gave an invitation to all who would accept him to come forward, and a little street urchin, with ragged clothes and dirty face, pushing his way to the front, holding his mother by the hand, speaking in the vernacular of the street said, "Say, boss, I would like to be one of them chilluns of God, if I am not too small, and," pointing back to his mother with his thumb, he said, "she would like to be one of them chilluns of God, if she is not too big." That is the beauty of it. The Eternal Life, Jesus Christ, is for all, and it is this that makes the home beautiful.

Two Homes Contrasted

The best way I know to teach my lesson is to give the picture of two homes. One has an old-fashioned father, like the man who came into his boy's room when he was dying to tell him that he would soon be with Christ, and the little fellow drew him on his knees beside the bed and said, "Father, don't you cry, for as soon as I see Jesus I will tell him that ever since I can remember you sought to bring me to him."

Such a father is unlike the one on the Mississippi River, with a great plantation, his million of dollars in the bank and his name spoken everywhere as a synonym of wealth and power. He came to his house to learn that his boy had fallen in front of a great reaping machine and was frightfully mangled. When the boy found that he must die, he said, "Father, I cannot die; you never told me how to die. You must pray for me"; but the father could not pray. Before the minister came, the boy was dead. And the father said he would give all he had if he could have him back, or if he could have offered one brief prayer.

There is a home where an old-fashioned mother presides like a queen. Thank God, some of us have, and others have had, old-fashioned mothers. Dear, old-fashioned, sweet-faced mother! Eyes in which the love-light shone, her brown hair threaded with silver, lying smoothly on the faded cheek; her dear hands, worn with much toil, gently guiding our tottering steps in childhood and smoothing our pillow in sickness, ever reaching out to us in yearning tenderness. Precious memory of an old-fashioned mother! It floats to us now, like the powerful perfume of some fragrant blossom. The music of other voices may be lost, but the entrancing memory of her will echo in our souls forever. Other faces will fade away and be forgotten, but hers will shine on until the light from heaven's portals shall glorify our own.

Influence of a Godless Home

The modern home is a home exactly the opposite from the one I have described. There is no family altar. There is no Bible. There is no Christian service. The father is like the man in a New Jersey city, whose boy was being sentenced to the penitentiary, and as the father passed his boy's chair he said to him, "Curse you! if you had trained me properly, I should not now be on my way to the prison." And the mother is like the one who came to me in an Ohio city and said, "Pray for my boy." She told me the sad story how her boy, a year before, asked her to go with him to church on a certain evening, for he was profoundly stirred and thought he would ecome a Christian, but she said, "I ad an engagement and could not go, it would go some time with him. God ty me, sir! He found out where the ngagement was. It was at a whist arty. I kept my engagement, but I st my boy. He has not been in urch for a year." Five years later, saw the minister and he told me that by had gone to destruction. The boy as still drifting. God pity the child ho has such a home! If you have issed the blessing in your home thus r, and if you have no memory of a hristian mother and a noble father, nen, when your father and your nother forsake you, the Lord will take ou up. He will be your light and our strength. He will be your salva- on.

And if you have failed as parents, nere is still hope. You may still lay old upon eternal life. "I once met thoughtful scholar," wrote Bishop Whipple. "He said that for years he ead every book that had assailed the eligion of Jesus Christ, and he would ave become an infidel but for three easons: 'First,' said he, 'I am a man. am going somewhere. To-night I m a day nearer the grave than I was st night. I have read all that such ooks can tell me; they shed not one ay of hope upon the darkness. They hall not take away the guide and eave me stone blind. Second, I had a nother. I saw her go down into the ark valley where I am going, and she eaned upon an unseen arm as calmly s a child goes to sleep on the breast f its mother. I know that she was ot dreaming. Third, I have three notherless daughters. They have no rotection but myself. I would they hould die rather than I should leave hem in this sinful world, if you blot ut from it the teachings of the Gospel.'"

So, parents, you had better turn to God. God will one day require your hildren at your hands, and it will be sad thing then if you stand before im and are unable to speak well con- erning them and your influence over hem.

CARNATION CELEBRATION

By Rev. J. M. FARRAR, D.D.*

THE Carnation holds the world's admiration. It was first found in southern Europe. Flower lovers have cultivated it for many, many years, because of its fragrance and beauty. Do you know the meaning of the name Carnation? We get the name Carnation from a Latin word that means flesh. The wild Carnation was flesh-colored. The beautiful pink color of a little child's flesh. Carnation, therefore, means flesh, or flesh-colored. It was once called a pink. By loving the Carnation a little, coaxing it a little, and pushing it a little, the florist has made it bloom in several colors.

THIS name Carnation will help you to remember the long word, "Incarnation." Take off the "in" and you have left "Carna- tion," the name of this flower. Put "in" back again, and you have "Incarnation." Now you have a new word, one you will never for- get. What does this long word mean? Carnation, you know, means flesh, and Incarnation, then, means in the flesh. The Incarnation of Christ means his life here on earth in the flesh; that is, in the body. "The Word was made flesh." "Word" is one of the names the Bible uses for Christ. "In the beginning was the Word." Christ came down from heaven, and lived in a flesh body like yours. He came as a little child, with beautiful pink cheeks. "Carnation," a flesh-colored flower; "Incarnation," the beautiful flesh-color, or body, in which Christ lived while on earth.

JUST think, isn't it great? The junior congregation knows what the minister means when he talks to the senior congregation about the "Incarnation of Christ." He means our Christ living in the flesh, living close to us, suffering with us, rejoicing with us, dying for us. The Bible calls Christ the "Rose of Sharon" and the "Lily of the Valley." We will also call him our "Carnation." I am glad the Bible tells us to think of Christ as being like a flower. He is just like a flower I read of last week. On one side of a gangway entering a coal mine grows a plant which is perfectly white. Vis- itors on seeing it were surprised that this little plant could be so pure and white, clean and sweet, with coal dust and dirt flying over it all the time. A miner took a handful of coal dust and threw it upon the plant. The coal dust fell off the flowers. There is some- thing like enamel on the white flower, to which the finest speck could not stick. There the flower lives, the one spot of beauty and purity amid a world of work and dirt. Christ became incarnate, lived in a body as we do, to show us how we can live and work in the dust and dirt of sin and still keep our body, mind and soul clean and sweet.

FLOWERS also help to make our lives clean and sweet. A young girl on a train gave a bunch of Carnations to a little cripple. The child held them to her lips and pressed them to her heart until she fell asleep. As the train neared her home, her father came in from another car. At the sight of his little one lying peacefully with her Carnations in her hand and her head against the stranger, he said, in a voice full of feeling, "I'm not a prayin' man, but, the Lord's blessin' rest on you for your kindness to my motherless child." The little girl roused as she was taken in her father's arms, and said, "I've been—in—heaven—pa; I've got—some—Carnations." The dear child, I hope some one told her about the "In-Carnation."

LOOK a little louder, please, through that tear! Now I hear. You say, "If I will tell you another story, you will remember all the sermon." Here, then, is the story. President McKinley loved the Carnation. It was the flower he wore in the buttonhole of his coat. Next Saturday, January 29, will be the sixty-seventh anni- versary of his birth. Millions of people each year, on January 29, wear a Carnation in memory of this great and good man. We there- fore call January 29 "Carnation Day." To-day we will call "Carna- tion Sunday." Our Carnation Celebration!

PRESIDENT McKINLEY was shot September 6, 1901, when visit- ing the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo. He died on Sep- tember 14, at the Milburn home. Three days before he died, a poor but sweet-faced old lady tried to get to the house to see Mrs. McKin- ley. She carried a bunch of old-fashioned garden posies, and had them tied with a faded pink ribbon. In this bouquet were many "hardy pinks," now called Carnations. A policeman stopped her near the rope that kept the crowd back from the house. "You can't go through, lady," said the officer, stepping in front of her. She stepped back trembling, and the tears began to flow as she said, "Will you be so kind as to give these flowers to Mrs. McKinley? They're from my own yard, and I've walked clear in from out near Grimesville to give them to Mrs. McKinley, with my love. Tell her that we are all praying out at Grimesville that her husband will get well."

IT is said at the Milburn home that, while there were bouquets of American Beauty roses here and there in the rooms, the bunch of old-fashioned posies from the woman from out Grimesville way, who prayed for the President, had the place of honor on her dresser. The Incarnation of Christ made the world wonderfully beautiful, fragrant and kind.

* Pastor First Reformed Church, Brooklyn. TEXT: "The Word was made flesh." John 1:14. On this day the children come with arms full of Carnations, and after the service they are sent to the children's ward of the hospital, and to any sick children known of to whom they can be sent.

"One Day in Seven"

THE Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has taken up the labor question, and in a notification just issued lays down the following principles as the platform of the churches represented in the Federa- tion:

First: The gradual and reasonable reduction of the hours of labor to the lowest practicable point, and that de- gree of leisure for all which is a con- dition of the highest human life. Sec- ond: A release from employment one day in seven. Third: A living wage as a minimum in every industry, and the highest wage that each industry can afford. The Federal Council's communication goes on to say:

"The Pittsburg survey revealed a state of industrial affairs in many re- spects surprising. In the steel mills, according to the report, the twelve- hour day prevailed. Twenty per cent. of the employees, or about 14,000 men in Allegheny County, worked twelve hours a day, seven days in the week. Full sixty per cent. of all employees were classed as unskilled, and paid 16½ cents an hour—not a living wage for a man with an average family. In the regions where these low-paid workmen were housed the drink evil was at its worst, and general morality at its lowest." The investigation also showed that many industries were run seven days in the week, wages be- ing set on a seven-day scale.

"The Commission calls the attention of the churches everywhere to this con- dition and the menace involved in it, and urges upon all Christian churches, through their pulpits, their Brother- hoods and various other organizations, to emphasize and bring home to their members their Christian obligation in these premises, namely, that it is the right of every man to have one day out of the seven for rest and recreation of body, soul and mind, and that it is the obligation of every Christian employer so to arrange his business that each of the employees may have one day holi- day in seven, without diminution of wages. The normal holiday is the Christian Sabbath, the Lord's Day; . . . it is the obligation of every Christian employer so to arrange his scale of wages that the living wage of his employees is calculated, not on a seven-day, but on a six-day, basis.

"It is the obligation of every Chris- tian employer, a part of the essential Christian teaching of the brotherhood of man, to pay every employee a living wage; that is, a wage on which not only the worker, but the average fam- ily, can live under proper sanitary con- ditions and with reasonable comfort. It is manifest that that industry which, employing its laborers six days in the week, compels them to work twelve hours out of the twenty-four does not give to those employees a proper opportunity for sane and healthy living. Family life, intelligent social intercourse with one's fellows, are impossible under such conditions. Such a condition is, we believe, con- trary to the dictates of the religion of Christ, and a menace to the well-being of the State. It is an obligation rest- ing upon Christian employers so to organize their industry that the em- ployee may have reasonable hours of labor."

A Consecrated Gift

A LADY reader of this journal (Mrs. J. P. L., of New York City) sends this touching letter:

"Enclosed please find a check for the Bowery Mission, in memory of my dear husband, who is spending his first Christmas in heaven. The last paper he had in his hands was THE CHRIS- TIAN HERALD."

This gift, from a bereaved one, will carry comfort and cheer to some who are homeless and helpless. Though those who are helped may never know the donor, their prayers and sympa- thies will go out toward her in her deep affliction.

OUR LEAST KNOWN MILLIONAIRESS

THE recent accident to Mr. Andrew Carnegie, who dislocated his kneecap by a fall on an icy footpath in Central Park, and the solicitude of his wife regarding the condition of the famous ironmaster-philanthropist, have indirectly focused public attention upon one of the least known of the world's wealthiest women. Mrs. Carnegie is considerably younger than her husband. It will be years before little Miss Carnegie, their only child, becomes of age.

That Mrs. Carnegie is the least known American millionairess, and the most retiring of the wives of the republic's most conspicuous citizens, is due entirely to her own attitude and inclination. She has been importuned, time and again, in every possible manner, to enter fashionable social life, feminine club activities and other spheres which engross the attention of many of her sex; but she has always given the same answer: that she prefers to make her home and her family the centre of her interests. But it must not be supposed from this that Mrs. Carnegie is in any sense narrow in her activities, her sympathies, or her appreciation of those things that to many people go far toward making life worth living. She has taken a most active interest in all her husband's public projects, and many of them, as carried out, represent her ideas quite as much as those which originated in the brain of the famous steelmaker. Moreover, she has traveled extensively, accompanying her husband on almost all his journeys, and every person who meets her is quick to realize her cleverness and the fact that she has as keen, if not a keener, sense of humor than her canny husband.

Mrs. Carnegie, who is now in her fifty-second year, is a native of New York City, which has always been "home" to her, notwithstanding the fact that she has acquired an affection for her husband's native town of Dunfermline, Scotland. As Louise Whitfield, the daughter of a prosperous wholesale merchant, she grew up in the metropolis, and quaint old Gramercy Park, close by her home, was her playground. The Carnegie and Whitfield families were old friends, and Andrew Carnegie and the merchant's daughter were good friends for years ere any thought of a tenderer relationship seems to have entered the head of either. The romance that culminated in their marriage began in 1879, when Mr. Carnegie returned from a trip around the world and found his girl friend transformed, in a comparatively brief space of time, into a most attractive woman, with just the right commingling of heart instincts and intellectuality to appeal to a man with his tastes and temperament.

However, it was not until eight years later, and following the death of the ironmaster's mother, that the two were united in marriage. Miss Whitfield was thirty and the groom fifty years old. The wedding was a very simple one, and conducted so quietly that it was a thing of the past ere even their relatives learned of the event. The honeymoon was spent on the Isle of Wight, and then the couple wer to Scotland, where they leased a castle, which the occupied for some ten years, or until Mr. Carnegi in 1897, purchased his now famous Skibo estate, an removed, with his wife and baby daughter Margare to the picturesque home where it has ever sinc been their wont to spend the interval from May t November of every year.

Mrs. Andrew Carnegie

Among her intimates, Mrs. Carnegie has the repu tation of being an ideal mother. Notwithstandin the demands upon her time by many house guest by a voluminous correspondence (much of it unin vited), and by elaborate housekeeping a rangements, which she personally supervise it is seldom that she finds it necessary t digress from her rule to give over the mornin hours of each day to her daughter Margare reading and talking with her, playing game and, if opportunity offers, riding, driving c walking. Mrs. Carnegie, like her husband, an enthusiastic disciple of the outdoor lif and a love for this healthful sort of existenc is being fostered in their only child. Mr Carnegie, however, does not go in for strem ous athletics, and she has no fads, unless passionate love for music may be considere as such. She has a strong preference for th music of the pipe organ, and she has been th inspiration of Andrew Carnegie's numerou and much-appreciated gifts of pipe organs t poor churches on both sides of the Atlanti In not a few instances, Mrs. Carnegie has he self paid the salary of a good organist, i order that the people of a poor congregatio might derive the fullest benefits from an o gan installed by her husband, or through h aid, as Andrew Carnegie, following his usua custom, prefers to contribute one-half to fou fifths the cost of the instrument, rather tha donate it outright.

Mrs. Carnegie's simplicity of taste extenc to dress, though it may be added that th simplicity is of that difficult-to-attain variet which involves the use of the richest material the most perfect harmony of colors and th most artistic general effect.

Mrs. Carnegie has her own personal char ties, quite apart from those to which her hu band gives so much of his time, and on severa occasions, in connection with her helpful wor on behalf of the tenants of the Skibo estat this naturally reserved and retiring Lad Bountiful has actually been induced to mak an impromptu public address.

WALDON FAWCETT.

A PIONEER, FINANCIER AND PHILANTHROPIST GONE

DARIUS OGDEN MILLS, one of the best known business men in America, a man of many remarkably successful enterprises and whose vast wealth has been the means of upbuilding many philanthropies, passed away in his California home at Milbrae, near San Francisco, on January 3.

Mr. Mills was born on September 25, 1825, in North Salem, Westchester County, N. Y., and was the fourth son of James and Hannah Ogden Mills. He was educated at the North Salem Academy and Mount Pleasant Academy. Even in boyhood his tastes ran to a business career. At seventeen he secured a clerkship in New York, and soon showed marked business capacity. A few years later he was appointed cashier of the Merchants' National Bank of Erie County, in Buffalo, where his ability soon induced the directors to offer him an interest in the concern. In 1848, just after the discovery of gold in California, two of his brothers, James and Edgar, sailed around the Horn for the land of gold, and he followed them. Arrived at San Francisco, he planned a trading expedition to Stockton, then the business headquarters of the Southern miners. This venture was successful. Next he went to Sacramento, where he began a regular business, selling general merchandise, buying gold-dust and trading in exchange on New York. He closed this business in November, 1849, and started back East, with $40,000 as the profits for his season's work. A few months later, with a partner named Townsend, he chartered a bark for the Sacramento trade and also sent a partial cargo in another vessel. He followed his ships to Sacramento. He founded the bank of D. O. Mills & Co. in Sacramento, and in two years owned the entire business.

The next ten years were marked by continuous success, and he became the leading banker in the State and one of the wealthiest citizens. Thus was laid the foundation of his vast fortune. Like all business men in that new country, he had occasionally to face unusual difficulties; but his tact and business acumen enabled him to overcome them, where others with less courage and ability would have gone under. In July, 1864, with several associates, he founded the Bank of California and became its president. In 1873, he resigned the bank presidency and retired from the directorate, leaving the bank in splendid condition. In 1875 the bank faced a crisis. Ralston, its president, was found dead in the bay, and Mills was again chose president. He reorganized the bank, and it wa due in large measure to his methods that it onc more regained its position as the leading financi institution on the Pacific Coast.

The Late Darius Ogden Mills

Mr. Mills now became engaged in various larg enterprises, including railroad construction, iro works, oil fields, lead mines, and the erection c many buildings in San Francisco and Sacrament He was also interested in many practical philan thropies, which included orphan asylums, hospital colleges, etc. At last he returned East, as he ha long intended, and transferred many of his interest to New York. Soon he engaged in new enterprise He constructed the well-known Mills Building, i the financial district, which when finished was sai to be the largest of office buildings. Few men even in this busy age, have been in so many an such varied activities. Amid this most active lif Mr. Mills always showed himself mindful of th call of charity, and his benevolences were many an generous. The entire list of his philanthropies wi probably never be known. He gave to New Yor City a building for a Training School for Mal Nurses. He erected the three great Mills Hotel for homeless men, personally supervising their con struction and planning their administration. H established a Provident Loan Society and a Cit Suburban Homes Company, both of them genuin benevolences and a substantial benefit to the work ing classes. His donations to various institution including the Metropolitan Museum of Art, an highly prized, and include sculptures, painting collections of gold coins, etc. He was a leadin patron and member of many artistic, benevolent an social organizations. The great fortune whic he honcrably accumulated he used to the bes advantage, doing good with it at every opportunity

Mr. Mills was a widower, his wife having died i 1888. Two children survive him, Ogden Mills an Mrs. Whitelaw Reid. His estate is valued at be tween $50,000,000 and $60,000,000.

THE SHIRTWAIST STRIKE NEARLY OVER

WHEN the women shirtwaist makers of New York first went on strike, some weeks ago, p ple outside of their immediate acquaintance read a ut it in the papers and then forgot it, thinking it w ld have the usual features of many other strikes, b settled, and the industrial East Side go on as b ore. A number of th gs soon happened, how- e r, which showed that t is was no ordinary s ike, but the biggest one v ich has yet been con- d ted by women in behalf o a women's working o ganization. It was re- r rkable, in addition to t dimensions it assumed, f the way in which the r mbers of the woman s frage societies lent their a l, and for the support g ven the striking girls by p minent New York so- c ty women.

Several picturesque ele- m nts, calculated to at- t ct attention to the c ims of the strikers, have b en introduced by Mrs. O H. P. Belmont, Miss A ne Morgan, daughter of J. Pierpont Morgan, the f ancier, and several o hers.

The employers have a tically conceded all d mands made by the s iking girls, except the r cognition of the union. D ring the first two weeks o the strike at least 1 ,000 were out. As this i ue goes to press there are 15,000 still on strike, t e rest having returned to work as a result of the c ncessions granted by the employers. Among the q estions already settled satisfactorily are wages a d time of employment.

The strikers started a newspaper, edited by some sympathizers, who had had college educations and gave their services free. These papers were sold by the strikers at the entrance to the subways and on the streets. The girls attracted much attention, as they wore wide white sashes over their shoulders.

Meeting of the Shirtwaist Strikers at Carnegie Hall, New York

Some of these girls had been arrested while acting as strike pickets, and the broad sashes bore inscriptions, evidently copied from the suffragettes of England, who have gloried in the number of times they were taken in by the strong arm of the law.

The woman suffragists of New York have taken an active part in the strike, in the hope that they could, as a result of their efforts, bring the women of the East Side to support the movement of "votes for women." Mrs. Belmont has made herself very popular with the shirtwaist-makers.

One of the largest and most enthusiastic meetings gotten up by the strike sympathizers was held in Carnegie Hall. Four thousand people were in the audience. A woman was chairman of the meeting, but both men and women spoke, among them Martin W. Littleton, who is prominent in city politics.

There was much denunciation of the city magistrates, who had sentenced some of the strikers to the workhouse, but the report issued by an unprejudiced committee, appointed to investigate the strike, says that the judges were most lenient, and in fact favored the girls whenever it was possible to do so, and only sentenced them when they violated the law in such a manner that the judges had no alternative to sending them to jail. The meeting, however, adopted a resolution denouncing the magistrates.

The struggle now seems drawing to a close, with the question of union recognition still open. It seems probable that the girls of the organization will not be able at present to drive out of their positions the non-union workers, and that some shops will have many of the latter in their employment. The organization, however, continues unimpaired.

The President's Niece Wedded

BLOCKING the way from Washington, the great storm prevented President Taft from coming to New York to speak at the gathering of economists and historians, but fortunately the tracks were cleared in time for him to reach the metropolis to attend what was of much more importance to him personally, the wedding of his niece, Miss Louise Walbridge Taft, to Mr. George H. Snowden on the evening of Thursday, December 30.

Miss Louise Walbridge Taft in Her Wedding Gown

The Taft family, in its several branches, has been noted for loyalty to family ties, and there has been a constant interchange of visits between the family of the President and the families of his brothers, to whom the Chief Magistrate is never an awe-inspiring personage, but jolly "Uncle Will," as his nephews and nieces call him. In the family gatherings no one is more eager to add to the pleasure of the occasion than the President himself.

The romance, although both bride and groom are quite young, dates back a number of years. In fact, they were friends when young Snowden was in his teens, preparing to enter Yale, and with no thought that the young girl who made such a delightful companion would some day be his wife.

At Yale Mr. Snowden became the chum of Miss Taft's brother. As Mr. Snowden's home was in Seattle, too far away to be reached except during the long summer vacations, he frequently passed the shorter holidays at the home of his chum. After he completed his college course he went to Seattle to take up the lumber business, in which his father had made a fortune. He found opportunity, however, to make trips now and then to the East, and always saw Miss Taft before he returned.

Last year Miss Taft and her mother went abroad, and Mr. Snowden also went over to the Continent for a tour. It was also noted by those who were the most observing that when there was a jolly house party at the White House in Washington, if Miss Taft was present Mr. Snowden was likely to be there, consequently there was little surprise when the date of the wedding was announced.

After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Snowden started on a brief wedding tour in this country before sailing for Egypt. The driver of the car which took the bride and groom to the railroad station was young Mr. Taft, disguised in cap and goggles, but the happy pair did not know it. They will make their home in Seattle.

The White Slave Traffic

JUDGE O'SULLIVAN, of the Court of General Sessions of New York, has empaneled a grand jury for the specific purpose of investigating the "white slave traffic." At the head of this body, as foreman, is Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., son of the well-known Standard Oil magnate. In recent years young Mr. Rockefeller has served frequently as a grand juror. When he was informed that he had been drawn as foreman he immediately requested that he be excused from accepting such a responsible position, as he felt that he had not sufficient experience and, besides, his general health was not equal to the task of such an investigation.

Judge O'Sullivan replied that he had chosen him for this important work because of his standing in the community and because he believed the young man owed this patriotic service to the city. In charging the jury the judge urged upon them the necessity of a thorough inquiry, in order that facts might be brought to light concerning the traffic in question and that it might be shown whether New York City was in reality a clearing-house for an organized traffic in immorality. He believed that the existing penal law was adequate to punish offenses of this class, and it was not necessary for the city authorities to wait for Federal action, or new legislation, to deal with the situation.

Mr. Rockefeller, Jr., who is now in his thirty-third year, has been engaged in active religious work ever since he reached the age of manhood. He was graduated from Brown University, married in 1901, and is associated with his father in many large business enterprises. He resides at No. 13 West Fifty-fourth Street, New York City. His Bible class for men, at the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, has been a notable feature in the religious work of the church for a number of years past, and his weekly talks, which are marked by sound evangelical truth and practical common sense, have been widely quoted.

The Nation's Moral Uplift

ON every hand the New Year has opened auspiciously for Christian work. In all the denominations there is an unwonted and inspiring activity. Everywhere the churches are earnestly discussing the great question of Christian unity—the removal of those ancient barriers that have hitherto prevented general co-operation for the spiritual and material good of the whole. The Laymen's Convention, which opened in New York January 14, with a phenomenal attendance, is demonstrating to the world the unanimous desire of the Christian rank and file for a union of forces in the missionary field. Pastors in our leading churches are freely discussing the practicability of carrying the principles of the Master into politics and trade. Consecrated gifts for the advancement of Christ's kingdom at home and abroad were never so large as now. Vast wealth of private treasure is being laid at the foot of the cross. Almost every municipality of consequence is getting into line for a moral and physical reformation of the sort that aims to put a check on public immorality, drunkenness, civic oppression, unsanitary conditions and bad politics generally. It is a time of moral house-cleaning, and we pray that the purification may be deep and lasting.

Nor is the uplift confined to any particular class, for we see even among our statesmen the growing trend toward practical Christianity. Conviction is growing that a clean, wholesome, progressive nation can be none other than a Christian nation. We confess to a feeling of optimism, while looking over the field, while the year is still in its infancy. We see on every side so many tangible evidences of the right spirit: greater consideration for the worker, and for all who are dependent; increased respect for civic, State and national morality; a larger humanitarianism, a firmer hold of the great central truths in the teachings of Jesus.

We are growing—growing. It is undeniable that the seed has been sown which, under divine blessing, is to result in a rich harvest of national uprightness, purer politics and better fraternal relations between man and man than we have yet experienced. And let us not forget that in all this transformation which is taking place there is no need for even the thought of a "new religion." There are no new, mysterious forces at work. It is the plain old Gospel that is leavening the mass—the only power that has ever been known to give such an uplift and accomplish such a transformation.

Why Ministers Fail

AMERICA'S leading evangelist, Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, in a recent address before an audience composed largely of preachers, took for his topic "Why Some Ministers Fail." His conclusions may interest a considerable proportion of the 146,500 Protestant pastors in this country, as they express the convictions of a man of extensive experience and with the best opportunities for observation.

First, Dr. Chapman held that one cause of failure is because preaching has largely become a profession, instead of "a passion for souls." Second, the method of approach is too often by the head instead of the heart. Third, in too many pulpits the Bible is no longer held as authoritative, and the Gospel of Jesus Christ is not proclaimed as the hope of a sinful world. Fourth, too many pastors have lost the evangelistic note. Fifth, too many are afraid to utter the truth authoritatively, lest they offend either the church officials or some of the congregation. Sixth, there is too little private pastoral devotion. "Every minister," says Dr. Chapman, "should come from his knees to the pulpit."

It should be noted that spiritual, and not material, growth and expansion is set down as the true criterion of success in the pastorate. A church may be rolling in riches, with the finest edifice and the most gorgeous equipment, and an eloquent and popular pastor, and yet be spiritually starving. It may have a large fashionable attendance, and still be stricken through with dry-rot and indifference. Like some other churches, it may be one in which the pastor preaches year in and year out to the same company of people, without a solitary conversion, or the slightest spiritual ripple to disturb the stagnation.

Happy the church whose pastor is filled with the Spirit, and zealous for souls; whose pulpit sets all else aside as vain and profitless, that it may present Jesus as the light of the world and the Saviour of men, and whose people are active in every good work and continually laboring with every art, skill and resource at their command to bring others into the kingdom. A church of this kind can never fail.

A Scientist's Forecast

ALTHOUGH Mr. Edison is somewhat of a scientific recluse, he occasionally emerges from his laboratory long enough to say something, and it is usually worth listening to. He has been looking into the future lately, and he sees, a few generations ahead, some wonderful inventions and discoveries that are going to make life easier and happier. He foresees economical devices for saving much of the eighty per cent. of fuel energy that is now wasted in coal consumption; the widespread utilization of waterfalls and tides as power-generators; the use of sun engines as heat and energy-producers, and even the harnessing of the earth's interior fires, as they issue through artesian wells, geysers and steaming volcanoes, to become agents in the world's work. Turning to food, he says there is nothing better in sight than good, honest, nourishing farm products. Chemical or artificial foods cannot compare with nature's food. In a couple of centuries, automatic machinery and advanced farming will produce food so abundantly that the workingman's table in 2100 A.D. will be as varied and appetizing as that of the Astors and Vanderbilts to-day. All of which is very comforting and encouraging. But the Menlo Park philosopher drops in a wise word edgewise at this point when he warns society to stop whisky drinking, "which is like throwing sand in the bearings of a steam engine," which observation will strike most people as being worth more than a bushel of scientific speculations dealing with conditions two hundred years ahead.

IF one takes up a school geography of a generation ago, and compares it with one of the current year, he will find that the business of an explorer has been one of the most active during the last few decades. The map of Africa in the older book shows a continent with a few cities and towns marked along the northern coast, no more and no less than were known to the makers of maps several centuries ago. In South Africa a few rivers and towns were marked, but the greater portion marked as desert or unexplored. Parts of our own United States were imperfectly known, and many thousand square miles were marked "the Great American Desert," land which we now know to be among the most fertile of this favored country. So it was in many parts of Asia. Tibet was almost an unknown word, and there are geographies not old in which that country is not even mentioned. The poles were dreams of the mentally unbalanced.

The recent action of the British people to pay $100,000 toward the expenses of the Scott expedition to discover the South Pole brings forcibly to mind the fact that there is now little left but the South Pole to bring fame to the searcher for new places. Now they are building railroads through the entire length of the Dark Continent, every nook and corner of the United States has been reached, intrepid travelers are covering what little unexplored territory there is in Asia, and in Tibet missionaries of the Cross are already spreading the message of the Gospel.

The new expedition to the South Pole will start in July. Captain Scott, its leader, is an officer in the British navy, and was in charge of a previous expedition in 1900 and 1904. He won by his discoveries medals from the Royal and the Scottish Geographical Societies. He reached 82 degrees 17 minutes south. A relief expedition was sent out to help him return home. Lieutenant Ernest H. Shackleton went farther in 1908-09, reaching a point within one hundred miles of the South Pole. He was knighted as a reward for his efforts. There seems little doubt of the success of the present expedition, and all wish Captain Scott success and a safe return, with a knighthood like Sir Ernest Shackleton's as a permanent reminder of work well done.

Church Work in Winter

ONE would think that church work would flourish best in summer, when storms are few, roads clear and days long. Just the contrary is the fact. In winter, the season of cold and sleet, of deep drifts and driving gales, every department of church work is at the fullest swing of activity. Prayer meetings, revivals, Young People's Societies, missionary reunions, pertaining each and all to the spiritual side, at this time call people into their circles of warmth and radiance. Fairs, bazaars and suppers, concerts and lectures, and other entertainments having especially to do with the social life of the church choose the winter for their development. Naturally, in winter families are drawn closely into union at home, while in summer there is more scattering apart. The evenings are long, although the days are short, and perhaps it is as well that churchgoers should forego the fireside, and, trampling temptation under foot, sally forth to the church home. And, by the way, the phrase "church home" is very attractive. The church that is a refrigerator, the church that is given over to cliques, the church that fosters clans, and, to its shame, permits the existence of class distinctions, can never lay claim to the sacred name of home.

GENERAL NOTES

—"THE CHILDREN'S PULPIT" will be conducted in the regular issues of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD every week, by the Rev. J. M. Farrar, D.D. These sermonettes deserve to be read in every home.

—MR. ROOSEVELT has achieved the distinction of discovering a new animal in Africa, hitherto unknown to the scientists. It is called Otocyon vergates, and is a small carnivorous mammal, closely resembling a fox. Vergates means "striped."

—THERE IS A probability that the steamer Roosevelt, lately commanded by Peary on his polar trip, may be commissioned to carry an expedition in search of the South Pole some time this year. Donald M. B. McMillan, formerly with Peary, and Captain Robert Bartlett, who commanded the Roosevelt, may be at the head of the expedition. Both are veterans in polar exploration.

— A NATIONAL ANTI-TRUST League has been formed in Washington, D. C., which proposes a national boycott of those combinations that increase the cost of living, in other words, stopping the use of such articles or commodities as have soared in price, until they come down to a reasonable figure. The plan is said to have been tried in Germany with considerable success a few years ago.

— JUSTICE OF THE PEACE JOHN D. FRISBIE, of Hillsdale, Mich., resigned his position last week. In his letter of resignation to the mayor, he gave this reason for his act: "County prohibition, local option, no drinks, no vagrants, no disorderlies, no business to make the office desirable or profitable." There is something here which other local authorities may find it worth while to consider.

— THAT GRAND old sea-fighter and lover of fair play, Admiral Schley, adopts THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S view of the Polar controversy when he says that in the interest of justice the University of Copenhagen should now pass on Commander Peary's proofs as it did on those of Cook. It is not to be overlooked that the responsibility for the popular acceptance of Dr. Cook, in the first instance, rests wholly with Denmark, whose University Committee at the first interview declared itself satisfied. This was before any data whatsoever had been submitted.

Crowds Waiting in Front of the White House to Greet the President

Naval Officers Going to the White House Reception

President's New Year's Reception

THE annual New Year's reception, held at the White House on January 1, was a most delightful affair. At eleven o'clock the President nd Mrs. Taft, preceded by Colonel Spencer F. osby, Captain A. W. Butt and the other military nd naval aids of the President, came down the main taircase and entered the Blue Room, while the Marine Band, after the bugle call, played "The Star-pangled Banner." The reception committee was ot as large this year as usual, being confined to he members of the Cabinet, their wives, and mem-ers of the Taft family and a few intimate friends. The ambassadors were at the front of the line. The distinguished representatives of the various na-ions and their wives, clothed in the costumes of heir countries, some of them dazzling with Oriental splendor, made a spectacular introduction to the ong line of New Year's callers that followed. Next ame the members of the Supreme Court, Justice Moody being the only one of the judges absent. Then came the United States Senators and mem-ers of Congress. Speaker Cannon had seemed to forget about the reception and came in about half n hour late, but was warmly received. Then came he military and naval delegations, General Miles being among them; then the assistant chiefs of the governmental departments, and then members of he patriotic organizations; and at one o'clock the general public was admitted, and for over an hour he line filed past the President. The counting ma-hine at the White House recorded the fact that the President actually shook hands with 5,575 people during the time. At the same time he was shaking hands with his friends and our friends across the sea. Emperor William, King Victor Emmanuel, and the new King of Belgium sent New Year's tele-grams to President Taft, who cabled congratulations.

How appropriate it is that the Happy New Year should follow the Merry Christmas time! All of the joy at the White House, all of the good will of the nations, as voiced by their rulers; all of the happi-ness of homes and of individual hearts, which we emphasize the first day of the year, are only the reflections of that peace and good will which Jesus brought to man and of which the angel spoke to the shepherds at the advent.

Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. (Luke 2: 10.)

Hanged Innocent Man

On September 25, 1903, Samuel T. Ferguson was murdered near Washington, Pa. Milover Kovovic was convicted of the murder and was hanged. Mil-over Patrovic was convicted as being an accessory to the crime, and was sent to the penitentiary for twenty years, where he is now serving out his sen-tence. The horrible fact has just been revealed that the man who was hanged for the crime had nothing whatever to do with it, according to the confession of Joseph Vastello, a prisoner in the Moundsville, W. Va., penitentiary, which he made to G. G. Daw-son, captain of the guards. He said: "I want to tell you something I have had on my mind for a good many years. I cannot keep the terrible secret any longer. It was I and two foreigners who killed contractor Samuel T. Ferguson, and the man they hanged and the one who is serving twenty years for that crime are innocent. I knew that Ferguson had money, and that he was to make a certain trip. I hung the wires on the bridge and put the charge of dynamite in the place over which I knew he had to pass, and I blew him into the other world." He im-plicated two foreigners, who had returned to their native land. He said that the misery which he had endured in his heart was more than he could bear, and he would rather suffer the death penalty itself than the remorse which had tortured him. The re-morse of Joseph Vastello reminds us of the agony of the first murderer as God visited upon him the pen-alty of his crime.

My punishment is greater than I can bear. (Gen. 4: 13.)

Protection Against Automobiles

A new automobile law in New York, which went into effect the first of the year, provides a penalty of $100 fine, or six months imprisonment, or both, for any one convicted of such driving as endan-gers life, or running away after his car has inflicted injury. Under the old law no offender, however out-rageous, could be imprisoned except for a third con-viction of recklessness or over-speeding. It had got-ten to be an ordinary occurrence for a chauffeur to run down and kill men, women or children on the street and then run away to conceal his identity, and it had got to be that special detectives had to be put on each case to find the criminal. Now a man runs himself into the prison door when he attempts to get away from any personal damage he has done to another. None will rejoice more at these laws against the reckless injury and killing of people than the owners of automobiles, who believe in law and order or have the least spark of humanity in them. Our modern laws against wrongdoing of all kinds have their foundation in the eternal jus-tice which God reveals through Moses and echoes through his prophets, which provides punishments suited to the crime.

And they shall bear the punishment of their iniquity. (Ezek. 14: 10.)

Ambassador Bryce on Missions

The convention of the Student Volunteer Move-ment, held at Rochester, N.Y., was a memorable one. The total number of volunteers who have sailed for mission fields since the beginning of the movement, in 1886, is 4,346. The students of the colleges are now giving $127,000 a year toward the missionary work in foreign lands, an increase in four years of nearly 60 per cent. The young men at Yale give $10,000 a year, and the young women of Vassar $3,400 a year to the world's evangelization. The British Ambassador, James Bryce, made an address, which ought to be read by the followers of Christ throughout the world. He reminded his audience that nine-tenths of the habitable earth was under the control of so-called Christian powers, "and though vast multitudes remain non-Christian there is scarcely a spot in which the influence of the white race is not felt, and in which the uncivilized and semi-civilized native peoples are not being pene-trated by the ideas and habits of those more advanced nations. Mr. Bryce spoke of the harm done among un-Christian peoples by members of the Christian nations, who disregard the teaching of their religion, and then described the unprecedented power among English-speaking peoples to draw men to the pursuit of wealth and enjoyment. The close of the address was an exhortation to live in the true Gospel spirit. The ambassador only did as Mr. Gladstone often did, repeated the injunction of his Lord and Master to resist the worldliness and mam-monism of the times in sanctifying the every day affairs of life with the deepest spirituality.

Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven. (Matt. 5: 16.)

War on Opium

Every true American ought to feel proud of the stand the United States Government has taken with reference to the opium traffic in the Philippine Isl-ands. It has prohibited the opium traffic there abso-lutely, and made its use in any form and the pos-session of it by any person a crime. At the same time its medical use, under rigid restrictions, is per-mitted. The officers claim that the law is enforced to the letter, and they are determined to prevent the introduction of the drug into the islands by smug-gling. Those who thought that the law would be lightly enforced were fined and imprisoned, and later the fine was omitted and imprisonment was the penalty. The money interest the government has in the opium trade has retarded its abolition in India, and the Chinese are having a hard time in their determination to destroy the traffic in the ten years' limit set for that work. The action of the American government in the Philippines is a splen-did example to set to the world, for no language can describe the intense suffering and the complete wreckage of body, mind and soul that is involved in the opium habit. The torture and ruin of the opium habit are suggested by the locusts which John described on the Isle of Patmos.

And they had tails like unto scorpions, and there were stings in their tails: and their power was to hurt men. (Rev. 9: 10.)

Squirrels Carry Bubonic Plague

There is great local and national alarm at the danger of the spread of the bubonic plague on the Pacific Coast. Rats brought this dreadful Indian plague in ships to California, in the fleas which were on their bodies. These rats communicated the fleas to the ground squirrel, and from these animals the plague has for six years been almost imper-ceptibly disseminated until there is a territory of six hundred miles around San Francisco which is affected with this virus. Out of nine persons re-cently attacked by the plague, seven died, and the Department of Agriculture, the experts of the Public Health and Marine Hospital Service and officials of the Biological Survey are busy trying to check the disease. The trouble began six years ago, when a man shot a ground squirrel, which he put in his pocket; fleas from that squirrel bit him and gave him the plague, from which he died, and from these squirrels can be traced most of the cases of the infection. There is a wholesale destruction of the squirrels, as there was of the rats, and most swift and heroic action will be necessary to prevent a blight of the far West, and perhaps of other sections of the country, that will be appalling. The Founder of Christianity fought the diseases of men's bodies as well as of their minds and souls, using the phys-ical cures as an introduction to, and evidence of, the spiritual health which he brought. The science and institutions which Jesus Christ has instituted for the cure of diseases are but the echo of his voice, when upon earth, to the man sick of the palsy.

Arise, take up thy bed, and go unto thine house. (Matt. 9: 6.)

AROUND THE HOME HEARTH

Modern Murder of the Innocents

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

NO name in history excites greater loathing than that of Herod, who, in his desire to destroy the infant Prince whose advent he dreaded, ordered a wholesale slaughter of the babes in Bethlehem and the adjoining parts, from two years old and under. One may easily imagine the dread and dismay of the Judean mothers when the ruthless soldiers of Herod forced their way to the cradles of the babes and thrust their dripping swords into those helpless breasts. Yet infamous as Herod was, he has modern successors before whom his wickedness pales. It is said on good authority that two hundred and fifty out of every thousand infants born in the large cities of America perish between their first and their fifth year, and that in New York City alone infant mortality reaches two hundred and seventy-five deaths in each thousand. The chief cause for this alarming state of things is impure milk. As milk is the earliest food of infancy, and as it enters into the composition of food for the family, for the grown people as well as for the children, it is of the greatest importance that the milk supply should be of the best. No other food affords such easy opportunity for the lodgment and rapid growth of malevolent bacteria. No other food is so imperatively demanded by every household. The desire to make money is a temptation that assails various people who have to do with the conveyance of milk from the farm to the consumer. It may be robbed of its rich cream and the skimmed product further weakened by the addition of water. It may be delayed in transit or exposed to germs from the barnyard before it is placed in cans or bottles. The greatest danger, however, may be summed up in a single word—dirt.

In dairies where entire cleanliness is the rule, the cows are scrubbed and cleansed daily, and are groomed until their coats shine. Their sides and udders are perfectly clean. Those who perform the office of milkers are compelled to be immaculate as to clothing and hands, and rigid daily inspection keeps every one concerned up to a point of entire spotlessness. Milk bottled under such conditions and sent directly to the consumer is wholesome milk and will not kill children, but the millions of gallons of milk consumed in a great city daily do not all come from the well-known dairies that are synonyms for advanced ideas. Large quantities of milk are sent to the towns from places to which chemical analysis is unknown, and in which notions of fastidious delicacy as to the cleansing of cows and the washing of hands are, to say the least, rudimentary.

Meanwhile, the babies starve because they are fed with milk that has been robbed of its nutriment or loaded with germs that assail the stomach and bowels. An idolized baby dies of cholera infantum; so reads the doctor's certificate. The babe has really died of impure milk acting upon it as a virulent poison. A fair young girl, or a man in his prime, dies of diphtheria or typhoid fever. Parents bow the head in resignation, and fancy that the disease came in the ordering of Providence. It came, of course, by the permission of Providence, but as the direct result of broken law, and in many cases easily traceable came from carelessness in the food supply or in the supply of milk on the table.

Not long ago an epidemic of typhoid fever in a State insane asylum, not three hours' distant from New York City, was attributed to criminal neglect of proper precautions on the part of those who milked the cows in the dairy which gave the milk supply to the institution.

If we could have pure air, pure water and pure milk for the babies, both in city and country, there would be fewer little graves in the cemetery and fewer mothers wearing their hearts out in grief over empty cribs.

Our Decaying Trees

The Department of Forestry has had its attention recently called to a pest that is preying upon thousands of our most beautiful native trees. When a splendid tree—oak, chestnut or maple—shows signs of dying at the top, look for the trouble near the roots of the tree. A destructive grub, multiplying by millions, has found its way into this country. It must be fought and exterminated, and we are told that, for the purpose, another grub, an enemy to the first, has been imported. It behooves those who possess fine trees to care well for them. State entomologists are doing what they can. A house may fall to ruin and be rebuilt in a few months, but generations are required for the production of magnificent trees.

TIRED WITH PLAY

Here's little Marie so tired with play,
She's fallen asleep in the morn of the day.
Dollie, whom lately she held in her lap,
Now tucked in her cradle, is taking a nap.

THE LENGTHENING DAYS

WEEK by week the days grow longer,
Hour by hour the sun is stronger;
Winter soon shall pass away,
Birds return with breath of May.
In the trees the sap is stirring,
Wings of bees will yet be whirring
Through the blossom-scented air,
Though to-day the boughs are bare.
Storm and chill and frost and snow
Rage while wild northeasters blow,
But in bright and sunny weather
We shall all be glad together,
When the soft spring rains are here
And again the flowers appear. EVA IRELAND.

The Children's Bedtime

WHEN shall little people go to bed? After they leave the nursery, and between the ages of 6 and 12, when they are growing fast and need plenty of sleep, boys and girls should be in bed soon after eight o'clock. To allow a growing child the freedom of choosing his or her bedtime, with permission to stay up until sleepy, is a mistake. Children very much enjoy remaining with their elders in the evening, and they sometimes feel aggrieved when obliged to say good-night when the clock strikes eight. Later, they will reap the benefit of the long, quiet night, when sleep came the moment their heads touched the pillow. Children who retire early are wide awake early in the morning, and do not need to be called several times. During the first three or four years of life an afternoon nap is indispensable to a child's good health and temper. A child of high-strung, nervous temperament is the better for a daytime nap until the age of seven. A trained nurse, speaking of the difference between children in households where she was employed, said that those who were brought up by rule were uniformly in better health and were better behaved than those who were allowed to sit up until ten or eleven at night. It may be added that the beauty sleep of young girls, and the sleep that makes for health and vigor when young men are in their teens, must be taken before midnight. "Sleep that knits up the raveled sleeve of care" is a boon straight from heaven, and if we would enjoy it fully we must not scorn the old-fashioned rule of "early to bed and early to rise."

How to Read the Bible

When we read the Bible in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and ten there are two or three things that we ought to remember. The Bible is the inspired Word of God. It was written by holy men of old, who spoke as they were moved by the Holy Spirit. The Bible was not written all at once. In itself it is a library composed of many books, the work of many authors, extending over many centuries. In, for example, the wars of Israel with the Canaanites we must not forget that we are reading of primitive peoples, in a period very different from our own, and that the chronicles were made by writers who used Oriental phrases and were often poetic in their treatment of their subject. War in all ages is hideous in cruelty, and in modern as in ancient times has been carried on without regard to pity or humanity. Since the Prince of Peace came to the earth to bring in a reign of good will, a different spirit has come into the conflicts of nations. There has been care for women and children, and less wholesale cruelty than in ancient times, but the years of God move slowly. The day will yet dawn when peace shall reign from sea to sea.

In reading any chapter in the Bible anywhere between its covers the believer in God, the child of the heavenly Father, will always find some word of comfort or help if the Bible is approached as the Book of God.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—EMILY X. I cannot define the duties of a nursery governess. In a general way, they include most of the care of the small people during the daylight hours. The governess is not precisely a nursemaid, yet in some families she performs the work of one. Why do you not prepare yourself to be a kindergartner? The time devoted to acquiring the training would not be wasted, and as you have a little money, and can afford to wait before entering the ranks of wage-earners, this study will be a good investment.

THE STRAWBERRY HANDKERCHIEF

A TALE OF COLONIAL DAYS IN OLD NEW YORK

BY

THESE general conditions had numerous individual aspects. The party which supported the King, ad which considered an Act of Parliaent in the light of a divine decree, re indignant at those who dared to ticise the one and defy the other. Inancial ruin stared them in the face; in, which was the deliberate work of crowd of fanatics, whose principles ey abhorred, and whose punishment ey ardently desired. They were curtled in their enterprises and even in eir pleasures by a public sentiment hich at first they despised, but which ey soon found themselves compelled obey. There was open discussion many families, and friends of a lifetime ceased to know each other.

For every man—no matter what side had taken—was hurt in the most nsitive part of his life: his business as assailed. And his business represented his honor, his civic standing, e comfort of his home and family, s individual importance. Yet the ponents of the Stamp Act were awing every burgher into their own iserable condition—they were ruing the trade of the city; and the merants, one and all, no matter what ey thought of the Act, must suffer d fall together.

In this general insurrection of feelg, the women struck a dominant te. They made no secrets of their imosities; they regarded no civilities their disputes. If any of their sex peared in clothing of English quality d make, the lash of their tongues d scorn of their manner was quite restrained. They made it a disgrace wear anything but clothes of home anufacture, and every luxury of the ilet and table which represented nglish workmanship was rigorously andoned. Any one can perceive that woman had in this wide-open field ery weapon she could desire; and ubtless many a social grudge and fense found in the compulsions of the tamp Act comforting reprisals. It as the moving spring of every word nd action. Wherever two or three en were gathered together, they were couraging each other in their resistnce to the Stamp Act. Wherever omen were busy spinning and weavg, they were almost certain to have oth public and private reasons for eir enthusiasm.

But these men and women were of e heroic caste. Clothed in homepun, they were clothed in immortaly; for never surely will there be a eneration of American or English reemen forgetful of these noble tradrs, sitting in their silent stores and acing ruin for the sake of that eathless element of Liberty's Magna harta, "No taxation without repreentation." They were American Hampdens, standing for the same rinciple that carried the English Hampden into the battlefield. It was nly twenty shillings in the English ase, it was only three pennies in the merican case; but neither English or Americans were beguiled by the mallness of the imposition. They new that it was the open door for ppression, boundless in extent and ndless in duration.

Thus the summer of A.D. 1765 passed tumultuously away. The beautiful young city, round whose virgin zone

The rivers, like two mighty arms, were thrown, was bathed in her usual bright sunshine, and the same cool winds stirred the leaves of the poplars, and dappled the pavements on which the gravely anxious or angry citizens sat, or stood, talking. But, oh, the change in the once busy, cheerful streets! A few months ago they had been crowded with drays and wagons and vehicles of every kind, and the air resonant with all the sounds of commerce and humanity; now they were so silent that the guffaw of some idle negro teamster sent an echo through them. For it must be remembered that more than two hundred of the largest business houses had signed the agreement to import no English goods until the Stamp Act was repealed—their stores were practically closed, and their ships rocking idly at their piers.

"They encouraged each other in their resistance"

The men themselves had suffered a noticeable change. In place of their rich broadcloth, silk hosiery, and fine linen, they were dressed in homemade jeans, or woolen cloths, and home-knit stockings. No powder was on their hair, no lace on their linen; no English chains or fobs or rings were visible. The princely merchants of a few months previous had become, in appearance, the frontier pioneers; and the luxuries of fashion and civilization lay unasked for in the closed stores of the silent city.

The women fairly followed suit; though with many some darling luxury was kept against all advices and upbraidings. Thus Virginia Van Vroom would not give up her English shoes. She declared homemade shoes lamed her, and she really walked in them with such evident distress that her feet were perforce excused the mortifications that other portions of her toilet gave her. It was a hard time both for men and women, that summer of 1765, and when Colonel Rutgers passionately called the English government "a desolating power," New York City was sufficient evidence of the truth of his assertion.

Yet, in the midst of all this calamity, lovers found every opportunity they desired. The anxiety, the suspense, the watching for news, the Governor's anger, the tittle-tattle of private hatreds, the injustice of public wrongs, were all food for the voracious little god. They were a kind of bitters that whetted his appetite for the sweets of confidence and affection. Lovers had always some new tale to tell, some wrong against which they could effectively spread their own magnanimity and courage.

The engagement of Joris and Virginia was, however, still unrecognized. On their return from the Governor's house party, they had found Captain Van Vroom in a mood of great exhilaration regarding Batavius De Vries. He had just had a letter from him, and it was apparently full of financial success and good news. After the receipt of this letter, when not talking of the Stamp Act, he was talking of Batavius, and he always managed to connect Virginia and her future with happy predictions concerning his favorite. Generally Virginia refused to notice both his innuendoes and his plain assertions; but she understood that the claims of Joris would be passionately denied, if presented at a time so inauspicious to them.

Perhaps they were both rather glad of the secrecy which they believed to be so necessary. Love likes hidden ways, and little compromises. He is also a shameless seeker after sympathy, and perfectly willing to invent reasons for asking it. Joris was aware that his own father would receive the news of his engagement with angry denials, and he expected nothing better from Virginia's father. So he liked Virginia to pity his situation, he liked her to advise him to conceal his love for her, he enjoyed the sweet duplicities of tenderness that was forced to secret expression.

And after all, what could be settled until the Stamp Act business was arranged? Besides, Justice Artaveldt had further complicated matters by attaching himself positively to the Governor's party. Captain Jan said "it was the homespun." He believed Artaveldt would prefer slavery in satin to liberty in jeans; and he spoke contemptuously of young Artaveldt's English riding-boots, and jockey-like coat, with its scarlet facings and gold buttons.

"I wonder me at him!" he cried angrily. "I wonder how he can face the home-dressed Liberty Boys. Ashamed of himself he ought to be!"

And Virginia answered not in words, but her whole lovely personality radiated denials, from the upward fling of her head to the restless tapping of her English-shod feet.

With her mother she was more confidential. "Father is talking continually of Batavius," she said scornfully. "He has made some money, it seems, and so then he is the man in a thousand."

"Very well, that is a good thing. What ails thee at Batavius? Always great friends you have been, and many fine gifts he has brought thee. Thou should not forget the past—also I think thou art dear to him."

"I wish not to be dear to him."

"It is better for thee to be dear to Batavius than dear to that fop-of-fops, Joris Artaveldt."

"Because Joris will not make a fright of himself, thou and my father begin to hate him. Very well, so much more will I love him."

"Then thou wilt breed pain and sorrow for thyself, for be sure of this—thy father will marry thee to Batavius De Vries."

"I will throw myself in the river, rather than I will be his wife. Tell that to my father."

"Not much would he heed such words. They are foolishness. Thou hast read them in some of those novel-books Lady Rose brings thee."

"But I hate Batavius, mother."

"That is nothing. Many girls I have heard say, 'I hate Bram!' 'I hate Case!' 'I hate Peter!' and I have seen them cry and wring their hands, and want to die then and then; and so soon as the man is their own man, in one week they are crazy about him, and there is no one in the wide world to match him. That is the way. Hate is turned into love by marriage. What is the matter with thee? crying, crying for nothing at all! Batavius is handsome and rich, and so easy with women, thou may rule him like a little child. Very fortunate art thou. I say that plainly."

Such conversations were as frequent as they were futile, all the summer long; for Madame remained loyal to her husband's desire, and indeed, for her own part, she was quite of his opinion in her estimate of Virginia's two lovers. Joris she admired, and in a measure liked; Batavius she trusted; and there was no hesitation in her mind as to which of the men would make the most satisfactory and comfortable husband. She listened to Virginia's complaints and entreaties with a certain amount of sympathetic understanding, but she always, in the end, insisted on the superiority of Batavius as a husband. "When you marry yourself," she would say, "it is not a man that is handsome to look at, or pleasant, that you want. No, it is the good provider, and the kind helper in sickness and trouble." And though such advice had apparently no effect on Virginia, it did really, though unconsciously, influence her. Unavoidably she began to regard Batavius as a fate from which she could not escape; and Joris as the glorious, but unattainable, Love of her crossed and unhappy destiny.

One morning in September she was walking slowly up Broadway. She had been to the Walton house with a letter from her father, containing good news concerning the proposed Congress of the colonies in New York, during the following month. In fact, the ready enthusiasm of all to form a continental union was the great hope which had brightened the listless, inactive summer. But now, at least, twenty-eight deputies, speakers of the colonial assemblies, had pledged themselves to be present at the New York congress in October; and though Virginia, North Carolina and Georgia were prevented by their Governors from sending representatives, letters of sympathy with the movement had been forwarded, with promises to abide by the decisions of the United Congress. Van Vroom, with the aid of his son Arent, had been working hard for this result; and, in the joy of its certain accomplishment, he had sent a letter containing many hopeful details to his friend and coadjutor. William Walton. Virginia had asked to carry this letter, for she had friends in Pearl and Cherry Streets, and she knew the happiness of being the bringer of good tidings.

So with the light of many welcomes on her face, she was passing the park when she was overtake.. by Joris. He had been to the fort, and was riding, but he gave his horse into the charge of his servant, and, taking his place at Virginia's side, he sauntered slowly home with her. It was a lovely autumn morning, and the bright young city had the atmosphere of not unhopeful waiting. Here and there, shops and booths had been opened for the sale of goods of home manufacture; and there was a pleasant stir round such marts. The Liberty Boys were standing in small parties at the street corners watching the English soldiers, who were ever ready to stir up a quarrel. Sitting or standing under the trees, men were discussing the last letter from the London emissary of the New York colonists; or congratulating each other on the certainty of what every one felt to be a most important event—the meeting of the Colonial Congress in October.

Now and then some youth would look contemptuously at the English clothing of Joris; and occasionally words of advice accompanied the look; but as a general thing the appearance of Virginia protected her escort from unpleasant notice. She was dressed in a gray woolen frock, which had been woven in the Van Vroom household, and though the little cambric tippet, frilled with lace, which covered her shoulders was evidently an imported adornment, it passed unnoticed in the superior smartness of her homemade gipsy bonnet. For with her own hands she had fashioned it of braided corn-shucks, and trimmed it with ears of ripe wheat, and with scarlet poppies from the Van Vroom garden. Its picturesque shape and gay coloring had won her many hearty compliments that morning, and when Joris added his praises she felt that her toilet was both a personal and political success.

As they reached the outskirts of the city they lingered lovingly in the warm grass and the cool shade of the elms, and at the Van Heemskirks' gate stood a few minutes to speak to Madame Van Heemskirk, who had been gathering vegetables, and had a basket full of them in her hands. She praised Virginia's dress and gipsy hat, and asked if her mother had wool enough to keep her women busy. "If not," she added, "I can share a little with her. Tell her that, Virginia."

"I will, madame, and many thanks for your kind offer. My father thinks we shall do great things next month. He says Congress is now certain."

"I know not, child. All this quarreling troubles me. Who can say where any fresh road will lead to?"

"Some of the colonists think this road will lead to liberty, madame," said Joris.

"Well, then, as my good husband says, we had to draw the line somewhere about here. The English government had gone far enough. If we submit now, it will be all up with us; that is what Joris Van Heemskirk says. However, the King's hands don't reach to heaven. He goes as far as he is let go, not as far as he would like to go. There is One above George King of England. Yes, indeed!"

"The King is not to blame, madame," said Joris.

"I suppose not. What does the King know? With other men's ears he hears, with other men's eyes he sees. Virginia, take care of your homespun dress, and your corn-shuck hat; some day you will be proud of them."

They went away laughing over such an improbability, and were still mirthful at the prospect when they reached the Semple house. Madame Semple was at the open gate watching her son Neil walking toward the city. They stopped and bade her good morning, and she looked them both over from head to feet.

"You are a' right, Joris," she said; "and, Virginia, youth and beauty can wear a hodden-gray, 'specially if there's a trifle o' French lace and a gipsy hat wi' scarlet poppies aboon it. But, oh, lassie, if you were fifty, instead o' eighteen, you would turn Tory, rather than thole it."

"Indeed I would not, madame."

"As for myself, I'm wearing the brawest silks and satins I have to my name—on the Sabbath Day. There's nane dare to cast it up to me in the Joris felt its tle power to an extent that aston-ed Virginia. He bent his head to fascinating odor, and seemed be-dered with its penetrating power. rubbed the flowers in his hands, and aled their sweetness with a sort of ture; and Virginia stood looking at n with an expression not altogether npathetic. She was indeed wonder- how he could be so enthusiastic over a bed of lavender, and so generally cool and prudent over subjects of far greater interest and importance. She had not yet learned that every soul has some subtle doorway to its inmost self, and that the sense of smell is the most frequent and the most potent of all such entrances; consequently she could not realize that it was in that very moment embalming herself and her love in the memory of Joris by an everlasting odor, sweet smelling as the dews of Paradise. Indeed, she was almost troubled when Joris took from his breast-pocket a little case of scarlet morocco, and showing her within its folds her own betrothal gift—the Strawberry Handkerchief—said:

"Gather some lavender, dearest, and with your own hands sweeten it forever."

"But I would rather not, Joris," she answered. "Mother has often told me that there is always quarreling in a house that uses lavender."

"I never heard such a thing before, and I do not believe it, Virginia. I defy anything to make us quarrel."

The Story of a Small Deposit

RECENTLY there came to the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a check for the Bowery Mission, and an explanatory letter from the Union Square Savings Bank of New York City, which shows how a small sum of money, deposited years ago and forgotten by its owner, has come out of the bank vaults to do good at a time when most needed. It shows that our business men are not forgetful of the men "who are temporarily down and out," as President Taft said in his recent speech at the Mission, and also what pains a great financial institution, such as the Union Square Savings Bank, takes to trace its depositors and their heirs in order that they may receive, with interest, the money which was entrusted to its care.

"Over forty years ago," reads the letter, "a depositor, Sarah Gray, left a small balance of $5.40, which she evidently forgot. While we have endeavored to trace her, it was only recently that we found the executor of her estate, Mr. John Crolius. He is a very old man, and the Mrs. Gray in question was his aunt, who died nearly forty years ago. At first he was reluctant to touch the present balance of $42.05, as not being worth while, but finally at our solicitation he consented to turn it over to charity, and selected your institution." After giving a few business details, the vice-president of the bank, Mr. William R. Rockwood, closes with the words: "We are glad that the money can now be put where it will do some good." The money will be expended in the wisest way possible by the Bowery Mission, for the men it is encouraging and putting on their feet to face the world again, and doubtless, if the lady who deposited the money so many long years ago were here to-day, she would be glad that her money had been left to grow until it could be drawn out this cold winter to aid, feed and clothe the needy.

We Want All Hard-of-Hearing People to Use this New Hearing Device for 30 Days on Home Trial

Electricity has worked an additional wonder, and by its use in this new device it is now possible for the deafest person to hear distinctly all the sounds audible to those who possess their normal faculties of hearing.

We have perfected this instrument to such a degree that we now unhesitatingly send it to any afflicted person on thirty days' trial, that they may know by actual experience that by its aid the deafest person can hear—can converse as those who are not afflicted converse and can enjoy the concert and distinctly hear public speakers.

The Electrophone is so sensitive that the faintest sound is multiplied many times in volume, so that the ear is made to receive and properly record every sound made.

The Electrophone is much more sensitive and multiplies the sound a great deal more than any other device. A small transmitter gathers in the sound and transmits it with greatly increased volume to the ear, an electric device accomplishing this result.

Most people who use the Electrophone tell us it has greatly improved their hearing and that it stopped their head noises, and in many instances the normal hearing has been entirely restored. Just as the arms or legs shrivel and become useless through the lack of exercise, the ear also fails through disuse. The Electrophone exercises the parts of the ear, each to play its proper function, with the result the hearing is greatly improved.

Thousands of these instruments are in use. No treatment of any kind is taken in connection with their use.

If you are deaf or hard of hearing, don't fail to send name and address on this coupon. We will send you a list of many responsible people who are using the Electrophone. You are to use the Stolz Electrophone thirty days before you are to decide to keep it.

CHRIST THE INTERPRETER*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

IF we should count all of the laws which God gave through Moses to his people Israel, we should find in all over six hundred, including the Ten Commandments. These laws were divided into two groups: (1) The ceremonial, or moral law, prescribing forms of worship, modes and times of sacrifice, feasts, etc.; (2) the political or civil law, which described relations between man and man in regard to life, property, etc. (See Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy.) The Old Testament has been called "the Saviour's Bible," because he had it in substantially the same form in which we have it. The use which Jesus made of the Old Testament will show its bearing upon the Christian life of to-day.

The Unquestioned Utterance of Christ

Those Bible critics who assail almost every part of the Bible unanimously leave the Sermon on the Mount unmangled as the unquestioned utterance of Christ. All Christians usually agree with the sentiment of Daniel Webster in regard to this discussion: "The Sermon on the Mount cannot be a merely human production." And what parts of the Sermon on the Mount are reckoned of highest value and inspiration? It would usually be answered, the Beatitudes, the Lord's Prayer, the Golden Rule, the command to love all men as our neighbors, the exhortation to love our enemies, the comments on the Commandments, as kept or violated by the state of the heart, and the reference to fasts to be kept in spirit, and not merely in form, and the declaration of God's care for ravens and other creatures of nature. These are elements in the Sermon on the Mount which have won the eulogy even of those who condemn the Old Testament. But every one of these is either a quotation or paraphrase of the Old Testament, with which Christ's spirit was so saturated and his memory so filled that its principles in new forms and fuller utterances make up his greatest discourse. It is in Ps. 37:11 that it is first declared that "the meek shall inherit the earth." It is in Ps. 24:3, 4, that we are first told of the blessedness of those who have clean hands and a pure heart. It is in Isa. 61:3 that the blessedness of those that mourn is first declared; and there are three passages in Isaiah and the Psalms that tell us of the blessedness of the poor in spirit, in whose contrite hearts God dwells. The blessedness of those that hunger and thirst after righteousness, of the merciful, of the peacemakers, are also declared repeatedly in the Old Testament. (Isa. 57:15; Isa. 62:3; Ps. 21:7; Ps. 145:19; Isa. 65:13; Ps. 41:1, 2, 4; Ps. 34:14, etc.) The Lord's Prayer is really a paraphrase of I. Chron. 29:10-13.

Turning Light on the Commandments

The command, "Love thy neighbor as thyself," often spoken of as a New Testament commandment, is a quotation from Lev. 19:18, and the exhortation to "Love your enemies" was given thrice at least in the Old Testament, Christ's words being a free quotation from one of them, Prov. 25:21, 22. As to the Golden Rule, Jesus said himself that he had learned it from the Law and the prophets.

It is sometimes urged that Christ introduced an entirely new element into the Decalogue when he said, "He that hateth his brother is a murderer." But instead of introducing a new principle Christ was simply turning on these commands the light of the tenth commandment, as Paul intimates in Rom. 7:7, "I had not known lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet."

How Many Commandments?

A boy was being examined for church membership. The old elders looked rather askance at him because of his youth. Finally one of them asked the question, "How many commandments are there?" "Eleven," promptly replied the boy. There was a look on the faces of the elders of surprise and gratulation, as if their judgment of the boy's unfitness had been confirmed. "How is that, boy?" asked one of the elders; "do you not know there are only ten commandments?" "God gave ten commandments to Moses, and when Jesus Christ came he said, 'A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another.'" The elders had nothing more to say, only that the boy was eligible for church membership.

Jesus gave yet other commandments. Repent, Mark 1:15. Believe, Mark 1:15. Pray, Matt. 6:6. Confess me, Matt. 10:32. Be baptized, Mark 10:39. Follow me, John 12:26. Go, Mark 16:15. This do in remembrance of me, Luke 22:19. Love, Mark 12:30, 31.

We have learned the Ten Commandments "by heart"; it might be more appropriate to say that we have learned them "by lips," for we can say them almost without thinking about them. And there certainly are a lot of people who can say them without doing them! But we are not so familiar with the commandments of Jesus. The only way to become familiar with them is to live by them. Let each one ask herself or himself, Which of Jesus' commandments am I keeping? which am I breaking?

The Inauguration Sermon

In Jesus' Sermon on the Mount, which was the inauguration sermon for the apostles, Jesus did not give "new" commandments, but he lifted up the old commandments to a higher plane, and this he did by going to the root of things. "Thou shalt not kill." "Thou shalt not be angry with thy brother, nor use words of contempt, as 'Raca' and 'thou fool.'" Christ showed that the thought of enmity was in very truth the deed of murder. In Moses' time no Israelite might appear before the altar to offer a sacrifice while he was still acting the part of a lawbreaker; and Christ taught if a person treasured anything in his heart against another, had "a grudge," he must get rid of it before any offering he might make to God could be accepted. "Go thy way, first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." Reconciliation has been called "renewed friendship," and sometimes this is even sweeter than friendship in the first instance. Two brothers quarreled and separated, one went to live in far-away Australia. During twenty years they never communicated with each other. The Christmas season was drawing nigh, and the brother in Australia said to himself, "I am going back to the old home in England to spend Christmas. I think it will do my heart good to smell the Christmas tree again, and to see the loved ones that are still there. I believe it will feel good to make up with John," and so he traveled for nearly forty days across two oceans and one continent to experience the joy of forgiving and being forgiven, and of being reconciled to his brother. Those who were his fellow-travelers testify that he was one of the happiest passengers on the ship. How much greater must have been his joy when the brothers clasped each other in their arms and determined that bygones should be bygones.

Charles Wagner, in his book L'Ami (The Friend), says: "In the very depths of yourself dig a grave. Let it be like some forgotten spot to which no path leads; and there in eternal silence bury the wrongs you have suffered. Your heart will feel as if a weight had fallen from it, and a divine peace will come to abide with you."

In Old Testament times, "adversaries" seemed to abound; this is not saying that adversaries have gone out of date! Some quarrels, as family feuds, or neighborhood feuds, have been handed down from generation to generation until the original cause has been almost, if not quite, lost sight of. Christ would have none of this; he said, "Agree with your adversary quickly." A gentleman once remarked in our hearing, "I always kill my enemies!" The words were startling. "How do you kill them?" was the question asked by one who heard the statement. "Oh, I kill them with kindness," was the reply. The law has nothing to bring against any one who kills his enemies in that way.

A Story of Forgiveness

Two women had had a difference, both had spoken bitter words to each other. And after that they would not speak to each other or take any notice of each other, although they were often together in church meetings. The husband of one of the ladies, after a few days, urged his wife to go and tell the other lady she was sorry for the angry words she had spoken. At first she stoutly refused to do so, because she had not started the quarrel, but finally she was persuaded to do so. She went to the home of her "adversary," and was ushered into the parlor. "I don't see what you have come here for," was the greeting she received, spoken with a flushed and angry face. "I have come to tell you I am sorry for what I said," was the reply. "Then I am sorry, too, and I am glad you came," was the gracious response. And ever after the bearing of those two women was marked by unusual gentleness, so marked that an explanation had to be made to their friends. If you have an enemy, kill him—with kindness. It is related of George IV. that, desiring to take the sacrament, he sent for the Bishop of Winchester. The messenger delayed along the way, which fact was explained in accounting for the late coming of the Bishop. The King demanded that the messenger be brought into his presence, when he promptly dismissed him from his service. Then the King said to the Bishop, "Now, my lord, if you please, we will proceed." The Bishop, with great kindness but firmness, refused to administer the sacrament while the King had anger toward a fellow-creature in his heart. "You are right," replied the King, and he sent for the servant he had discharged, restored him to his position, and asked his forgiveness for his act of hasty temper.

"An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth." Jesus quoted these words from the Old Testament (Lev. 24:20). It described the mode of punishment to be given by the court of justice to those who had injured their fellows. But there were some among the Jews who considered that it permitted them to exercise private revenge after that manner. How differently it all must have seemed that day on the Mount when Jesus sent the gleams of love through it! If a man strikes you on the cheek, give him another cheek to strike, and let it be your cheek.

The grandest expression of peace between nations is the colossal statue of the Christ of the Andes (a picture of which was shown in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a few years ago). Argentina and Chile were disputing about a boundary line, and they decided to stop disputing and melt their cannon and mould out of them a statue of Christ, to be placed on the disputed boundary, and they pledged each other never again to enter upon such a quarrel.

But Christ in his Sermon on the Mount rose even higher than being at peace with one's enemies. It was love your enemies and pray for them. Does this seem too high for mere mortals to realize? Certainly if South Americans can do it, with their warlike propensities, cultivated Anglo-Saxon people like ourselves should be able to do it.

A Victorious Life

IT does not require wealth, learning, high position, or fame to make a hero, or a man's life worthy of grateful mention when he passes away. Such was Adolph Koch, a "shut-in" for nearly twenty years, the latter part of the time at the Home for Incurables in Chicago, where he died recently. He had been a successful business man in earlier life. Affliction came upon his family circle. His wife and two little daughters all died upon the same day, and this bereavement was followed by the death of his only son. Then came his own long sickness, in the course of which he was the subject of repeated operations, losing both his legs, his left arm, three fingers of the right hand, the right collarbone, and two ribs from each side. Yet this man, whose afflictions might be compared to those of Job, bore all unmurmuringly. He was uniformly cheerful, loved and constantly studied the Bible, had full faith in God, wrote many letters and in a beautiful hand, and did all the good to others that was in his power.

It was my privilege occasionally to furnish him with a little money, for an outing in the summer. His mode of locomotion was in a wheel-chair, and when he returned from several weeks' absence in the country his description of his enjoyment would be most enthusiastic. I count it one of the privileges of my life to have met him in the home of his later years, and to have been one of his correspondents. Several years before his death, he wrote this beautiful poem, with the request that it should not be published during his life:

The Master's Orders

"Go Work and Pray"
Such were the orders yesterday,
And should I dare to disobey?

Then His Command
Was wholly changed; He bade me stand
And contemplate the workings of His hand.

To-day His Will
Is spoken in the words "Lie Still";
And shall I not His wish fulfill?

"Lie Still and Pray"
That is my Lord's command to-day
And I will do His will—His way.

In the contemplation of such a life, patient and faithful and even rejoicing amid pain and tribulation, we cannot fail to see the upbearing hand of Him who "keeps his own." J. C. H.

IN A SHADOW

Inveterate Tea Drinker Feared Paralysis.

Steady use of either tea or coffee often produces alarming symptoms as the poison (caffeine) contained in these beverages acts with more potency in some persons than in others.

"I was never a coffee drinker," writes an Ill. woman, "but a tea drinker. I was very nervous, had frequent spells of sick headache and heart trouble, and was subject at times to severe attacks of bilious colic.

"No end of sleepless nights—would have spells at night when my right side would get numb and tingle like a thousand needles were pricking my flesh. At times I could hardly put my tongue out of my mouth and my right eye and ear were affected.

"The doctors told me I was liable to become paralyzed at any time, so I was in constant dread. I took medicine of various doctors and no end of patent medicine—all to no good.

"The doctors told me to quit using tea, but I thought I could not live without it—that it was my only stay, I had been a tea drinker for twenty-five years; was under the doctor's care for fifteen.

"About six months ago, I finally quit tea and commenced to drink Postum.

"I have never had one spell of sick headache since and only one light attack of bilious colic. Have quit having those numb spells at night, sleep well and my heart is getting stronger all the time."

Be Well Without Drugs

I Will Help You to Vibrant Health, Rested Nerves and a Good Figure

After my university course, I concluded I could be of greater help to my sex by assisting Nature to regain and retain the strength of every vital organ, by bringing to it a good circulation of pure blood; by strengthening the nerves, and by teaching deep breathing, than I could by correcting bodily ailments with medicines.

I have helped over 44,000 women. I can help you to giving to you that satisfaction with self which comes through knowledge that you are developing the sweet, personal loveliness which health and a wholesome, graceful body gives—a cultured, self-reliant woman with a definite purpose, which makes you the greatest help to family and friends. You will be a Better Wife, a Rested Mother, a Sweeter Sweetheart.

Arise to Your Best

I can help you to make every vital organ and nerve do efficient work, thus clearing the complexion and correcting such ailments as

Constipation	Irritability	Indigestion
Weak Nerves	Colds	Dullness
Rheumatism	Nervousness	Weaknesses
Sleeplessness	Torpid Liver	Catarrh

This work is done by following simple directions a few minutes each day in the privacy of your own room. In delicate cases I co-operate with the physician.

A Good Figure is Economy and means more than a pretty face

I have corrected thousands of figures as illustrated below. Style is in the figure and poise and not in the gown. The gown in Fig. 1 cost $250; the one in Fig. 2 cost $6. Fig. 2 is the same woman as in Fig. 1, developed and in correct poise. Figs. 3, 4, 5 and 6 show actual photographs of pupils before taking up my work. (They have given me permission to use them). They all stand, now, as correctly and appear as well as Fig. 2. When every organ of the body is doing efficient work, there will be no superfluous flesh and no bony, angular bodies. I have reduced thousands of women 80 lbs., and have built up thousands of others 25 lbs.

Too Fleshy or Too Thin

What I have done for others I can do for you. Here are a few extracts from daily reports of my pupils: "My weight has increased 30 pounds." "My kidneys are much better." "My eyes are much stronger and I have taken off my glasses." "I have not had a sign of indigestion or gall stones since I began with you." "I weigh 33 lbs. less and have gained wonderfully in strength. I never get out of breath, the rheumatic twinges have all gone, and I look and feel 15 years younger." "Just think of it! To be relieved from constipation. Entirely free after having it for 30 years." "Have grown from a nervous wreck into a state of steady, quiet nerves."

Write me today, telling your faults of health and figure. If I cannot help you, I will tell you so. I study your case just as a physician, giving you the individual treatment which your case demands. I never violate a pupil's confidence. I will send you an Instructive booklet, showing correct lines of a woman's figure in standing and walking, free.

"How To Save"

by
Hon. Leslie M. Shaw
(Former Secretary of the United States Treasury.)

The First Mortgage Guarantee & Trust Company

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

MUNICIPAL BONDS

LET us now consider municipal bonds. Suppose you were to be asked to invest in the bonded securities of some city or town, how could you be sure that such an investment would be safe?

There are three methods of assurance: One is to leave the matter to the judgment of some bond house, with a record of irreproachable integrity. Another is to be guided by the State laws which prohibit savings banks investing in any but certain municipal securities. The third is to make personal inquiry concerning the status of the bond issue in question.

The first naturally depends upon personal acquaintance, or upon reputation acquired in the public prints. The second presupposes access to the statutes of the various States and a knowledge of which of those States provide the greatest restrictions, for not all States are alike in regard to the amount of latitude allowed.

It used to be said that if the bond buyer were to be bound by the restrictions imposed by Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York and New Jersey, there would be very little chance of loss, for the laws of these States confine the bond-purchasing power of their savings banks within the narrowest of limits, in many cases naming the very bonds which may be bought. But many other States have fallen in line with restrictions that make their guidance reasonably safe, and very naturally their statutes have come to be regarded by many financial institutions, trustees and private investors as a trustworthy guide for the purchase of bonds. But the field of investment thus indicated is limited, and the interest in some cases quite small, and so, before following the lead of the banks, the small investor may desire to look farther afield, for there are municipal bonds which offer a fraction more of interest than do those indicated above. It is not our purpose to name them. Most well-known bond houses have them to offer. But we can make a few suggestions that may help the reader to protect his principal. Let us, in the first place, inquire just what is a municipal bond?

What a Municipal Bond Is

Now, every city is in effect a gigantic business enterprise, conducted, in theory at least, according to the laws that govern less public corporations. When any corporation desires officially to extend the field of its endeavor it is permissible under the law for it to borrow money for the purpose, issuing therefor its written and printed promises to pay back the principal within a certain time, with interest also, at stated intervals. These promises to pay are known as bonds, and they are generally secured by liens or mortgages on tangible property owned by the corporation, which can be sold for cash in case of a forced sale.

In the case of an industrial corporation, the plant, good will, fixtures, machinery, etc., may be pledged. In the case of a railroad, the properties owned by it, its stations, rolling stock, etc., may be pledged, as the case may be. And so in the case of a city, when it desires to make some large economic improvement, it may borrow money and issue in return its promises to pay in the form of bonds, pledging as security certain public works in its possession, such as waterworks, electric light plants, etc.

The industrial corporation expects to meet the interest on its bonds, and eventually to pay off the principal, from the profits of the business. The railroad corporation expects to do likewise from its earnings on passenger and freight traffic. The city or municipal corporation expects to retire its bonds, with interest, from the profit on its improvements, paid by its citizens in the form of taxes. In all events, it is agreed, in case the industrial, railroad, or municipal corporation default in its payment of the principal or interest, that the property used to secure the bond may be sold to pay the bondholder.

Factors to Be Considered

Now it would seem at first glance that the municipal bond were much the safer form of security. There is the city full of people, identified with it through friends and the possession of property. It would be unreasonable to suppose that any great number of them would suddenly move away, and hence they can be expected to continue paying the taxes, which are to be devoted to paying off the bonds. And yet there are many factors to be considered in determining the safety of a municipal bond issue. This is particularly the case with small municipalities which have felt the effect of a boom, or are preparing for booms to come. Some of the bond houses pay large salaries to experts who can accurately judge the value of a bond issue for a small town.

These men are swayed by sentiments very different from those displayed by the eager townsman, enthusiastic for the success of his home city, and they make the most searching inquiries, not only concerning the visible security behind the issue itself, but as to the number of the population, the character and nationality of the citizens, the progress made by the municipality since its incorporation, its railroad and water facilities, the political character of the administration issuing the bonds, etc.; even whether or not there be a tendency toward municipal ownership.

These are some of the things which it cannot hurt the prospective bond purchaser to know if he desires absolutely to be sure of his investment. They are things about which you are entitled to question the bond house which may solicit your investment for an issue it may have in charge. It makes a very great difference in the value of a municipal bond whether or not the town issuing it be located in a good productive territory, with ample railroad facilities, and whether its citizens show a proper amount of progressive spirit.

If you ask your bond house about it, you will be able to obtain the most minute statistics, because a reliable house cannot afford to be other than absolutely sure of the issue itself. Such a house will have found means to ascertain all about the tax valuation of the city, town, county, or school district in question (municipal bonds include all of these), and this valuation will include all taxable property, real and personal, assets which the municipality may own in the form of waterworks, lighting plants, available sinking funds, etc.

Further Investigations

Such a house will have inquired into the limit of indebtedness allowed by the municipality. For instance, a community prohibited from having a net indebtedness of more than five per cent. of the assessed valuation, and a population of at least 20,000, would be considered safer than one where the debt limit is higher and the population lower. The percentage varies with the different States. In New York, where the population is very high, it is ten per cent.

To be able to ascertain such facts, and to apply them to the benefit of the prospective bond buyer, is the special office and the desire of all good bond houses, and where a house will not attempt to satisfy a customer thoroughly in this regard there is cause for suspicion, for, after all, no customer can be blamed for wanting to be made acquainted with the details of a security for which he is asked to pay good money.

A PAINTER OF THE PLAINS

OR two decades past there has been one painter of scenes from Amer- in life who made a distinct place for nself in the magazines and as an istrator of historical scenes. The ist, Frederic Remington, greatly the sorrow of art lovers from Maine California, has just laid down his sh forever. His death was unex- ted, as his illness was very brief. was buried at Canton, N. Y., where large gathering of distinguished men me to pay their last respects and ten to a eulogy from the lips of the esident of St. Lawrence University. Frederic Remington was different om most artists, who pass their lives a city studio, or making brief trips seashore or mountain in search of cal color for their pictures, and who int as others have painted before. e loved to mingle with the people he inted with such spirit, to ride his oncho in the "round-up," camp with e herders on the Texas plains, where e sky shuts down on the horizon like great blue arch, or march with a column of cavalry as it wound its way on narrow paths along the side of Arizona ravines and gulches. His sketches were made on the spot and were of notable accuracy. If one saw in his picture a little silver button on the stirrup leather of a Mexican cowpuncher he could be sure that Remington saw it before he transferred the ranchero to canvas.

In regard to his painstaking accuracy the story is told that some art critics, who knew more about Broadway than they did of Oklahoma, objected to the way certain horses were drawn. They said horses did not gallop that way. Remington had some snapshots taken of horses in full canter. The photographs showed that the artist was right and that his keen and practiced eye had caught certain movements of the swiftly-moving mustangs which had been overlooked by the others.

Remington was a sculptor as well as painter. His subjects were much the same. An Apache scout, lithe, a bundle of steel muscles, mounted on his pony, and gazing intently for the coming of the white man, a relic of a past age in vain protest against the coming of the new; or a group of troopers, one wounded and supported in the saddle by his "bunkie," who is seeing him safely from the field. These groups and his pictures will have an increasing historical value, for they depict a state of society which is already rapidly vanishing. The war whoop has died away, the iron-horse has routed the pony express, and the cowboy is becoming less picturesque.

America owes a deep debt of gratitude to this typical American artist, who will not be forgotten, but remembered in future histories of art as one who developed a distinct field and showed to the world the life, the free atmosphere of the great West.

Loves "The Christian Herald"

Dear Dr. Klopsch: My sister, Mrs. F. W. Benson, of Wenonah, N. J., has renewed my subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, as a Christmas gift, a most acceptable one indeed, for I love the old paper. After we have read it in the home, I send it to my brother, in Manila, P. I. May God bless its mission there. I want to thank you for the splendid gifts accompanying the paper, "Dreamland" and "The Daughters of Dorcas." Both are most beautiful pictures.

The Frightened Cloud

(A SUNSET FANTASY)

OUT from the gleaming azure, as the day was nearly done,
A scarlet Cloud came fleeing back from the setting sun,
Fleeing as if she were pursued by a deadly scorpion.

Up from the far horizon, slow and solemn and vast,
The angel Night came sweeping, till the sky was overcast,
And the scarlet Cloud fled toward her, as the stately angel passed.

"Hide me, oh, hide me quickly!" she sobbed, as she gasped for breath.
"I have murdered my own father—behold the marks of death!
The terrible red-blood stains of him that murdereth!"

"I will hide thee in my shadows," the merciful Night said;
"I will banish from thy garments the tell-tale stains of red."
And the Cloud hid on Night's bosom her beautiful bright head.

The great Night smiled to see her. "Poor thing!" she whispered low;
"She only thinks she killed the Sun, since he was wounded so.
But he will rise, just as he did a million years ago."

An Exceptional Issue of 6% Bonds Secured by a Thousand Farms

Here are brief facts about one current issue of Irrigation Bonds They will illustrate what ideal security lies back of such bonds when the issues are rightly selected.

The Bitter Root Valley Irrigation Co. owns one of the largest irrigated fruit land projects in the world. The Company is composed of well known men who are wealthy, experienced and capable. The land to be watered consists of about 40,000 acres in the heart of our greatest fruit belt—in the famous apple region of the Pacific Northwest.

A large part of the valley has been under irrigation for many years, so the possibilities of the land have been demonstrated. Fruit land in the valley has lately sold as high as $1,000 per acre.

The water rights are unassailable, and the total water supply is more than sufficient for all needs. For the irrigable land is distinctly limited by the mountainous bounds of the valley.

$2,500,000 Invested

The Irrigation Company has invested in the project about $2,500,000, or about twice the total bond issue. And the bonds are secured by a first mortgage on all the property which the Irrigation Company owns.

The bonds are additionally secured by first liens on the lands and the orchards watered. These liens are given by individual land owners in payment for the land and the water rights. Forty per cent. of the price is paid down, and the balance, secured by the liens, is payable in annual installments.

To secure each $1,000 bond there are deposited with a Trust Company as trustee $1,400 of these first liens on farm land.

The average price at which this land has been sold is about $200 per acre. The minimum price at present is $250 per acre. Yet the bond issue is limited to $30 per acre, or to less than one-sixth the average selling price of the land.

Double Security

Thus the bonds have double security. The first is a mortgage on all the property which the Irrigation Company owns, and the Company's investment is nearly twice the whole bond issue. The second security is these first liens on farm land—on land which is worth more than six times the amount of the bonds which it secures.

One can hardly conceive of more ample security. Yet these bonds pay six per cent. interest, because the demand for irrigated land is so great that the projects are very profitable.

Part of these bonds mature each year from 1914 to 1919. One may have his choice of maturities.

Ask for the Facts

In the past 15 years we have purchased 75 separate issues of Reclamation Bonds—Drainage and Irrigation. All have been secured by first liens on good farm land, and not a dollar of loss has resulted to any investor.

Irrigation bonds have now become the most popular bonds that we handle. No other large class of bonds offering equal security now pays six per cent.

We have issued a book on Irrigation Bonds, based on all this experience. Every investor, small or large, owes to himself its perusal. Please write for the book to-day. Cut out this coupon so you won't forget.

WHEN DINNER COMES

One Ought to Have a Good Appetite.

A good appetite is the best sauce. It goes a long way toward helping in the digestive process, and that is absolutely essential to health and strength.

Many persons have found that Grape-Nuts food is not only nourishing but is a great appetizer. Even children like the taste of it and grow strong and rosy from its use.

It is especially the food to make a weak stomach strong and create an appetite for dinner.

"I am 57 years old," writes a Tenn. grandmother, "and have had a weak stomach from childhood. By great care as to my diet I enjoyed a reasonable degree of health, but never found anything to equal Grape-Nuts as a standby.

"When I have no appetite for breakfast and just eat to keep up my strength, I take 4 teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts with good rich milk, and when dinner comes I am hungry. While if I go without any breakfast I never feel like eating dinner. Grape Nuts for breakfast seems to make a healthy appetite for dinner.

"My little 13-months-old grandson had been very sick with stomach trouble during the past summer, and finally we put him on Grape-Nuts. Now he is growing plump and well. When asked if he wants his nurse or Grape-Nuts, he brightens up and points to the cupboard. He was no trouble to wean at all—thanks to Grape-Nuts." Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Foreign Missionary Events*

TO one who reads the book of Acts in full sympathy, and with an imagination able to picture to himself the facts with which that wonderful story deals, it surpasses in thrilling interest all other missionary annals. It is, in fact, a sketch and an epitome of every other missionary book; teaching us that these consecrated messengers of the cross are but men of like passions with ourselves; and teaching them that they must pass through much tribulation.

It is hard to generalize concerning any great movement. In some quarters the signs are discouraging; in others, encouraging. A fair average is almost unattainable. But there are certain positive gains along our "fighting front," which are no doubt permanent. For instance, Maurice Phillips, of the London Society, testifies of India as follows: "Not long ago the burning of a widow on the funeral pyre of her husband was the custom. It is now abolished. Not long ago infanticide was the custom. It is now abolished. Not many years ago the civil and military officers of the government attended heathen festivals, not in order to protect them, but in order to dignify them. That custom is now abolished. Not long ago the government managed all the temples, collected the revenues, paid the priests and the dancing-girls; but it does none of these things now. Not long ago converts to Christianity lost their civil rights, but they keep them now. All of these reforms have been effected through missionaries."

Mrs. Mason, in Lux Christi, says that the Hindu temples throughout India are falling into decay. Lord Curzon called the people to task for this, but without much effect. This, and the fact that all the new temples are on an inferior scale, indicate the truth of what a bright Hindu recently said: "Hinduism is sick unto death. It must fall."

In China an even greater change has been experienced, and still greater are to come. Jacob Speicher tells dramatically of the rude awakening of that mighty nation after its defeat by Japan: "The awful truth was beginning to dawn upon their sluggish minds that the methods of the Western world, of which Japan had been a diligent student, were superior to their own. Scholars and teachers soon sought the friendship of the missionary. He was the only foreigner who could speak their language and who was available for information, except in the treaty ports. The 'elders,' and the very best minds in each city, would invite the missionary to their homes and schools that he might tell them of things relating to Western learning."

Through his influence libraries and new schools were established, in order to satisfy this newly awakened curiosity. Incalculable good was thus done, and not the least part of this was the dignity imparted to the missionary in the minds of the Chinese.

The tale of the evangelization of Africa is, perhaps, the most thrilling of all. Read Blaikie's Life of Livingstone; Miss Fisher's On the Borders of Pigmy Land; Miss Parsons' A Life for Africa; and other works describing the dawn that is breaking there.

Persia, Turkey, South America, Mexico—wherever our missionaries have gone—have likewise moving tales to tell of the labors of those devoted men and women. Study these wonderful books, and resolve that you will do more than you have ever done before to help foreign missions.

The New Acts of the Apostles*

THERE is something majestic in the sight of a man, or a cause, going forward from year to year in the strength of a great purpose, openly attacked often, perhaps, or undermined by sly enemies, or ridiculed by witty skeptics, yet living them down and constantly growing mightier.

Such has been the course of the great mission movement. In spite of the injunction of our Saviour to "go into all the world and preach the Gospel," it was with much of doubt and misgiving that his people took up the literal obedience to his word. The work looked too great for common men. The harvest seemed dubious, and the laborers were few.

Then came a period of enthusiasm and renewed activity, such as the world experienced under the preaching of Peter and Paul. In the middle of the last century there was almost a craze upon the subject of missions. It was set up before the students of Mount Holyoke, Bradford and Wheaton Seminary that the noblest thing a woman could do was to marry a missionary. It mattered not that the coral strand and the icy mountain were dotted with the graves of missionaries' wives. The devoted daughters of pious families offered themselves freely for the service.

Then, as it was realized that the zenanas and harems must be reached before any widespread religious movement could take place, women were urged to go by themselves, whether married or unmarried. As early as 1820 Miss Cooke went to Calcutta. In 1830 Mary Reynolds was at work in Smyrna. Later, she married the saintly W. G. Schauffler, and every one knows the place of their wonderful family in missionary annals.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has lately reported the noble utterances of our President upon the usefulness and value of missions, and the great ability and consecration of our missionaries. He has visited a large number of missionary stations during his journeys around the globe, and no one knows better than he whereof he speaks. He has confounded and abased those who have dared to traduce and slander the cause and its helpers.

This is not to say that among this great body of men there are not some who are lacking. Not all are giants in intellect, or angels in spirit; but there is probably no company in which the average of intellect and of spirituality is so high.

The fast and hard lines of sectarianism which are gradually fading from among us, but which still hinder our progress, have been even more harmful in our missions. They have repelled more among the heathen than they can possibly have helped.

A pretty story is told by Mr. Ellis, of our Presbyterian workers in Taiku, Korea. They undertook to raise there American fruits and vegetables. The French Roman Catholic priest near them generously shared with them his fine bed of strawberries. Up on their hill the transplanted strawberries prospered; but the next season the priest's own crop failed entirely. Then the Presbyterians came forward and replenished his garden.

These friendly offices were most useful in stilling the suspicions of the respective followers of the two sets of teachers. Both were trying to make the natives more cleanly, more temperate, more moral. Their modes of worship were different, but their God was the same. In many of our mission fields a similar spirit of fraternity prevails. Those are the fields where the largest numbers are converted.

"California Now or Never!"

"The Kuhn California Project" will irrigate 250,000 acres in the famous Sacramento Valley. The land is ready! The water is ready! Are you ready? The sale of these rich valley lands has just begun in tracts of 10 to 80 acres. Small payment down; then ten annual payments.

The valley is garden soil, 50 feet deep, yielding immense crops of fruit, alfalfa, sugar beets and all the famous products of California. Mature orauge groves on these lands have yielded as high as $1,000 per acre. If you are going to have a farm, why not have the best? The Kuhns are always looking for the best, and their experts tell them in this enterprise they have found it. They are putting millions of dollars into improvements to make it still better. The land is close to big markets and will pay for itself.

You take no chance in buying land under the Kuhn projects. The Kuhn interests are irrigating 400,000 acres in the Twin Falls Country, Idaho. Their great Sacramento Valley project offers a frostless winter and a still wider range of crops. Organize a California Colony in your own city or town. Take your neighbors with you.

There is in press a very choice book of 48 pages, "California—Now or Never." It is by far the handsomest California book ever issued, and will show you at a glance whether you want a home ranch in California. To insure a select distribution, it is priced at ten cents. All other publications which are fully descriptive are free. Fill out the coupon below and mail. If you want the new book, enclose ten cents for each copy.

A LIVING FROM POULTRY

$1,500.00 From 60 Hens in Ten Months On a City Lot 40 Feet Square

TO the average poultryman that would seem impossible and when we tell you that we have actually done a $1,500 poultry business with 60 hens on a corner in the city garden 40 feet wide by 40 feet long we are simply stating facts. It would not be possible to get such returns by any one of the systems of poultry keeping recommended and practised by the American people, still it is an easy matter when the new PHILO SYSTEM is adopted.

The Philo System is Unlike All Other Ways of Keeping Poultry and in many respects just the reverse, accomplishing things in poultry work that have always been considered impossible, and getting unheard-of-results that are hard to believe without seeing.

The New System Covers All Branches of the Work Necessary for Success

From selecting the breeders to marketing the product. It tells how to get eggs that will hatch and how to hatch nearly every egg and how to raise nearly all the chicks hatched. It gives complete plans in detail how to make everything necessary to run the business and at less than half the cost required to handle the poultry business in any other manner.

Two-Pound Broilers in Eight Weeks

Are raised in a space of less than a square foot to the broiler almost without loss, and the broilers are of the very best quality, bringing here 3 cents per pound above the highest market price.

Chicken Feed at 15 Cents a Bushel

Our book tells how to make the best green food with but little trouble and have a good supply, any day in the year, winter or summer. It is just as impossible to get a large egg yield without green food as it is to keep a cow without hay or fodder.

Don't Let Chicks Die in the Shell

One of our secrets of success is to save all the chickens that are fully developed at hatching time, whether they can crack the shell or not. It is a simple trick and believed to be the secret of the ancient Egyptians and Chinese which enabled them to sell the chicks at 10 cents a dozen.

Our Six-Months-Old Pullets Are Laying at the Rate of 24 Eggs Each Per Month

In a space of two square feet for each bird. No green cut bone of any description is fed, and the food used is inexpensive as compared with food others are using. Our new book, the Philo System of Poultry Keeping, gives full particulars regarding these wonderful discoveries, with simple, easy-to-understand directions that are right to the point, and 15 pages of illustrations showing all branches of the work from start to finish.

Our New Brooder Saves 2 Cents on Each Chicken

No lamp required. No danger of chilling, overheating or burning up the chickens as with brooders using lamps or any kind of fire. They also keep all the lice off the chickens automatically or kill any that may be on them when placed in the brooder. Our book gives full plans and the right to make and use them. One can easily be made in an hour at a cost of 25 to 50 cents.

Send One Dollar direct to the publisher and a copy of the latest revised edition of the book will be sent you by return mail

TESTIMONIALS

South Britain, Conn., April 14, 1909.
Mr. E. R. Philo, Elmira, N. Y.
Dear Sir:---I have followed your system as close as I could; the result is a complete success. If there can be any improvement on nature, your brooder is it. The first experience I had with your System was last December I hatched seventeen chicks under two hens, put them as soon as hatched in one of your brooders out of doors and at the age of three months I sold them at 35 cents a pound. They then averaged 2½ pounds each, and the man I sold them to said they were the finest he ever saw, and he wants all I can spare this season. Yours very truly, A. E. Nelson.

My dear Mr. Philo: Valley Falls, N.Y., September 10, 1909.
I want to tell you how pleased I am with my use of the Philo System during the past year. The fowls laid exceptionally well in the New Economy Coop, much better in proportion than those in my old-style house. The fireless brooder has solved the problem for me of raising extra early chicks. I am going into your methods more extensively this coming year. Wishing you success, I am, sincerely yours. (Rev.) E. B. Templer.

Mr. E. R. Philo, Elmira, N.Y., Elmira, N.Y., October 30, 1909.
Dear Sir:---No doubt you will be interested to learn of our success in keeping poultry by the Philo System. Our first year's work is now nearly completed. It has given us an income of over $500 from six pedigree hens and one cockerel. Had we understood the work as well as we now do after a year's experience, we could easily have made $1,000 from the six hens. In addition to the profits from the sale of pedigree chicks we have cleared over $960, running our hatchery plant consisting of fifty-six Cycle Hatchers. We are pleased with the results, and expect to do better this coming year. With best wishes, we are, very truly yours, (Mrs.) C. P. Goodrich.

"Few large fortunes can now be made in any part of the world except from one cause—the rise in value of real estate."

—From Andrew Carnegie's Book, "The Empire of Business."

THERE seems to be a sort of magic about the ownership of New York City real estate. In no other city are values so high—nowhere else are they advancing so fast.

New York City real estate increases in value according to the growth of population. Each year we add a city as big as Denver or Toledo; each five years as big as St. Louis or Boston. New York is at the gateway of the continent—Staten Island is at the gateway of New York. No one questions the desirability of owning New York City real estate. To buy and hold is to amass wealth—if you buy right.

"Buy cheap land near dear land" is the maxim of the shrewdest investors. The dearest land in the country is at Wall Street and Broadway. The cheapest land in New York City, distance, improvements and transportation considered, is on Staten Island—almost in sight of the Battery—at South New York. $5 starts you, and the balance can be paid in easy monthly payments of $5 and upwards. The Staten Island movement has only just begun. Will you get aboard now, or wait?

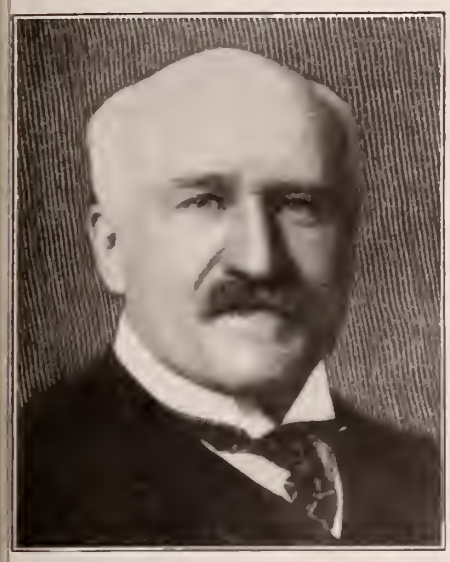
Minister de Lagercrantz



The Swedish and Danish Legations in Washington

Mme. de Lagercrantz

Copyright by Clinedinst

HIS LIFE SPENT IN HELPING OTHERS

By ABBY GUNN BAKER

THE Swedish legation at Washington stands on the hill at the head of fashionable Sixteenth Street, in the stately granite building which Mrs. John B. Henderson erected last year. The house suggests the Spanish type of architecture, and is said to have been copied from the famous archiepiscopal palace at Salamanca. From the south windows of the legation there is a fine view of the capital city lying in the valley below, with both branches of the silver Potomac outlined at its feet, and the blue hills of Virginia and Maryland glimmering in the distance.

Upon the afternoon when the representative of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD called at the legation the winter sun shone with dazzling brilliancy over the crisp surface of the snow, and, pouring through the long windows, flooded the reception room with sunlight. The furnishings in this room remind one of the homeland of the Minister. A portrait of King Oscar II. graces the space above the mantel, while portraits of other notables of Sweden are to be seen in almost every room.

His Excellency, Herman de Lagercrantz, Sweden's Minister Plenipotentiary, is the typical Swede in appearance, fully six feet tall, broad shouldered, blonde hair and complexion, and with deep blue eyes which reveal a quick sense of humor in their contagious twinkle. He speaks English fluently, and is a charming conversationalist.

Minister de Lagercrantz is a philanthropist as well as a diplomatist. But any public man who steps out of the beaten track must pay for it always by a certain amount of unpleasant notoriety, and he has found himself no exception to this rule. When he received his appointment at Washington, in April, 1907, the newspapers heralded the announcement far and wide that the new Swedish envoy was a member of the Salvation Army, and many exaggerated stories were published about him.

"It was embarrassing, very embarrassing," said Mr. de Lagercrantz. "So many things were published which were not true. I am in sympathy with the Salvation Army, and I am greatly interested in it; I believe that it is one of God's great agencies in reaching the most unfortunate of his children, but I could not possibly have done all that the American papers credited me with doing."

It may be that Minister de Lagercrantz could not have done some of the things credited to him, but that does not alter what he has done nor what he is still doing for the world's betterment. By birth he belongs to one of Sweden's oldest and best families. His father—for a quarter of a century Minister of Finance in the King's cabinet—was widely known for his activity in public philanthropies and civic betterment organizations. The son received the usual education of youths of his rank in Sweden, going through the college at Stockholm, and then, in preparation for his service in the army, he took a full course in the officers' military high school. For twelve years he served in the smartest regiment of Swedish artillery and won a reputation as a fearless and trusted officer.

Minister de Lagercrantz and His Youngest Daughter

While in college, young De Lagercrantz began to make a study of social and economic problems and to consider what could be done for the uplift of the laboring classes. In prosecuting this study he was appalled at the number of homeless men he found in Stockholm, especially the old men who, through poverty and crime, were literally spending their last days in the saloons and jails, and upon the streets of the city. To remedy this evil he, with the help of his father and others whom he interested, started the first Harberge for husvilla (Home for Homeless Men) ever established in Sweden. That was some twenty years ago, and it was a small affair then and did not shelter more than two hundred men, but the idea grew. Mr. de Lagercrantz has kept a guiding hand upon the plan. Other men of wealth have seen in it a chance to help their less fortunate brothers; they have come to his assistance, and now, in Stockholm alone, there are four such Homes, which shelter more than twenty-five hundred homeless men every winter night.

After Mr. de Lagercrantz had completed a twelve years' service in the army he felt that he must be free to extend his study of philanthropy, and he resigned his commission and, with his wife, set out upon a trip around the world to see what was being done in other countries for the "submerged tenth." They went to London, met General Booth, and, becoming convinced of the great good the Salvation Army was accomplishing, they gave it their moral as well as financial support. From London they went into the Far East, spending months in India and Africa, where they made an exhaustive examination of the mission work carried on there, both in the church fields and in that of the Salvation Army. Everywhere they lent help and inspiration to the missionaries. Upon their return to Sweden, after a two years' absence, they established a branch of the Salvation Army's philanthropic work at Stockholm, which was warmly endorsed by the royal family.

From his family Mr. de Lagercrantz inherited the estate, lying about thirty miles from Stockholm, one of the larger landed properties in the kingdom, containing some ancient ancestral buildings, which have stood for hundreds of years. Soon after coming into possession of this property he and his brothers began enlarging the steel plant and other industries which had been established by their predecessors. Year by year it has grown until now they manufacture steel products of all kinds so extensively that Minister de Lagercrantz, who is connected with several other steel plants as well, has become known as "the Carnegie of Sweden," and his railway coaches are becoming known the world over. This, of course, has made necessary the employment of a large force of

THE HONEST MAN

TEXT—Romans 12:17
"Provide things honest in the sight of all men"

WHAT do we mean by an honest man? We want a definition to begin with; and let it be as simple as possible. An honest man is one who pays his debts. That covers the whole case.

In Westminster Abbey there are two tombs, which will serve to illustrate the matter in hand. One is that of John Wesley, who lived in his country parish "content on forty pounds a year." His motto was "Owe no man anything, save to love one another." He was buried without pomp or circumstance, and left only enough to furnish twenty shillings each to the bearers who carried him to his grave. The other is the tomb of William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, who died with honors thick upon him, but so deeply in debt that Parliament was constrained to vote an appropriation of forty thousand pounds to meet his outstanding obligations. We take our stand between those tombs, and give our meed of praise to the poor itinerant, who lived and died an honest man.

It will be seen that the definition, so simple apparently, is quite comprehensive, and it cuts deeper than we think. For when the matter of life's assets and liabilities is fully canvassed, it will appear that it is no easy matter to live and die with a clean balance sheet.

Debtors to God

The question at the outset touches our relations with God. Are we debtors to God? Yes, by universal consent. In the bill of particulars there are three items, to wit:

First: Creation. Is there any one who does not rejoice in the fact that he was made "but a little lower than the angels" and in the likeness of God? Is it nothing to stand erect, sensible of a divine birthright and of a divine inheritance? Is there no occasion for gratitude in the fact that I am able to dream dreams and see visions, and, as Kepler said, "think God's thoughts after him"? What do we owe in return for these? The least possible recognition of God's goodness, thus far, is in keeping ourselves on friendly terms with him. Here is the rationale of prayer, as Tennyson says:

> For what are men better than sheep and goats,
> That nourish a blind life within the brain,
> If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer
> Both for themselves and those who call them friend?
> For so the whole round world is every way
> Bound with gold chains about the feet of God.

The second item in the bill of particulars is Providence. In God we live and move and have our being. We slept in his arms last night, cared for as tenderly as children in their mother's arms. He feeds us, clothes us and continually cares for us.

> Through all the various shifting scene
> Of life's mistaken ill or good,
> Thy hand, O Lord, conducts unseen
> The beautiful vicissitude.

What shall we render unto him for these loving kindnesses? Do they lay no obligation upon us? The least that we can do is to bend our knees in thanksgiving. To the beggar who, this morning, stretched out his hand saying, "I am hungry," I gave enough to buy himself a breakfast, and he said, "I thank you." Could he do less and bear the semblance of a man? What then of the man who never prays, who takes God's gifts without a word of recognition? Is he an honest man? Not so did the pagan Socrates think, who asked Euthydemus, "Did you never reflect how much care the gods have bestowed upon us?" "No, never, I assure you." "Go then to the temple and, pondering on their gifts, bow down and prove thyself a man."

The Debt We Owe to Society

The third item in the bill of particulars is divine grace. It matters not, so far as the question at issue is concerned, whether a man has accepted the overtures of God's mercy or not; it still remains that provision has been made for his deliverance from sin. You may not have accepted Christ, my friend; that does not affect the fact that God gave his only begotten Son to die in your behalf that you might be saved from sin. Here is an immeasurable obligation laid upon every man. How shall we pay it? The answer is in the familiar hymn which we have just sung. Would that we might sing it but once with heart and understanding! For it contains the sum total of the philosophy of due-ty; that is, of what we owe to God.

> Alas! and did my Saviour bleed,
> And did my Sovereign die?
> Would he devote that sacred head
> For such a worm as I?
> But drops of grief can ne'er repay
> The debt of love I owe;
> Here, Lord, I give myself away,
> 'Tis all that I can do.

It is a startling fact that men are so prone to overlook their obligations to God, for here is the very root of honesty. "Will a man rob God?" Shall we withhold from God that which is his honest due? Nay, that is clearly impossible if one would be an honest man.

But the question touches, secondly, our relations with our fellow-men. For no man liveth unto himself and no man dieth unto himself. It would appear that the angels were created one by one; but men are of one family, and "blood is thicker than water." We are mutually interdependent, as lenders and borrowers; and each is bound, in honesty, to balance his account with his fellow-men.

I am debtor to society; that is, to my fellow-men en masse. The liberties, immunities and sanctities of my daily life come to me through the social organism; and, so far forth, I am a debtor to the community in which I live. How shall I meet that obligation and thus prove myself an honest man? To state it as briefly as possible, I am bound to put more into the common exchequer than I draw out of it.

There are two kinds of people, consumers and producers. The consumer says, "The world owes me a living," and proceeds to exact it. An idler, rich or poor, living in pursuance of that dictum, is a dishonest man. The producer, on the other hand, is one who adds to the common fund by making something. He earns a livelihood and something more. He exacts nothing which is not quid pro quo. And when he makes his exit, he leaves the community richer from his having lived in it.

Our Debt to the Human Race

What are you producing, my friend? Make something, I pray you. Make a plow or a poem, make a house or a history, dig a well or build a stable; produce something that will remain as your memorial, leaving the balance on the right side when you have gone your way.

But my indebtedness is not merely to humanity en masse. "I am debtor to every man." The original break in the family circle was made when Cain asked "Am I my brother's keeper?" I owe something to the next man. Get that in mind when you meet a drunkard reeling in the street, for he is a brother of yours. Draw not your skirts aside when you meet the next painted bawd, for she is a sister of yours. Again I say, Blood is thicker than water. To these and to every other you are a debtor. What do you owe them? All the category of kindnesses marked out in the Golden Rule: "Do unto them as ye would be done by." Lend a hand! Be not an over-reacher, like Jacob; buy no man's birthright for a mess of pottage; give Laban the benefit of the square deal. Say never, "Honesty is the best policy," for honesty is right whether it pays or not. Take shame to yourself if ever you get the better of another man. And if he fall, what then? Lend a hand! Help him up!

Are you living that way? Are you paying your debt to the community? Are you dealing fairly with your fellow-men? If not, give ear to your conscience which is saying, "Thou art not an honest man."

But there is a third reckoning, not with God nor with our fellows, but with ourselves. It is written:

> Unto thyself be true;
> And it must follow, as the night the day,
> Thou canst not then be false to any man.

I owe it to myself to be a clean man. In view of the common sensitiveness as to physical purity, it is difficult to understand the common indifference to purity of soul. I have a slight birthmark, the size of a penny, on my cheek; and once and again strangers have volunteered to wipe it off. It was only yesterday that a conductor on a surface-car, as he took my fare, drew out his handkerchief and graciously said, "Permit me, sir, you have a slight smudge on your cheek." To me this seems a fine tribute to the courtesy of the average man. But is it not marvelous, then, that we should be so willing to continue in sin? For what is sin but defilement of the soul? It is the only thing in the world that robs us of self-respect. We are, therefore, under bonds to ourselves to rid ourselves of it. But how? At "the fountain filled with blood." I know no other way. Let us, therefore, wash and be clean. Here is the promise: "Though your sins be as scarlet they shall be white as snow; though they be red like crimson they shall be as wool."

I owe it to myself, also, to be the best possible man. This means character. I am bound to add grace to grace, as when one lays stone upon stone in building a house to live in. "Whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." A man without character is a defaulter to his own life and destiny. But he who makes the most of himself is like Stephen of Colonna, who, when his castle had been razed, his fields ravaged, his army destroyed and himself made captive, on being asked, "Where now wilt thou seek refuge?" laid his hand upon his breast saying, "Here is my fortress!"

What We Owe to Ourselves

I owe it to myself still further to make my life tell. The waste of time, the waste of privilege and opportunity, the waste of vital energy; this makes men poor indeed. Oh, the frightful waste, the robbing of one's self, the dishonesty of it! The alternative is to invest one's energies in the profitable pursuits of life, not in mere self-gratifications or sordid ambition, but in the building of character and in doing for others and for the glory of God.

There is a place for you, my friend, in the eternal plan of God. He wants you, and surely you have need of him. If you would be an honest man, you must find that place and do your best to fill it.

An account of the taking of Port Arthur has been published by a lieutenant of the Japanese army, named Sakurai, in which he describes with thrilling effect the awful rain of death in the face of which he and his fellow-soldiers climbed the slope of the fatal hill. He and his comrades of the Twelfth Company advanced steadily until, on a sudden, the captain was seen to stagger and fall. The young lieutenant ran, bent over him and sadly closed his eyes. Then he said, "Faint and cold though I was, I felt in his girdle for the secret map, in which his commission was marked out, and finding it I arose and said, 'Comrades, I lead the Twelfth Company! Forward!'" Ah, that is what should justly be expected of every man: to find his commission, his place in "the secret map," and then to rise and fulfil it.

The Divine Ideal

As was said at the beginning of this discourse, the definition of honesty goes further than we think. For where in the world was there ever a man who thus paid his honest debts? Diogenes with his lantern goes up and down, peering into all faces and saying, "There is none honest, no, not one." But once there lived an Honest Man. "The Best of Men that e'er wore flesh about him" was an honest man. He met his obligations, every one: to God, to his fellows and to himself. He was true to his commission; he finished the work which had been given him to do. The measure of our honesty will be our imitation of this Ideal Man, Christ Jesus. To follow in his steps, this is to come up to the fulness of the measure of the stature of a man.

And here, in a last word, is the prayer of honesty. Would that it might be written in our hearts and that we might constantly offer it:

> Lord, make me like thyself!
> Lord, make me be myself!
> Seeming as one who lives to thee,
> And being what I seem to be.

The Lost Lamb

IT is a poor lost lamb,
Tired, bleeding, worn;
How did it wander so,
By fierce winds shorn?
How doth it fare—that lamb?
Where doth it dwell?
Thou knowest, Shepherd true,
And lovest it well.

It is a poor spent lamb,
So needing care!
So lonely, famished, bruised,
In marsh and snare.
But thou hast pity, Christ,
Thou hast gone far
To bring thy lamb so missed,
Where comforts are.

It is a sorrowing lamb,
Mid wild alarms;
Oh, bring it back, dear Christ,
Within thine arms!
To pastures green, and where Still waters flow.
Kind Shepherd, let thy lamb
Contentment know.

Little "Moon-Flower"

VE have in our home a little Chinese girl, ten years old. Her ıne is Nguok-Hua ("Moon-Flower"). Ven she was two years old her ıher died, and her father, who was ıy from home a good deal, making ıber in the jungle, left his little girl vh another Chinese family. She was ıte happy in this place, and stayed re a long time. Then a little boy ıthe house got smallpox, and his ıther, fearing the little girl might ı it too, told her father he had better e her away. This he did, and sold ı to another family for $35 (gold)! ; was bought to be the wife of the lest son (now nine years old) when ly are both of age, which according the Chinese is 16 or 17. If a girl ıy is born, she is often sold to anıer family, to some time become a ughter-in-law, while her mother, if l happens to have a little son, buys ıebody else's girl baby to become his ve at some future date.

ın most cases, these children are well ıated; indeed little "Moon-Flower" s he only one I know who has had a ıd time. Her future mother-in-law ,ctically made a slave of her. When ıer children of her age were at play, l was cooking, or getting firewood, ı washing clothes. Her work was ı done when night came; she had to ıy up till almost midnight, to pre-ıe pig-feed for the next day. In ırn for all this work she got noth-ı but blows. On her head she has a ır which was made by this woman ıting her with a knife; on one side ıher face she has a similar mark; her ile body was full of bruises when she ıne to us, eight months ago. She ıs brought here by her father, who ıld no longer endure seeing his ughter suffer. She was never alıved to speak to him, for fear she ght tell of all that was done to her. F told me that she never dared to ıplain to him, even when she got t chance, but one day she said, "You ıd me they wouldn't beat me here." Vhile she was with her mother-in-law, I ardly saw her smile, and she never lıghed when this woman was around. Her father had great difficulty in gting her away, and finally succeeded vh the help of our Chinese preacher. According to an agreement then made, s: is to stay with us six years. At the el of this time she will, in the opinion o the Chinese, be of a marriageable ae. They would be glad to get her bk, because she does the work.

As I said before, she has been here eht months, and her board bill is $10 (old). Her father is unable to pay t whole amount, and we fear that he n y take her back to that cruel woma because he cannot feed her. She gs to school now, and is as happy as t day is long; and it would be a pity t have her return to the old place. I takes $15 (gold) a year to board h. Are there not some readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who will unite i making this child happy?

WOODCHUCK DAY—By Rev. J. M. FARRAR, D.D.*

WISH I could be a country boy again, just for a day. If the choice came at this time of the year, I would take February 2 for that one day. What a great day it used to be in the fields, watching for the woodchuck. We Pennsylvania boys called it Groundhog Day. But as the woodchuck and the groundhog are the same animal, it does not matter which name we use. The mound around the groundhog hole was our weather bureau. It was an old myth, that had great interest for the blacksmith's son. If the groundhog came out on February 2, and saw his shadow, we believed he would dive head foremost into his hole. Out from his dark hole in the ground he would not come for six weeks. I am sure you are all sorry for the foolish groundhog. Running from his shadow, and hiding in a dark hole for six long weeks!

I IMAGINE that the Indian boys call him "groundhog afraid of his shadow." Do we know any "boy afraid of his shadow," or "girl afraid of her shadow?" Why should any one be afraid of a shadow? One of the most beautiful homes in this country was built from a shadow. How could a house be built from a shadow? One day Mr. Spencer Trask and his little daughter were crossing a rustic bridge, over a beautiful lake. The little girl saw their shadows in the water and, pointing with joy, said, "Yaddo," which was as near as her baby tongue could get to the word shadow. Near this lake her father built a mansion, where the little child could see its shadow and shout "Yaddo." He named the mansion "Yaddo." This is what I mean by building a home from a shadow. Would it not be great to build our shadows into something beautiful and useful?

BUT I am not going to preach to-day, and will stop right here, and tell you a story. It is about "The Land of the Shadow People." I found the story in one of our daily papers. Elaine made a long journey to the Land of the Shadow People. She soon noticed that they had a strange custom of always walking and working with their backs to the sun. In the morning they worked with their faces set westward, and at noon turned and began working backward. Always with their backs to the sun. Approaching one, whose strong body she admired, Elaine said that it was a beautiful day. To her surprise, this man replied that one so sick and sad as he did not care whether the day was beautiful or not. And when she expressed surprise at such a remark, he pointed down to his shadow lying on the ground and said, "You see me there, see how dark and thin I am." "But," she cried out in surprise, "what difference does that make? That is not yourself, it is only the shadow of your real body." The man answered, "No, that is not my shadow; that is my real self lying on the ground."

ELAINE was sorry, but he would not let her help him. She went to a beautiful young girl, who was sitting with her face to the west while sewing. A straighter, better developed girl, with more beautiful face, she had never seen. When Elaine spoke to her, she began complaining of her poor health, and said she was sinking into an early grave. "But," murmured Elaine, "you have no signs of sickness; you are beautiful and strong." "You are a strange girl," the young woman responded; "if you look at my body you will see that it is already shrunken and eaten away by sickness." "But," Elaine said, "what of it? That is not yourself! That is nothing but a shadow of yourself." The beautiful girl said, "You tell me that this is not my body! Whose is it, then?" Elaine kindly said, "Why, nobody's. It is nothing but your shadow." But the young woman would not believe her.

ELAINE hurried over to a group of little children who were staying in one place, but not playing. Here, too, she found that each one's attention was bent upon his or her shadow on the ground, and each was afraid of it. Elaine asked, "Why don't you juniors turn your faces to the sun, and you wouldn't see those ugly shadows." "Turn to the sun! Why, then, we couldn't see ourselves, and, if we didn't see our bodies, how could we care for them?" At last Elaine succeeded in persuading one little girl to turn toward the light. "Why," she exclaimed, "where is my body? I don't see it! What has become of it?" "Just where it always was," Elaine replied, and she laid her hand on the girl's shoulder. "It seems so strange. Why, I don't feel a bit sick." Elaine asked, "Why not remain with your back to the dark and your face to the light? Are you not happier as you are?" "Oh, so much happier. Why, I never was happy before." Then all the juniors turned from their shadows with a shout of joy, and Elaine taught them how to play and pray. This was the first junior congregation in the Land of the Shadow People.

WOODCHUCK DAY is a good time for us to say we will not dwell in the Land of the Shadow. In the Bible we read of "a sun and shield." A sun to give us light, and a shield to protect us from danger. See if you can find the name of our "Sun and Shield," who taught us how to dwell and to be happy in the Land of the Shadow.

*Pastor First Reformed Church, Brooklyn, N. Y. Text: "They that dwell in the land of the shadow." Isa. 9:2.

"I'se Afraid"

"SOME one come and stay wiv me,
It's dark up here, and I'se afraid."
This small sinner, aged three,
Some stern rule had disobeyed;
But no one heard her plaintive plea:
"Won't some one come and stay wiv me?"

Now cautiously she ventures forth,
Robed in soft and clinging white.
She listens to the joy and mirth
Wafted on the air of night;
But no one hearkens to her plea:
"It's dark up here, come stay wiv me."

A draught came playing hide-and-seek
Around the little golden head;
It dried the tears upon her cheek,
But left a hectic flush instead.
Tired and forlorn, she falls asleep,
Breathing this prayer: "My soul a-keep."

And some one heard the plaintive plea,
Answered the lisping, broken prayer
Of this small sinner, aged three,
Prone on the floor, all cold and bare;
Her naughtiness is now forgiven—
There's no dark chamber up in heaven!

Women and the Trades

THE effects of the munificent Russell Sage Foundation are already beginning to appear. A bulky volume by Elizabeth B. Butler, issued under the auspices of the Foundation, contains invaluable facts and tables concerning the industries in which women are now engaged.

Pittsburg is the city whose statistics are treated here. Other cities will be examined in the same way. It can readily be seen that a comparison of the figures of the different towns will form a basis for general industrial and philanthropic work, such as we have never had before. Twenty-two thousand wage-earning women are classified here. This does not include the number grouped under the following census headings: in agricultural pursuits, domestic and personal service (except in small part), and professional service. It is an interesting fact that the male population of Pittsburg exceeds the female by 10,000.

Since the occupations which once kept women in the home are now largely performed in factories, it is natural that we should find girls and women reaching out of their homes to grasp their age-long work. It is significant, however, that the average period of their outside labor (in Pittsburg, and probably about the same elsewhere) is less than six years. In some of the trades it is less than two years.

This is partly because the girls leave to marry; but oftener because their health breaks down. When they marry they sometimes continue their work. Even if they remain in their homes for a few years, they are likely to be found in the factories again as mature married women.

As for weekly wages, they run at low figures. Those of the cracker-makers average between $3 and $6.99. More than half of the mattress-makers, on the other hand, make from $8 to $10. An illustrative story is told of an enthusiastic young engineer, who informed a party of visitors that the hundreds of girls in a great room full of high-speed machines received $20 each per week.

One of his hearers was incredulous, and took pains to ascertain the exact facts. She found that the girls made an average of $5 to $7 per week, only the forewoman receiving $20. The young man knew all about the turbines and the cams, but he had apparently studied little the human factors in the great factory.

The descriptions presented of the mode of life and work of many of these women are highly interesting. As a rule, their labor is what is called "light," but in the cracker industry, and a few others, it is heavy. There they are "pale and anæmic, with an older look than the rest." "Overtime" work is common. The government inspectors visit the factories, and see nothing wrong to report; but, after they go, the infractions of the overtime laws proceed unchecked whenever business presses. This is a department for the philanthropic women of Pittsburg to inquire into.

THE LINCOLN RELIGIOUS RELICS

By WALDON FAWCETT

SEVERAL circumstances have lately served to direct popular attention to some of the most interesting relics of Abraham Lincoln—relics that include among their number probably the most significant mementoes reminiscent of his religious life. A proposal is now before Congress for the purchase by the government of the largest and most valuable collection of Lincoln relics in existence. A bill is now before the national legislature for the appropriation of $150,000 to acquire what is known as the Oldroyd Lincoln Memorial Collection and perpetuate it in the form of a museum as a permanent memorial.

Lincoln's Pew in the Presbyterian Church, Washington

Osborn H. Oldroyd, a veteran of the Civil War, made the collecting of Lincoln relics his lifework. He conceived a great admiration for Lincoln, even before the Illinois lawyer was elected President, and began at that early date the labor of love which he has pursued so energetically ever since. For some years Mr. Oldroyd's collection reposed in the Lincoln homestead at Springfield, Ill., which is open to the public; but when, some dozen years ago, Congress purchased for $30,000 the house in Washington where Lincoln died, the relic collector was invited to occupy the building, rent free, as a repository for his treasures.

Among the more than three thousand objects in this collection relating to Abraham Lincoln are many which directly or indirectly throw interesting lights upon his religious convictions and the deep feeling he had for spiritual things. The most interesting of the relics is the Lincoln family Bible, from which Abraham Lincoln's mother read to him when he was a boy. The Bible is quite an old one, dating back considerably more than a hundred years. In addition to the traditional family chronicle which it contains there is found on the inside front cover the autograph of Abraham Lincoln, penned, evidently very laboriously, when the President-to-be was only nine years of age. This Bible, if offered at public auction, would readily command a large price.

A development of recent date, which has served to recall public attention to the religious side of Lincoln's life, is found in the announcement that "Lincoln's church" is to be torn down. The New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, in Washington, of which Lincoln was a member and a pewholder, is situated about three blocks from the White House; but, with the rapid development of the national capital, business has invaded the district, and commercial houses now hem in the historic place of worship on all sides so that the pastor and congregation have virtually decided upon removal to a residential neighborhood.

The picturesque red brick church, which might fittingly be called the "Church of Presidents," had important historical associations even before Lincoln became a member. It was founded in 1803, and in the early days John Quincy Adams saved it from bankruptcy by advancing to the congregation the sum of $2,000. Other Presidents who attended this church were Andrew Jackson, James K. Polk, Franklin Pierce, James Buchanan and Andrew Johnson. President Jackson withdrew from the church as the indirect result of the bitter social feud which marred the Jackson administration, the pastor of the church having been inclined to side with the majority of the Cabinet and against "Old Hickory" in the famous controversy.

The pew occupied by Lincoln and his family during the years he served as President is still reverently preserved at the New York Avenue Church. The pew, which is located on the central aisle well toward the front of the church, bears a silver plate inscribed with the name of Abraham Lincoln and the years of his occupancy. The church has not been refurnished since Lincoln's time; but this historic pew was left undisturbed, and is distinctly old-fashioned and conspicuous amid the modern appointments of the church's stately interior. The pew is readily recognizable from all parts of the large edifice, by reason of the fact that it has a black walnut finish, suggestive of mourning, while as all the other pews have the contrasting golden oak finish. Just what will be done with the Lincoln pew when the congregation acquires a new home has not been determined, but dominant sentiment favors its removal to a place of honor in the new edifice.

THE WEDDING OF MARTHABAI

NOVEMBER 8, 1909, was a day of days in the life of Ahilaji, for it was the day of his marriage to Marthabai Abaji Tadhae. It was performed in India; but in India millions are marrying, and this event of itself would mean little to us were it not for the fact that when the famine children were being taken care of by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD family Ahilaji was among the very first of the boys to be assigned. He was the protégé of a Long Island pastor for a number of years, till he was graduated from school. Then a special training was given him, and he was made assistant teacher in a Christian school at Hauge. The minister in America and Ahilaji in India exchanged presents and letters, and it came about that Ahilaji came to the time when he wanted to be married. "But," he wrote, "it would cost fifty (50) cents more per month to support a wife." Yet it seemed wise for a Christian teacher to be married in that land, and he chose the dark-eyed, smart and modest Marthabai, who lived three miles from his school, as his bride.

You may be interested in knowing the cost of their wedding outfit. Here it is:

Cloth for coat	1	rupee	14	annas
Lining for coat			2	"
Headdress	1	"	10	"
Long cloth for loins and limbs	1	"	2	"
Cloth to adorn shoulders			8	"
Shoes for four feet	1		10	"
Flowers for bride and groom			5	"

In our American money, the total would be $2.58! How many American couples could get their wedding clothes for a like sum? Yet Ahilaji is happy. He is to be congratulated, like many in India whom Christ has blessed, for he was an orphan and starving and homeless, and now he has a Christian home of his own. His wife, too, is a Christian and a member of Dr. Hume's church, the First Church at Ahmednagar.

Now, it is deemed good in India (as in some parts of America) for a newly-wedded couple not to dwell too near to the wife's paternal relatives. Relatives often make plenty of trouble even in Christian lands.

So Ahilaji took Marthabai and traveled from Hauge to Balirwodi, where he has established home and where he teaches in a school under the superintendency of Dr. R. A. Hume, and where Marthabai, like Martha of old, in caring for a Christian home, sings and prays and reads the Bible to those who call.

Ahilaji and Marthabai in Wedding Attire

Busy, ambitious and a conscientious student and teacher, Ahilaji will without doubt be advanced and may yet have a government position. At present the Home Department of the Union Evangelical Sunday School, of Corona, New York City, Mrs. J. J. Jenkins, superintendent, is guaranteeing his salary (per annum) and its 270 members send many wedding congratulations and good wishes to the newly-wedded pair.

—A READER of this journal writes inquiring whether we do not consider that vivisection has produced any valuable results to medical science and the human race. This inquiry probably represents the attitude of a very large proportion of thoughtful people at this time, when a furious crusade is being waged against vivisection. Some journals, carried away by sensational impulse, favor its entire suppression. On the other hand, many scientists and the medical fraternity—who may be regarded as better informed on this subject than the average citizen—claim that vivisection is a scientific necessity; that it has resulted in discoveries of the utmost value to the human race, enabling the qualified practitioner to fight many diseases successfully and to apply effective remedies which would never have been known but for the knowledge gained through vivisection. Taking the whole, therefore, the reasonable attitude in this controversy would seem to be the middle ground. Vivisection should be permitted only under proper restrictions and in qualified hands, but wanton cruelty, even in the name of science, should not be tolerated. We do not believe that scientists or doctors will contend for more than this.

—A NUMBER of the Liberal leaders in England are at work on an insurance plan under which aid may be rendered to the unemployed. It may take the form of a compulsory and contributory unemployment insurance bill benefiting 2,250,000 skilled and unskilled workers. The insurance would be carried by the State, and 150 labor exchanges would be opened, to aid in regulating the labor market, improving and standardizing labor and equally benefiting employer and worker.

WORKING WONDERS IN A PRISON

o Prisoners. (1) Served Thirty-one Years and Was Finally Found Innocent

Warden J. C. Sanders

No Stripes and Lockstep in this Model Prison

By SAINT N. SINGH

A LITTLE more than a year ago residents of Fort Madison, Ia., began to murmur at the fact that convicts from the State penitentiary, located in that city, were permitted to go out the streets absolutely unattended by guards. It was even whispered about that the cells of some eighty-five prisoners were left unlocked at night. People began to write urgent letters to the newspapers, calling attention to the dangerous innovations introduced by the new warden, J. C. Sanders, and predicting serious trouble. So insistent were the complaints that the State appointed a commission to look into the warden's reforms. Their report not only exonerated the new official from all blame, but held him up for universal praise. Since then the eyes of the whole country have been directed toward this institution in the Middle West, where Christ's command, "Do unto others as ye would that others should do unto you," is literally being carried out in every-day life in a place where it least would be looked for.

Warden Sanders is a composite character. He has been at different periods of his life barber, master tailor, cabinetmaker, printer, professional baseball player, league umpire, director of a band, solo cornetist with a traveling circus, and high school principal. When he was placed at the head of the Iowa State penitentiary as warden of the Fort Madison institution he started in to remould the conditions, and to transform the penitentiary into a reformatory instead of a "deformatory," as it had been in the past.

At first he would saunter carelessly about the prison, hands in pockets, studying just what was wrong with conditions. In the kitchen he found things needed an immediate shaking-up. He knew that no man could be at his best on a steady diet of soup and stew, so he hunted up a chef among the prisoners and arranged with him for a diversified prison menu, which should not cost any more than the old-time slop that had been served, and which, he felt certain, would result in healthier, better behaved, harder working, less sullen men. He was greatly aided by his wife, who is an expert cook and housekeeper. The kitchen crew readily fell into the spirit of the change, and vied with one another to turn out gastronomical surprises. Potatoes were varied, and served in many tasteful styles; eggs were served occasionally, and puddings and other simple luxuries found their way to the table. Settings were altered to make the dining-hall more homelike and uplifting. Waiters, usually unkempt, were shaved and dressed in white uniforms and caps, and the kitchen force also appeared in immaculate white. Formerly the men were silent and sullen at meals: but this was quickly changed by the warden, who introduced a stringed orchestra, composed of prisoners, who played during the meal hour. Men who had not smiled for years lifted up their brightened faces, and went back to work cheerful and willing.

This new kind of prison reform has continued since that time. Warden Sanders has put himself in the place of the man behind the bars. He is striving to nurture the good in the prisoners and starve out the bad, so that they may be able to stand up like men and do their part when the time comes for the prison doors to open and restore them to liberty.

It would be difficult to enumerate all of the reforms introduced in the prison by this erstwhile school teacher. He organized a glee club, buying the music himself. The prisoners' voices were untrained, but he persevered, and now the Fort Madison Penitentiary Glee Club is considered one of the best in the State. Any prisoner who evinces a taste for music and is willing to learn is eligible to the band and glee club. A historical and literary society was organized, and a lecture course was provided. The convicts paid for the lecture course out of their own pockets.

Warden Sanders next began to remodel the school connected with the penitentiary. The curriculum now embraces all branches ordinarily taught in modern schools. There are 200 pupils in the school, one employed and eleven inmate teachers, and classes are held evenings. The library has been trebled in size, and a daily list of current magazines is circulated among the men. The warden also introduced athletics, with a view to bringing up the physical condition of the prisoners. He gave the men a half hour's leisure immediately following the noonday meal, during which they play basketball and indoor baseball.

In the hospital each man now receives a private examination. The old gray-and-striped blankets have been removed from the hospital beds and their place supplied with neat white spreads. The general gloom of the place was so transformed that the inmates did not recognize it.

Warden Sanders next designed new uniforms for the prisoners, that were calculated to conduce to a spirit of self-respect. He now uses the old-time striped suits merely as a punishment for serious infraction of rules. As soon as a new convict has convinced the warden that he is worthy of trust, he is given a neat gray uniform and cap, somewhat resembling a letter carrier's suit. Convicts who are able to afford it are permitted to wear, on Sundays and holidays, laundered dress shirts, stiff collars, fancy ties and good shoes, and even to have their shoes polished. This has resulted in a considerable saving of money to the people of the State of Iowa, for the men are eager to secure the money to wear these respectable clothes, and thus get away from the prison taint as much as possible. Over seventy per cent. of the prison population of Fort Madison have purchased their own shirts, shoes, collars, ties and underwear. No prisoner ever is designated by a number, but invariably is called by his own name. An expert dentist and an optician attend to all eye and dental troubles among the men. A fire department has been organized among the convicts, and the cell doors of eighty-five men are left unlocked every night, in order that they may respond immediately to an alarm. In several instances their efforts have saved the prison shops from destruction. These men never have shown any disposition to take advantage of their privileges. The cell doors of the water carriers are also left unlocked at night. The sanitary conditions have materially improved.

A Talk With the Men in the Prison Lecture-room

Prisoners are allowed to decorate their cells. This permission extends even to the chapel, formerly a bare, dismal place, the walls of which are now decorated with religious scenes, painted by an inmate under the direction of Warden Sanders. The offices in the penitentiary also have been beautifully decorated in the same way. Thus every effort has been made to convert the place into a cheerful, homelike place, rather than a dreary dungeon. Even the prison yard now becomes a bower of beauty in the summer time, the convicts being permitted to raise flowers according to their own fancies.

Furthermore, the idea of privacy and private rights is emphasized. Letters addressed to prisoners are delivered immediately upon passing the proper authority. The men are permitted to have paper and writing materials in their cells all the time, without restriction, and those who are so fortunate as to receive the daily papers or weekly or monthly publications from outside are permitted to hand them on to those less fortunate. When the wives and children of the men come to visit them they are allowed to see them in the warden's private parlor, or alone in the office. Moreover, this humane Christian warden encourages the women folks to visit the prisoners, for he believes the men may be strengthened morally by keeping up the home ties. He is doing everything in his power to rouse the spark of manhood in them into activity and to make them Christians, eager to do the right thing when they go out into the world of temptation once more. The warden is a firm believer in his own experiment. His practical Christian faith has already gone very far toward changing a dark, dismal dungeon into an institution which is purging the unfortunate men of the taint of crime and inspiring them to lead a healthy, normal, productive life.

More Light on the Old Bible

WHEN the theory was first advanced, by some brilliant writers of the "new school" of theology, that the historical records of the Old Testament were largely of Babylonish origin, Bible lovers were at a loss how to meet such an attack. It was boldly claimed by the writers in question that the Bible, as a whole, was borrowed from Babylonian literature and that the narratives of the Creation, the Deluge and the Tower of Babel had all been deciphered in Babylonian tablets of a date contemporary with Abram. It all seemed very conclusive, but the peculiar thing about such claims, as about all others from similar sources, is that they rest upon insecure foundations, being largely guesswork. It is not surprising, therefore, to find the Babylonian theory utterly demolished by later discoveries, which are described in a book just issued by one of the leading Bible scholars in America, Dr. Albert T. Clay, professor of Semitic Philology and Archæology of the University of Pennsylvania. His work, which is entitled Amurru, the Home of the Ancient Semites, shows conclusively that the religion and culture of ancient Israel are not of Babylonish origin. He has made extensive research among the earliest Aramaic, Egyptian and Amoritic remains, and the result has been to demonstrate the authenticity of Bible history. Amurru was a land in Syria, which in very ancient times included the whole of Palestine as it is known to-day. Its people were Semites, and they held as a part of their religious history practically all the essential elements of Bible history, as we know it. From Palestine these beliefs were transmitted to Babylonia, the priority of the Amoritic beliefs being proved by research. Much of the Babylonian culture emanated from this source. Professor Clay says: "The researches of the last few decades have illustrated almost every page of the Old Testament, one way or another. Many historical facts here found have been confirmed by parallel inscriptions. The result of the investigation seems to be in every particular that the traditions handed down by the Old Testament are, in every instance, to be considered as being of genuine worth."

Professor Clay's book will no doubt excite controversy. It demolishes with a single blow a whole line of the pet theories of the "higher critics," and shows upon what slender basis their claims rest.

The Overburdened

AH, those thorns—many and keen in our flesh as they may have been—let us thank God for them all, and even rejoice if his strength may be magnified in our weakness. That was the sweet and peaceful issue to which Paul was brought. He did not see it, and did not want it at first. "For this thing I besought the Lord thrice that it might depart from me."

And have not you done the same? Have not you called to your heavenly Father, with longing heart and streaming eyes, hour after hour, day after day, that some cup at your lips might pass away? That some threatened trial, which would darken all your life, might be spared you? That some bodily disease might be healed? That some bereavement you saw coming might be kept off, and the feet of the king of terrors be stayed outside?

There are two ways of helping an over-burdened man: one is to give him less to do, to take some of the burden off his back; the other is to get under it with him. This was the way the gracious Lord thought best to answer Paul. It was more important that Paul should see, and the world should see to the end of time, how gloriously God can couple his strength to the pitiable weakness of one of his children, than it was that the child should suffer no special weakness at all. And so, "My grace is sufficient for thee." No words in all the blessed Book have oftener brought comfort and hope to the believer's soul through all the years and centuries since they were first spoken. God be thanked that so many know what that triumph is—that so many are living every day in the peace and glory of it.

A NOTABLE SERIES

IN a recent issue we announced the early publication of a series of articles by Mr. E. R. Johnstone, making noteworthy comparisons between our own nation and others. The initial article of the series appears in this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. In the preparation of these articles the author has a definite purpose in view. He proceeds according to a well-conceived plan, taking up in due order of comparison the governmental system, politics, judiciary and laws, commercial customs, social and business usages, culture and general characteristics of our own people and those of other lands, and contrasting them, without bias or prejudice. These articles are written by one who has traveled widely in many lands and who, having made a thorough study of that whereof he writes, is well qualified to compare our own national points of strength and weakness with those of other civilized peoples at the present time. Frequently the contrast will be sharp and not altogether flattering; but such a criticism must needs be truthful to be of value, and we may learn much from these articles that can be made of practical value in our own lives, wholly apart from the varied information they will furnish, which to very many readers will be in a sense the equivalent of a special educational course on international affairs.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD having absorbed the HOME HERALD, of Chicago, former subscribers of the latter publication will please bear in mind that all communications relating to subscriptions (new or renewal), advertising, editorial contributions, complaints, inquiries — in fact, letters of any character whatsoever—should be addressed to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, New York City.

When you write, please say, "I was a subscriber to the HOME HERALD."

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

King Albert's Coronation

LEOPOLD FERDINAND, the new King of the Belgians, took the oath on the day following the funeral of his predecessor on the throne. The ceremony was held at the House of Parliament, before the Senators and Deputies, sitting together. The words of the oath were: "I swear to observe the Constitution, and to defend the integrity of the national territory." After this, the new King, remaining seated, read his speech from the throne, which inspired hope in his own and all other peoples, that he would have a wise and prosperous administration. The king took his place under a rich canopy of purple and gold, erected on the site of the tribune and of the presidential chair. Under a smaller canopy stood the Queen, between her two sons. Both the canopies and the dais were identical with those that were used in 1865 for the inauguration of King Leopold II. The King's title is Albert I., and with this name he will rule the Belgians. King Albert was born April 8, 1875, and was the nephew of the late King Leopold II., who died the 17th of last December. King Albert married Princess Elizabeth of Bavaria October 2, 1900; and they have two sons, Prince Leopold and Prince Charles, aged nine and six respectively, and a daughter, Princess Marie José, born in 1906. One of the promises of the new King has received with more favor by the Belgians and the world at large than his pledge of a reform administration of the Congo Free State, whose atrocities have been the disgrace of the civilized world. It is hoped that the new King will be guided by the Supreme Ruler of all nations and administer his exalted office according to the principles of righteousness, justice and mercy, and that the Lord and the King and the people may keep the covenant which Jehoiada the priest made between the Lord, Jehoash and all his people at his coronation as King of Judah, "that they should be the Lord's people." The coronation of the young King of Judah by the priest at the death of his father is thus described:

And he brought forth the king's son and put the crown upon him, and gave him the testimony; and they made him king, and anointed him; and they clapped their hands, and said, God save the king. (II Kings 11 : 12.)

Academy Honors Roosevelt

The Academy of Moral and Political Sciences, of France, on December 18, elected Theodore Roosevelt to associate membership. With this honor he will be entitled, when delivering lectures at the Sorbonne, to wear the plumed cap of an academician, a pearl-handled sword and a suit embroidered with green palms. Mr. Roosevelt received twenty-five votes out of twenty-eight—two did not vote, and one cast a blank ballot. It is likely that Mr. Roosevelt would feel more at home in his rough rider's uniform or in his grizzly bear or lion hunting suit than fixed up in this finery, with cap plumed, sword with a pearl handle and a suit embroidered with palms; and yet Roosevelt, with his rugged animality and his nearness to nature, is much of a gentleman, and looks well in his dress-suit. Although almost a boy in his fondness for sport, he has one of the most virile intellects of his time; is one of the most widely read men of his age and an author of no mean rank, and he will add more lustre to the uniform of the academy than it can reflect on him. It is the man inside of the clothes that constitutes the real vestments and decorations, and not their fabric, color, or cut. Theodore Roosevelt, in his journey from Harvard to a ranch in the West, from the back of a mustang as a cowboy to the Presidential chair, in his promotion from the second place in a regiment of rough riders to the leadership of the armies and navies of the Union, in his hours in the library and over his study-table, in the years of service for his country and his fellow-men, in his trip into the jungles of Africa for scientific research and sport, and now in his proposed visit to the leading universities of the world, who have invited him to come and speak his words of wisdom, appears one of the most unique personalities on the globe, and any institution honors itself in honoring him. Our country, with its many faults and sins, is a long way from decay when it can produce such a specimen of physical, intellectual, moral and sipritual manhood as its ideal. The dominant element in Mr. Roosevelt's character is his faith in the Bible and in the Christ which it reveals, and he stands, the world over, as an example of successful Christian manhood.

Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong. (I. Cor. 16 : 13.)

World's Greatest Soprano

Mary Lasalle, a poor orphan twenty-three years old, from Beatrice, Neb., is said to possess the finest natural soprano voice of any one in the world. She studied a few months with W. L. Hubbard, a music teacher of Chicago. Riccardo Martin, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, discovered her superb native musical qualities in Chicago, and made arrangements for her to come to New York, which she did a few days ago, when competent critics heard her and were wild with enthusiasm at the beauty and charm of her voice. Rich people subscribed a handsome purse and arranged to send her to Florence, Italy, to have a year's study with Maestro Lombardi, after which time she is to return to New York for permanent engagement. If the prophecies which the best musical critics make for her shall be fulfilled, the achievements even of Melba will be eclipsed within the next two years. The human voice in song touches, melts and fires the heart. It is not only a powerful instrument in the enjoyment, inspiration, development and benefit of the souls of others, but is itself an emanation of the absolute Beauty in whose image we have been made. There are some individuals that, like Miss Lasalle, have been endowed with unusual musical faculties, such as were selected for the service of Jehovah; some to play on stringed instruments, and one who, by the beauty and skill of his voice, stood out above the rest was chosen to lead the singers.

And Chenaniah, chief of the Levites, was for song: he instructed about the song, because he was skilful. (I. Chron. 15 : 22.)

The Country's Crops

The Department of Agriculture at Washington recently issued its annual estimate on the country's crops and their value. December 1 it shows the aggregate value of all kinds of harvests for the year 1909 was almost $4,000,000,000, a new high record and a gain over last year of about $274,443,000. The corn crop was worth over a billion and a half dollars. The following table shows the acreage and production of the different crops of 1909 compared with those of 1908.

Crops.	Acreage. 1909.	Production (bushels). 1909.	Production (bushels). 1908.

These enormous crops would be a mockery and weakness if there could not be recorded a corresponding growth in the mental, moral and religious interests of the country. Never were our public schools better maintained, nor did the academies, colleges and universities show better evidences of thrift. The hearts of our rich people, and those of moderate means as well, have been opened to the widest charities, and the religious statistics show that the various churches are growing faster than the population in proportion. And while there are great sins to cure and injustices to overcome, the optimist has abundant reasons for claiming that we never lived in such prosperous times in everything that goes to make the greatest wealth of a nation, and that we never had a better opportunity or encouragement to work in ushering in the kingdom of our Lord. The promise to Abraham of the greatness of the nation he was to found has been fulfilled in the history of America.

And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee and make thy name great. (Gen. 12 : 2.)

Lunatic Wins a Cow

Dr. Thomas Darlington, while Health Commissioner of New York City, recently offered prizes for the best essays on "How Can Clean and Wholesome Milk Be Produced at the Least Cost for the New York Market?" Strange to say, the winner of the second prize is an insane man, who has been a patient at the Middletown State Hospital for the Insane for many years. His name is Ray Sponenbergh, and he was originally committed to the institution from Fulton, N. Y. The prize which was awarded him is a $200 full-bred Jersey cow. The essay revealed such an intimate knowledge of dairy farming, and expressed that knowledge in such clear language, that it excited widespread interest and commendation. The readers thought it was the opinion of an expert scientific dairyman. The highest genius and insanity are often found combined. Insane patients often have periods when their mental faculties assume their normal condition. The success of this man in winning the cow as his prize illustrates the unusual results that often flow from apparently insignificant causes. In the spiritual realm the most wonderful results have been produced by apparently the most feeble instrumentality.

God has chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise. (I. Cor. 1 : 27.)

Thief Buried Alive

There is no end to the devices for getting other people's property. It would seem that every ingenuity conceivable had been employed in this kind of wrongdoing, but recently a man invented a novel method of attempting robbery. It was in the crowded city of New York that the man dug a tunnel, which he intended should come up under a jewelry store or a bank, and give him access to its treasure. The heavy rains softened the earth, which fell in on him and buried him alive, furnishing a new illustration of the fact that those that seek the injury of others injure themselves, and that there are penalties ready to fall upon those who break the law, which penalties are constantly referred to in the Scriptures.

Because there is wrath, beware lest he take thee away with his stroke. (Job 36 : 18.)

SHAKE-UP IN THE FORESTRY SERVICE

IT has been some time since the placidity into which Washington political life has fallen has been so startlingly ruffled as by the sudden dismissal of Chief Forester Pinchot, chief of the Forestry Division in the Department of Agriculture. The act of the President in dismissing Mr. Pinchot attracted double attention from the fact that few men not of Cabinet rank have been so much in the public eye as the chief forester, the first one to bear the title, and also on account of the fierce controversy which has been in progress between the forestry department and Secretary Ballinger, of the Department of the Interior, who has had different views on the methods and extent of the conservation of our national resources.

Mr. Pinchot has made an excellent record as a government official and has accomplished much in arousing the government and the people to the fact that if they did not act practically all the available timber and mineral lands would be taken up, and the extravagance and wastefulness of to-day would have to be paid for, and that heavily, by the generations which come after us. His interest in his favorite subject has, however, in this case carried him too far, and his zeal, or rather excess of zeal, has made him overstep the rules governing the utterances of officials below Cabinet rank and brought him into open conflict with the President, leaving apparently no other course than dismissal open to the Chief Executive.

Mr. Pinchot has been fearful that the best mineral lands and water-power sites still left in the West and in Alaska were about to be taken up by private, unscrupulous interests, and claimed to have good evidence to that effect. Secretary Ballinger claims that the present condition of affairs is the result of our over-generous and lax system of land distribution for many years. He is also an advocate of conservation of our public resources, but claims that conservation should be achieved under the laws as they now exist.

Last fall L. R. Glavis, chief of the field service of the General Land Office, visited the President and put before him reports in which he cast doubts on the official sincerity of the Secretary of the Interior. Mr. Glavis was dismissed, as well as several other officials of the General Land Office. Mr. Pinchot upheld Mr. Glavis in his contention and the present trouble is the result. The chief forester urged that an investigation be made, and spoke doubtfully of the integrity of certain officials of the Department of the Interior. Mr. Price and Mr. Shaw, two officials of the Department of Agriculture, were charged with assisting in preparing the Glavis charges and making a campaign against the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. Gifford Pinchot

At last a bill was introduced into Congress calling for an investigation of the now famous Pinchot-Ballinger controversy, and President Taft sent a message dealing in part with the subject. Mr. Pinchot, at this juncture, adopted an unusual course and one contrary to the rules governing the officials serving in a subordinate capacity. According to the regulations, no officials can give out information or make official statement without the consent of the secretary of his department. Mr. Pinchot, however, sent a letter to the Senate, which was read by Senator Dolliver. In this letter he upheld his position, and it was intended undoubtedly to offset the effect of the President's communication. Its reading caused intense surprise, as it was nothing less than a defiance of the President, and, as most people believe, a challenge to remove him from his position of chief forester. Greatly to Mr. Pinchot's surprise, the President did. Mr. Pinchot said in his letter that Price and Shaw acted in behalf of the public when confronted with an extraordinary situation. He said they had violated a rule of propriety, and he had reprimanded them, but recommended that further action against them be dropped.

When the act of Mr. Pinchot was made known to the President he considered the situation in two Cabinet meetings, and then sent a letter to Mr. Pinchot, saying that by his own act he had terminated his usefulness in the Forestry Division. The President's letter covered the entire ground of the controversy and was most moderate in tone.

President Taft has selected as chief forester Henry S. Graves, who is now director of the Yale University Forestry School. Mr. Graves will give up his duties as a professor at Yale this month and take charge of the national forestry service about February 1. He has had much experience and his appointment has given much satisfaction. He studied first in Yale and then went to Europe to get a first hand knowledge of forestry methods in vogue there. In 1897 he made a thorough investigation of the forests of the Black Hills. The next year he became an associate of Mr. Pinchot, and remained in the government service until 1900, holding the rank of assistant chief forester. He was then appointed director of t Yale Forestry Schools.

Albert F. Potter has been appoin associate forester. He is a practi man, of large experience on the We ern ranges. He went into cattle a sheep raising in the days when the dian was a real menace and the her had to watch over his stock to keep from being run off to some Apa encampment. He was first named acting forester in place of Mr. Pinc and then given his present post.

workmen, several thousand being engaged in the various shops, and more than a thousand of them, with their families, living upon the Lagercrantz estate.

This has given him the opportunity to put into practical operation some of his plans for the betterment of the working classes. Sanitary conditions have been introduced into their houses, shortened working hours have been granted, and amusements devised for their recreation. As far as possible, he is trying to persuade the men to buy small plots of ground, upon which he builds modern, sanitary cottages, and thus he enables them to become home-owners and independent men.

"This system, I believe, would do more than all else to solve labor troubles," said the Minister, "for as soon as a man becomes a land-owner, no matter how small a one, he ceases to be a menace to society. He has become a part of it, and thereafter he will try to build up rather than tear down. But the process is slow, and I am not yet sure what success we will have in Sweden. It seems to me that the outlook in this country is brighter; there are so many more chances for the men, thanks to the natural resources of the continent.

"There is one thing which surprises me, and which surprises all Europeans, about America, and that is the marvelous growth of your cities. In Europe we try to stem that growth; it seems to us that it is wiser to persuade the people to live in the country as far as possible. Surely, agricultural life is more simple and sane than life in a crowded city can possibly be, and I believe that, could people of even moderate means be persuaded to leav the city and go into the country, especially here where there are such great and wonderful opportunities in agricultural pursuits, it would not only be better for them morally, but also financially."

In Sweden, as in many other parts of the world, the liquor habit has been the greatest curse of the nation, and Minister de Lagercrantz has devoted much time and study to the best method to stem it. He thinks that Sweden has gone a long way toward the solution of the problem, in the Gothenburg system, which has been widely introduced throughout the larger cities of the country. By this system all private liquor selling is prohibited and the municipal government becomes the only dealer. It allows liquor to be sold in a certain number of public houses, but only by salaried men employed by the municipality, and the liquor can only be purchased when food accompanies it. This does away with the bar and all saloons, and has reduce the amount of liquor consumed to a surprisin degree.

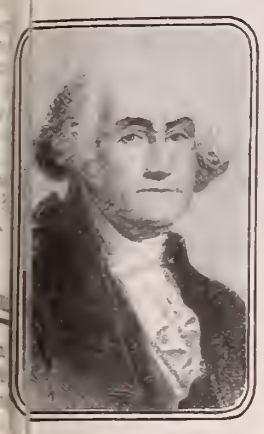
Minister de Lagercrantz is most fortunate i having a wife who fully sympathizes with him i all these ethical questions. She is quite his a tithesis in appearance—a dainty, dark-eyed, darl haired little gentlewoman, whose cordial manne and soft, low voice would make her friends an where. She is the daughter of an old and distin guished Swedish family also, her father, Wi helm Croneborg, having been for many years th senior Senator of Sweden and a man of grea wealth and influence. Madame de Lagercrantz is cultured woman, an accomplished linguist and a authority on art and literature. She ably second the Minister in all his philanthropies, and in addi tion is at the head of an organization of Swedis women to aid friendless girls and women, a charit which is doing great good in the larger towns o the kingdom.

There are seven children in this delightful family six girls and one boy, the latter of whom inherits hi father's name and will succeed to the estate. A the children are now at the country place in Sweden the most loved of all places to them; but last yea the two elder daughters, Miss Mary and Miss Eva spent the winter in Washington, where they wer exceedingly popular with the young people of th official set. Miss Mary enters enthusiastically int all her father's plans for the betterment of his peo ple. She has inaugurated many plans of her ow for their pleasure and benefit. In a large hal which her father has had erected for her upon th estate, she has established reading rooms, a recrea tion hall, where she has frequently some kind o amusement or entertainment provided for them, an in many other ways is looking after their welfare It is needless to add that her people are devoted t her. To them no canonized saint could be as love able and as good as their "Miss Mary."

AMERICA'S CONSTITUTION THE BEST

1—Our Country, its Laws, its People and its Customs Contrasted with Those of Other Lands



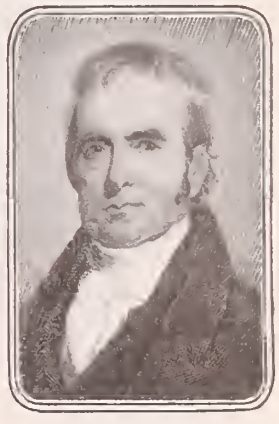
George Washington

Thomas Jefferson

John Adams

Joseph D. Story

Benjamin Franklin



J. Marshall

By E. R. JOHNSTONE

O one has ever disputed, successfully, the truth of the deliberate statement by Gladstone, "The American Constitution is the mst wonderful work ever struck off at a given time bythe brain and purpose of man."

he best proof of the superiority of this "wonderfwork" is found in the existence and conditions of th forty-six commonwealths which, under the Constution, make up the great power known as the Uted States, or, according to that wise statesman, Jn Hay, "America."

Vebster defined "constitution" to be "The princi es, or fundamental laws, which govern a State, opther organized body of men, and are embodied in -tten documents, or implied in the institutions ar usages of the country or society; organic law."

he American Constitution is our written organic la; has been such for more than one hundred and tnty years; has withstood attacks from within ar without; survived the most terrible civil war inhe world's history; has proved its adaptability ar governing strength under conditions of life and nional responsibility that the minds of its origirtors could not have imagined; is to-day the inpiration of all freedom-lovin peoples, the monitor for wk or vicious governments, th example for well-disposed rers everywhere.

Do you know what needs insred our Constitution? Are yu acquainted with the history o its conception and birth? I you appreciate the fundanntal greatness of its three disions of government? Did yu ever read and study the dument itself, bearing in nd the effect it would have on your personal fortunes ad liberties were it to be andoned?"

f you can answer "yes" to tse questions you are a far bter American, a more valuae member of society, than if yr answer be "no." If you ve not read and digested the Cnstitution that made the Uited States possible, I adjure yu to lose no time in remedyig this vital defect in your ntal equipment.

Of course, it is unpleasant to tnk, it is not necessarily true, tt were a new Constitution ressary our 90,000,000 of ple could not furnish a cvention equal in dignity, patriotism, perspicacity ad statesmanship to that composed of fifty-three degates, representing less than 4,000,000 people, vo met in the State House in Philadelphia May 17, 137, and gave to the world this great certificate o national unity and strength.

Granting, however, that in the end the genius of o land would rise superior to self-seeking, polit-id intrigue and honest diversity of belief, and that rw "Fathers of the Republic" would be made consrate by their words and works, we may be sure t present Constitution would be the model and i piration of the new. Let us thank God, as patots, that no such substitution confronts us! That i the minds of the best and purest of our people no dbt exists that our present "organic law" will elure through the life of the republic. It may be ressary to amend, or rather to amplify, our basic cument. We hear much of amendment noways, but again is there reason for thankfulness in that this wise foundation of our nation contains provisions for such amendment and that these provisions preclude ill-considered or destructive action.

Need for a Constitution

The need for a federation of the American provinces and for a Constitution or agreement that should serve as "organic law" was felt as early as 1697, when William Penn submitted what is known as his "Plan of Union," and suggested a "congress," consisting of two delegates from each province, to meet annually in time of war and at least once every two years in time of peace. Naturally, this congress would have been held subject to royal decree and its principal functions would have been to adjust differences between the existing provinces.

No action was taken on Penn's suggestion, though it was generally recognized as good, and it was not until June 19, 1754, that a real assemblage of delegates was held in Albany. A conspicuous figure there, as everywhere in every nation which he visited, was Benjamin Franklin—by many foreign and some native writers acclaimed as the genius of the new world.

The State House, Philadelphia, in 1775

Franklin drew up a plan of union, which was amended and adopted. A President-General, to be appointed by the crown, was provided for, as was a grand council, to be chosen by the several provincial assemblies. The vexed and mooted questions of customs, taxes, provision for armies of defense and offense, territorial rights and the like, were to be decided by this grand council. The plan of the Albany Convention fell through because some of the provinces thought it gave too much power to the crown, while others insisted that it conferred too much independence on the people. Probably this was the earliest general division between those afterward to be designated "Tories" and "Rebels."

When the loathed Stamp Act, the tea duties, and other ill-advised actions of George III. and his ministers made war inevitable, a congress was held in New York (October 7, 1763), wherein a "Declaration of Rights," very moderate in tone and fully recognizing royal rights, but protesting against taxation without representation, was adopted.

To write of the various meetings, declarations, protests and petitions that originated in the provinces from 1765 to 1775 would be to traverse the history of the beginnings of the war for American independence. Through all that strenuous time, however, the need for union and for a written law which would preserve liberty in life and thought was felt and accented in speeches, papers, town meetings, pulpits and homes.

When the guns of Concord and Lexington (April 19, 1775) opened the struggle that was to bring the "union of States, the union of hands, the union of hearts none can sever," preparations were already forward for the first real Congress of the Provinces, the same meeting in Philadelphia May 10, 1775, and being the fruit or ripe continuation of the more unsettled and undetermined body that met in the same city the year before.

First Attempts at Constitution Building

In November, 1777, the "Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union between the States" were agreed upon, and given to the country for ratification. This first Constitution, known as the "Thirteen Articles," was adopted by eight States July 9, 1778, and for eleven years was the supreme law of the new nation. It has been ridiculed and scoffed at, but, like Mercutio's wound, "it served," and many of the same men who, later, drafted our present Constitution, had to do with the framing of the Articles of Confederation. The document was inherently weak, in that it gave too little authority to Congress, but it was a basis upon which the greater structure could be reared.

After the close of the American Revolution the thirteen States found themselves beset with contentions as to the best plans for the future, overwhelmed with debt, little considered abroad, helpless for real defense against possible foes without and savage foes within. The great minds of the republic saw but one remedy—real federation under a central, strong, law-embodied government, that should still preserve to the States rights insisted upon by their several peoples. Congress, as then constituted, could make treaties but could not enforce them; could borrow money, but could give no assurance of payment; could coin money, but could not import bullion; could declare war, but could not raise an army. As one writer put it, "May declare everything—can do nothing."

In May, 1781, Pelatiah Webster urged a national convention, for "the express purpose of ascertaining, defining, enlarging and limiting the duties and powers of their (the Congress') constitution."

Noah Webster, in 1784-85, urged "a new system of government, which should act, not on the States, but directly on individuals, and vest in Congress full power to carry its laws into effect."

Finally, on January 21, 1786, Virginia took the initiative, and appointed delegates to what was afterward known as the Constitutional Convention

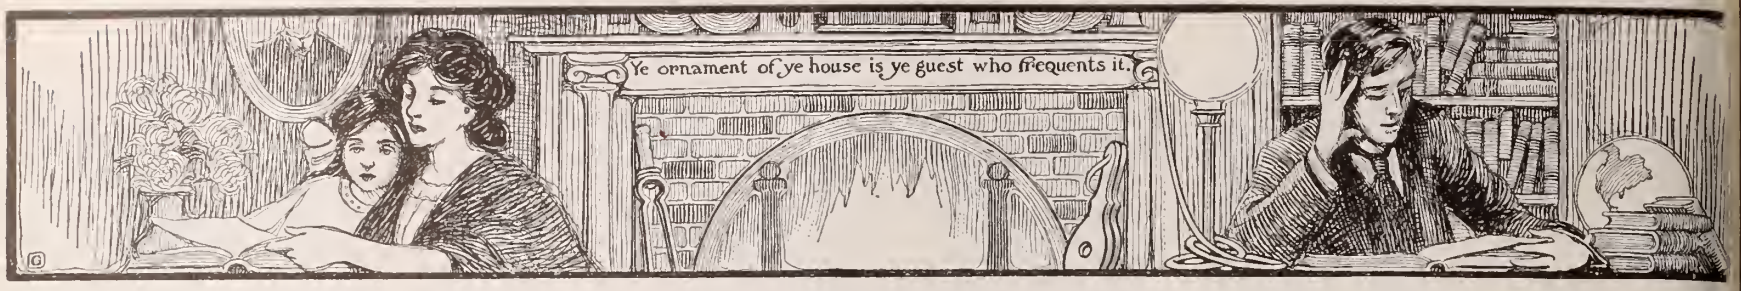
AROUND THE HOME HEARTH



Depression as a Malady

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

THERE is something alarming in the greater frequency of nervous disorders at present as compared with their record in the past. Life on this continent for most of us used to be harder than it now is. There was more work to do, there was less money to spend, and, on the whole, our homes were less luxurious. Yet we seldom heard in those austere days much about melancholia. Our present pace hurries us along at railway speed. Where formerly a man wrote as many letters as he could with his own hand, and did his day's work in somewhat leisurely comfort, he now does four times as much in dictation to several stenographers. Where of old a woman had a half dozen friends to take tea with her, ran in upon her neighbors or welcomed them when they dropped in with thimble and needle, she now has a reception, entertains a crowd, and goes to bed thoroughly worn out. The next day and the one after she joins a crowd in a friend's house, and meeting dozens of people, returns to her own home without having had time for more than a handshake or a sentence or two with hostess and guest.

Apart from the social life that exacts haste and waste of every participant there is the anxiety born of an attempt to live up to fictitious standing. Mrs. A. cannot afford the style of living that is entirely easy for Mrs. B. Her income allows her to live quietly, with no superfluities, but she feels that her rugs, her curtains, her waxed floors, and even her table, must be as nearly as possible precisely like those of her neighbor. Living beyond one's income is a terrific strain, and will wear the strongest person to shreds. This is one potential cause of nervous depression.

Another cause, and a different one, is monotony. There are women and men who suffer from the exasperation of doing the same thing over and over every day, and all days, and also from extreme loneliness. Women who are forced to lead solitary lives, where neighbors are few and far between and the men of the house are absent through the daylight hours, often become victims of melancholia because they are so much by themselves and have so little to interest them from the outside. Country life is not in itself monotonous, nor do people in rural communities suffer from isolation. Either in city or country, it is the woman who broods and the man who worries who fall a prey to this form of disease. The remedies are twofold. One of the most beneficial is change of scene. Another is rest for the body and mind. How these are to be secured is sometimes a difficult problem. Considering the risks involved, almost any sacrifice should be made in order that the sufferer may be lifted out of the slough of despond and set upon firm ground. Then the relieved one, looking up to God in renewed faith, may say, "He took me from the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock and established my goings." To fret at people who are depressed, to scold them, or, on the other hand, to treat them with too much commiseration, does little good. They are the victims of disease, and must be treated accordingly.

NOW MIND

Give me your paw, old fellow. That's right;
Be a good dog, and mind on sight.
After the lesson we'll both have fun:
I'll take you off for a splendid run.

The Matter of Tips

In crossing the ocean it is customary for the voyager to make provision for tips. This is over and above the amount paid the company for the passage from port to port. The amount of the tip given to the several stewards on a steamship may vary with the pocketbook and the disposition of the individual passenger, yet there is a certain unformulated idea as to the minimum sum which it is possible to offer. Tips insure many little services that add a great deal to the convenience and comfort of the traveling public.

In hotels and restaurants tips are usually paid to the waiters, and these little fees are taken for granted by most of those who serve the guests at places of popular resort.

In England, the schoolboy looks for and accepts tips from visiting relatives as a matter of course, and shows his gratitude in unstinted measure. American lads dislike to accept pecuniary gifts from any one except their parents. When spending a week-end at the house of a friend, or when leaving a home in which one has been entertained, many persons show their appreciation of the pains taken to please them by servants in the house by giving them a small gratuity. There are hosts and hostesses who frown upon this, and prefer that their guests shall offer nothing of this sort to the people in their employ. Unless a guest is sure that his offer of a tip will be annoying to his host, he need not hesitate to bestow it, as it is usually very welcome to the recipient. One gets large returns in good will and personal liking from these small investments, and possibly small self-denials.

The Messenger Stork

A CURIOUS incident occurred in Northern Ge many. A minister was surprised to find o day that a stork had made its nest upon t roof of his house, and his children having petted feeding it every day, the stork became tame a companionable.

At the first sign of approaching cold weather t stork prepared to flit to warmer climes. The ch dren were sad at the thought of losing their pet, b their parents consoled them with the assuran that the bird would surely return in the sprir The children, still uneasy at the idea of the sto not being cared for during the long winter, co sulted together and evolved a brilliant idea, whi they immediately proceeded to put into execution.

They wrote a little note in their best Germ script, stating that the stork was very dear them, and begging the good people in whose count it might spend the winter to be kind to their p and send it back in the sprir They sealed the note, fastened to a ribbon and tied it around t bird's neck and tucked it und its wing. The next day th sadly watched the stork wing i way toward milder skies. T snow and ice came. Christm time brought the children gif and fresh amusements, but the summer pet was not forgotten.

When the spring came rou again their little feet used climb to the roof day by day, loo ing and longing for the stork return, and behold one day the it was, tame and gentle as eve Great was the children's deligh but what was their surprise discover around its neck and und its wing another bright ban with a note attached, addressed the children who wrote the lett the stork brought. The ribb was quickly untied, and the mi sive opened.

It was from a missionary Africa, stating that he had rea the children's note, and had care for the stork, and he thought th young people whose hearts ha prompted them to provide for th comfort of a bird through th winter would be willing to hel clothe and feed the destitute boy and girls of his mission. A fu name and address followed. Th German children were full of syn pathy, and the missionary's not won a golden answer from th family. Other letters came an went by post between them unti by and by, the children learne to know the missionary an his little black waifs almos as well as they knew the belove stork that had proved so trusty a messenger.

—PROPERTY RIGHTS OF WOMEN. In most States of th Union the property rights of married women are jealousl guarded, and if there be any difference the laws are mo favorable to wives than to husbands. Your feeling that wome do not help make the laws is not justified by reality. Wome may not vote, but they influence the men who do, and they a as potential without the ballot as they would be with i Women will never succeed in gaining the vote by the preser popular methods of unseemly violence. Why should they mak themselves ridiculous?

—REALISM IN LITERATURE. Your question, as I understan it, is How far may an author approach realism in dealing wit evil? There are two ways in which an author may treat vic He may so describe it that it will be hateful in the eyes of hi readers, his approach to it being that of the surgeon who cut out a cancer. On the other hand, he may throw over it glamour of beauty so that his book may be a real means o propagating vice. The latter way seems popular at present The best method of putting an end to bad books is neither t read them nor to advertise their existence by telling how ba they are.

QUITE reluctantly Virginia obeyed that mastery which Joris could always exercise over her if he desired. She gathered a dozen spikes of lavender, blue as the sky, and sweet as heavenly incense, and dropped them between the folded lawn of the handkerchief.

Walking a little apart, they approached the house, and heard as they entered it the sound of hearty laughter and domineering talk. "There is some stranger present, Joris," said Virginia softly.

Together they entered the living room, and then involuntarily both of them stood still. At the large table Captain Van Vroom and Batavius De Vries were sitting. Between them was a pile of papers tied with pink tape, and many little columns of golden guineas; and the faces of both men were shining with satisfaction. For a moment the picture remained unbroken, then Batavius leaped to his feet, and with outstretched hands came toward Virginia.

"My Virginia!" he cried. "My dear Virginia! My own sweet Virginia! Let you have grown—yes, indeed you have grown, and I am glad of that. Will you not speak? Have you no kiss for Batavius?" and he made as though he would embrace her.

She drew back and stood erect, and her face became white and cold as snow.

"Sir!" said Joris.

"Be quiet, Joris!" she cried, with passionate imperiousness. "I can speak for myself."

"But you will speak to me, my Virginia! Many lovely presents I have brought thee. Speak, dear one."

"I am glad you are safe home, Batavius."

"Then kiss me. You kissed me when I went away."

"I was a schoolgirl then, a child."

"Yes, and now you are a woman. That is right. I have no objections to modesty in a woman. I approve of it. And who is your friend? I do not remember him."

Then Virginia introduced Lieutenant Artaveldt to Captain De Vries, and the Captain said, "The land service, I suppose. I am a sailor and a trader. Come down to my ship—The Arms of Stuyvesant—and I will give you some strange things, both to eat and to drink. A man does not go round the world, and bring nothing back, or a great fool he must be; and Virginia's friend will be welcome to me. I am honest in these things."

And he certainly looked into Artaveldt's eyes with the clear, open expression of a man who has no second motive. Nor was he unhandsome. The sea had bronzed his broad face, and his hair hung straight and black around it. He was of medium height, a vigorous, sunburned man, with splendid teeth and round black eyes, and a voice holding the frank, yet melancholy, tones of all seafaring men. In a few years he would probably be stout and heavy.

While he was talking to Virginia and Joris, Captain Van Vroom was quietly removing the gold and the papers, and Madame was superintending the laying of the dinner table. And as reticence was a quality quite unknown to Batavius, he at once produced some curious little boxes holding Indian jewelry, and insisted on Virginia and Joris examining them.

"I judge of such things correctly," he said with the air of a connoisseur, "and I am satisfied with the choice I have made. Is not this opal a gem worth having, Virginia? And these rings, my dear? And this locket set with sapphires? When I was in London I intended to have my portrait painted for you, and put into the locket, but I found disagreeable events in London; and people were asking me this and that about affairs I had nothing to do with. So I made haste out to sea. I came quickly away from Boston for the same reason."

"'I am a Dutchman, Lieutenant, born in Amsterdam,' said De Vries"

"And I think in New York you will not be able to escape meddling," said Joris. "The question here is liberty."

"Well, then, Lieutenant, I adore liberty—that is, peaceful liberty."

"It will not be peaceful liberty long, Batavius," said Virginia. "The rights of the people have been trampled on, and they are very angry."

"Wherever I went in Boston they were talking just such nonsense."

"The government and the Governor of Massachusetts are very unpopular, Captain, I believe?" said Joris interrogatively.

"I will tell you very plainly, Lieutenant, that I saw the Governor when I was in Boston. He came into James Bradwell's store, and stood close by my side. And when I spoke politely to him—for I am always polite—he took off his hat, and was quite friendly with me. So I let him feel that he had my approval, and Bradwell was astonished at the notice taken of me. That is my way. I am a sailor and a trader, and I will have nothing to do with the King's business. My own business is on the Arms of Stuyvesant, or at Van Vroom and Company, 14 Wall Street, coffee and spice brokers, and dealers in East Indian wares of all descriptions; glad to see you at either place, Lieutenant."

"Thank you, Captain. But tell me, if your rights as a citizen were taken from you, what would you do?"

"My rights are on my ship. If any one, in a thievish or unfriendly spirit, touched a plank of her I should not complain. I should get rid of the offender for everlasting. Grumblers are low fellows. I can't bear them."

"Still, Captain, we must all bear our share in our country's honor or dishonor."

"I am a Dutchman, Lieutenant, born in Amsterdam and christened in the Oude Kirk of Amsterdam. The government of Holland has no quarrel with her burghers. Every man minds his own business, and lets the government attend to public affairs. I tell you plainly, that a man who is a sailor and a trader cannot afford to get the name of troubling himself about politics." He knew little of life on shore and he had no curiosity about it, except as it touched his own life; so he turned to Virginia with a fresh eagerness. "Come, dear one!" he said, "let us look at the gems."

Virginia held the boxes in her hands, but before she could make any reply, young Harry Rutgers entered; and as he came with a special letter to Captain De Vries, Joris and Virginia found the opportunity to withdraw themselves into the comparative privacy of the large bow window.

"It were best for you to leave us, Joris," said Virginia. "Every moment I fear myself there will be trouble."

"An explanation of our positions must now be made, Virginia. I wish with all my heart it had taken place earlier."

"The fault of the delay is mine, Joris. I thought delay was best. I did not believe Batavius would be here before the feast of Saint Nicholas."

"He spoke to you as if you were going to marry him."

"That is what he thinks. Since I was a baby he has thought so."

"And you loved that man? No, it is not possible!"

"Well, then, I did not dislike him. He has been a kind of fairy godfather to me. Beautiful things of all kinds he brought me, and I had not seen thee then, Joris. After I saw thee, dearest, there was no other in all the world."

"Now what is to be done? To me it appears best to tell your father at once we are promised to each other."

"My father will speak to me as soon as Batavius goes. That is certain. Then I will tell him plainly that I will marry no one but thee. Mother is calling us to dinner; do not stay today, Joris."

"It seems that you are glad to be quit of me."

"Now you are unreasonable. You know—oh, you know why it is best!"

So with an air of some slight offense, Joris left, passing Batavius and Harry Rutgers—who were in earnest conversation—with a formal bow; and nursing all the way to Artaveldt house a feeling of anger at his dismissal.

"But there were rings and lockets to examine," he muttered angrily, "and the lover who comes with gems and rich presents is not to be put off for a poor gentleman who has only his heart and his sword to offer. Virginia is a woman, and therefore to be won by any black-browed pirate who can deck her hands with opals, and her throat with sapphires, and his likeness included!" and he laughed with a consuming scorn.

For he did really think Virginia had been more polite and interested than there was any occasion to be, and, moreover, that he himself had been shuffled off at dinner-time like a most unwelcome guest. And it did really seem as if that day Joris was the one person not wanted. Madame had made a place for him at the table, and was the only one who made an inquiry concerning him.

"No one asked him to stay, mother," said Virginia, "and of course he has gone home."

"And pray, since when has Joris Artaveldt needed to be asked to draw in his chair?"

"There were strangers to-day, and he thought he might be in the way."

The dinner was prolonged far into the afternoon. Harry Rutgers was anxious for any news Batavius could give regarding affairs in England and Boston. The Captain and Batavius were in high spirits, and Madame echoed their satisfaction. Only Virginia was silent and indifferent.

After the condition of Boston had been as thoroughly considered as Batavius was willing to supply material for, there was a pause of nervous length, and then Rutgers asked, "Were you in Glasgow, Captain?"

"Yes," he answered.

"And how did you find affairs there?"

"I found affairs there as miserable as a lot of bad-tempered Scotchmen could make them. I think the men of Glasgow will do a great deal toward the repeal of the Stamp Act."

Harry was delighted, and answered with great excitement, "My father holds the same opinion. He will be delighted to hear you second it, Captain."

"Well, then, I am wise, I reflect forward. I ask what does this mean? What does that mean? What must be the end of it? And I tell myself—'Batavius, Scotchmen will tear their union with England to tatters, rather than do without their snuff.'"

"My father thinks as you do, Captain."

"Then Colonel Rutgers has reflected also. Few men I have seen do that. They are led by their feelings, which are generally wrong."

"Then," said Virginia pointedly, "then, Captain, I hope you will not be led by your feelings."

"My dear Virginia, I was speaking of politics and business—these things should be ruled by reason. But when a man thinks of a woman, that is different; about a woman no man can reason. That is because she is to be judged by the soul! by the intellect!"

"Soul! Intellect!" and Virginia looked with wide open eyes of amazement at Batavius. It was as if she had told him plainly, "You possess neither the one nor the other." He felt the thrust sent home with such a scornful glance, and shook himself impatiently; then he continued:

"I am a sailor and trader, and a man of peace, and I dislike quarreling; and Glasgow is a quarrelsome city. A grievance of some kind it always has; but never have I seen it in such a blazing passion as it is now. I tell you plainly, the men of Glasgow will be in London soon if their trade with America is not resumed. I saw one gathering of these red-cheeked, red-bearded, angry men, and I think if the King could have heard them shout, 'Repeal the Stamp Act!' he would have done it instanter, without waiting for any parliament to help him. Sir, you could hear their roar from the Broomielaw to Dumbarton. I tell you what is true, for I respect the truth, and what is to hinder me confessing it?"

Virginia looked at him with eyes flashing contempt, Harry Rutgers, with amusement, and Captain Jan and Madame with real admiration. But before any expression could be given to these sentiments the door was flung open by a servant in sky-blue livery, and Lady Rose Harley alighted in the middle of the company. "Alighted" is the word most capable of explaining her entrance, for only a bird darti from some hidden branch to t ground could express the miracle her presence. One moment she w not there, and the next moment s was embracing Virginia, and radiati her beauty and influence on every c in the room. But it was to Capta Jan she addressed herself:

"I have come to show you my n frock, Captain," she said, as she sto before him, and spread out her ho and the lovely silks that shrouded "Is it not modesty itself? Notice t delicate browns, and the bodice in go colored damask, and the pipings of t same. And look at my bronzed sh with gold buckles, to match my ne lace and my bracelets. Could t Committee on Household Matters c sire anything more unassuming?"

"My dear Lady Rose," said the Ca tain, "a man must make some n words if he would praise you rigl Your dress suits you from head to fe Just as the feathers of a little bird su it, so your dress suits you."

Rose's face shone with pleasu She turned to Harry Rutgers, and i cidentally included Batavius in the re ognition. "Take notice, young gentl men," she said, "of a perfect comp ment. None of you know in these da how to pay one, but Captain Jan c teach you." Then she looked fro Madame to Batavius, and Madame u derstood, for Batavius was standi on the very tip-toes of expectatio Here was a real titled lady, and he w going to speak to her, perhaps ev walk in the garden with her. Such a honor was beyond all dreams, yet was coming, and he told himself Bat vius De Vries must rise to the occasio

Certainly he put on what he consi ered his best manner, and under Rose encouragement he soon grew eloquen and began to tell her about his adve tures and investments, and as soon a he was sure of his ground, to free express his opinions on the politic crisis then crippling the city.

"New York is rich and discontente as is her way," he said.

"But New York is not rich no Captain."

"My lady, the men are not workin and whoever will not work is poor, a matter of course. And they are n particular in their principles, and mu feel the chastisement of poverty."

"Still men want their political right Captain."

"My lady, I am a sailor and a trade born in Amsterdam, and on the sea w have whatever rights we wish to hav Rights! Of what use are they to man in his business? I like to do m business with a person who pays hi taxes to the government, and defend religion and morality. If a man ha his good profits, they are his be rights."

"You must try and convert Captai Van Vroom to your opinions, sir, the are so sensible."

"Shall I tell you, my lady, how mat ters stand? I am to marry Virgini in a few weeks, and then I shall spea to my father about his foolishness."

"Have you heard the rich house o Eastervelt has become bankrupt?"

"They are Lutherans. They hav even a Roman Catholic bookkeepe What can they expect?"

"The Governor declares them to b honest gentlemen. Trade now run strange hazards. Every busines house feels it."

"That is so, my lady. But you mus not suppose Van Vroom and De Vries 14 Wall Street, have nothing to do. cannot have my business injured b other men's foolishness."

"You will be stronger than the Kin of England!"

"He is crazy. When he signed th Stamp Act he was crazy."

"The poor King!"

Author of a Famous Hymn

THERE are few religious and church-going people who are not familiar with that popular Gospel hymn, "Whiter Than Snow"; but without looking it up in the song-books, there are few who are able to name the author. In Settlement, at Osterdock Ia., lives Eden R. Latta, who not only wrote the above-named beautiful hymn, but over sixteen hundred hymns as well. In fact Mr Latta can well claim the world's record as being the most prolific hymn writer. He was born March 24, 1838, in a beautiful part of Noble County, Indiana, known as "The Grand Patch," and has immortalized the name of the place in some of his published poems.

E. R. Latta

Early in his career, Mr. Latta composed "Whiter Than Snow" for a work which Professor H. S. Perkins, of Chicago, was compiling. It was entitled "The River of Life," and was published by O. Ditson & Co. The piece sprang into immediate and immense popularity, and, besides being copied into many works, it was translated into Hindi several years ago, for the use of missionaries. Other popular hymns of Mr. Latta, which have brought him much popularity, have been "Wandering Away" and "Blessed Be the Fountain."

Dr. W. E. Penn, the noted Baptist evangelist, stated to Mr. Latta that he had witnessed over five hundred at one time come down for prayer while the hymn, "Wandering Away," was being sung. Besides composing and writing over sixteen hundred popular hymns, the writer has revised hundreds of others in connection with his hymn and song writing.

AMONG THE WORKERS

—REV. W. T. WILLIAMS, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., is devoting his entire time to evangelistic work. He is a regularly ordained minister of the M. E. Church, and is a member of the Wyoming Conference.

—EVANGELIST J. H. GRAMPS, of Fort Plain, N. Y., is engaged in independent missionary work, and during the last season has conducted many successful meetings. He conducted a series of meetings lately in Montreal, Canada.

—EVANGELIST W. W. BENTLEY, who during the year just closed has been very successful in devotional and children's meetings, is arranging to continue the same class of work during 1910. He may be addressed care of this paper.

—REV. DR. WILLIAM R. RICHARDS, one of the best-known Presbyterian ministers in the country, and long pastor of the famous Brick Presbyterian Church, 14 East Thirty-seventh Street, New York, died lately of heart disease, at the age of fifty-nine.

—MRS. M. A. DAWES, East Poultney, Vt., writes of a recent visit to Bethesda Mission, Fairwood, Okla., where Miss E. F. Johnston is the missionary in charge. The work is among the poorest class of Indians. There is great destitution, and any assistance will be welcomed.

—J. B. MITCHELL, missionary to the mountain whites, Harriman, Tenn., can use Bibles, Testaments, hymn books, and other good literature to advantage in his missionary work. He has been many years in this field, which is a very encouraging one.

—MRS. ELIZABETH F. BREWSTER, missionary at Tsinghua, China, makes an appeal for the Mission Press, which needs new facilities for the dissemination of Christian literature, Sunday-School Lessons, Helps, etc., among the Chinese people of that section. The missionaries consider this press and publishing work essential to spiritual life and progress in China.

—AT A GREAT meeting in Brooklyn, held to welcome the returning evangelists, Chapman and Alexander, Mr. Chapman closed his address with these words: "I do not know how long I am to be permitted by God to live, but if I live five years I expect to see China and Japan evangelized and my own beloved country, America, in the throes of a great revival. The hour has come."

—MRS. H. E. EVANS, a reader of this paper, has sent us a very pretty hand-painted calendar for 1910 (in water colors, size 5x7 inches). The painting is done by a worthy Christian woman of artistic taste, who is in dire poverty, and who would be glad to supply them to the readers of this journal at 50 cents each, postpaid. She can be reached through Mrs. Evans, whose address is 145 West Eighth Avenue, Columbus, O.

—MISSIONARY WILLIAM PORTER, a teacher in the Gordon College at Ranal, India, who is now in the United States on furlough, with his wife and little daughter, reports a narrow escape from assassination at the hands of fanatical Hindus on May 2, 1907. A mob of two hundred stormed the mission with clubs and stones, and were driven off with great difficulty. Mrs. Porter was prostrated by the excitement, and has been an invalid ever since.

A SIMULTANEOUS evangelistic campaign is now under way in Lawrence, Mass., and vicinity conducted by Dr. Arthur J. Smith, superintendent of the Evangelistic Committee of New York City. Evangelists H. D. Sheldon, E. J. Davidson, C. C. Smith, Samuel Lindsay, W. S. Dockrell and Edith Mason Waterman, musicians singers Fred Butler, Lewis Smith, Robert Hooper, William McEwan, Caswallon Davies, Dr. Hatch and B. H. McCurdy are associated in this campaign. Thirty churches are united in Lawrence, Methuen, Andover and North Andover.

—ONE OF the workers in the John Watkins Academy, Mokpo, Korea, sends an account of a recent annual Field Day celebration, in which the native boys and girls, in holiday attire, the Mayor and many invited guests participated. There were sports, lantern races and other exercises, and the whole arrangement by the Koreans showed their ability to arrange and execute to be equal to those of our own Western institutions. The writer adds that united intercessory prayer is now offered in many Korean homes and churches. Plans are being made to issue a large special edition of a million copies of one of the Gospels.

—SUPERINTENDENT I. E. KIMBALL, of the New York Industrial Home and Bible School, Tappan, N. Y., writes us that he has a number of good, reliable, industrious men open for employment. They are used to farm work, and can milk and plow. A note from employers to Mr. Kimball will receive attention.

—A MODEST REQUEST comes from a very earnest worker in darkest Africa. Miss Anna E. Hall, of the Garraway Mission, Liberia, writes that fifteen reference Bibles are needed to aid the workers under her supervision in their study of God's Word. If a few of our good readers would take this matter in hand the cost would be covered and the little band of Christians at the Garraway Mission would have a day of rejoicing when the Bibles are received. Remittances for this purpose may be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

—MEETINGS WERE held in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, Canada, recently by Dr. Elliott and his associates, Mr. Naftzger and Mr. Leggett. The large First Methodist Church, seating 1,800, was filled to overflowing. On the special day of prayer fifty homes were opened for union neighborhood prayer meetings. People came from various parts of the province. Many of the churches of Charlottetown have received large accessions, in several instances over 100. One result is the formation of a "King's Business Council" of ministers and laymen, to extend the work all over the island province. Numerous conversions are reported.

—JENNIE FOWLER WILLING, of the "Sisterhood of Prayer," sends us the announcement that the General Council requests all members to mention in daily prayer during 1910 these subjects in the months named: January, Bible students; February, for the removal of all that hinders the coming of the kingdom; March, that Christians may be filled with joy; April, conversion of the Mormons; May, of the Mohammedans; June, of the Jews; July, for means for the Lord's work; August, for the Italians; September, for American missions; October, for India; November, for the children; December, for the suppression of the liquor traffic.

—BISHOP AVES, of Mexico, writes from Monterey: "The first carload of American corn from Houston, Tex. (for the flood sufferers), reached Nopala. The presidentes (mayors) of the twenty-five surrounding towns had furnished lists of the absolutely helpless destitute persons and families, and had notified them where and when they might go to get relief. Two-thirds of a litro (little more than a pint) of corn was given for each adult per day, and one-half a litro (less than a pint) for each child. The crowds that pressed into the patio of the mission house on the day of distribution represented the blind, crippled, malformed, feeble-minded, palsied, half-clad, consumptive, infirm with old age, widowed, fatherless and orphaned, with no able-bodied among them. The bales of CHRISTIAN HERALD blankets, which Consul-General Hanna sent me, were reserved for the very old."

Go Back to the Soil—and Smile

Be independent. Get 100 per cent of the wealth you create. Don't work for the other fellow. Work for yourself. Buy 40 acres of irrigated land in the San Joaquin valley, California. Cultivate it intensively. You will get more revenue than the average unirrigated big farm back East yields.

You will have fewer hours of labor. You will have more time for other things. You will be healthier, happier and richer.

San Joaquin Valley

The San Joaquin Valley has 10,000,000 acres that can be irrigated. The soil is fertile. The water for artificial irrigation is inexhaustible. The climate is bracing, healthy, delightful. The Valley now has splendid roads, schools, churches, social organizations. All that is needed is more men and women, and they are coming fast.

Land to-day may be had at from $50 to $150 per acre. One year of energetic cultivation and development will increase its value one-half. You can make a living from the start. This claim is not hearsay. It is a demonstrated fact.

H. A. Carmichael, Clovis, California, bought 80 acres in 1902 for $5,000. Last year he sold his crop for $6,000, and refused $25,000 for his farm.

N. M. Gramley, Reedly, California, bought 40 acres in 1904 for $4,000, and has been offered $20,000 for them. He did not sell. His average revenue for the past three years has been over $3,000.

S. W. Hill, Modesto, California, paid $10,800 for 80 acres in February, 1909. Up to October 10 he has sold $2,137.50 worth of hay from 50 acres of alfalfa, and has fed 8 milk cows that bring him $10 each per month.

The above are not exceptions. They are average examples. You reasonably may expect to do as well, when you go.

I believe land in the San Joaquin Valley is selling for less than its value. I am satisfied that the day when any of it can be bought for $100 an acre is passing.

The Santa Fe has no land to sell, but it wants to have the country along its line settled up. Every ton of produce grown makes so much more freight for our trains to haul. That's where we come in.

We have collected much authoritative data which has been condensed into a profusely illustrated book-folder of 72 pages. Ask for it. It is FREE to you.

If you enclose a two-cent stamp and make special request, I also will send a copy of our 208-page travel book, "To California Over the Santa Fe Trail."

Questions and Answers

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD having absorbed the HOME HERALD, of Chicago, former subscribers of the latter publication will please bear in mind that all communications relating to subscriptions (new or renewal), advertising, editorial contributions, complaints, inquiries—in fact letters of any character whatsoever—should be addressed to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, New York.

When you write, please say: "I was a subscriber to the HOME HERALD."

A. H. N., Des Moines, Ia. What was the nature of the "pledge," and its purpose, which the youth David had to exact from his brothers in the army of King Saul, when he was sent with food to them?

Simply some guarantee of their welfare, and token that they had received the supplies. Writing was not a common accomplishment in those days; it might be a garment, or some article easily recognized as the property of the sender.

W. B., Boylston, Mass. Are we to infer from the following that but a small portion of the human family will be saved: Matt. 20:16; Luke 13:24; Matt. 7:14?

The first of these passages has no bearing on the question; Luke 13:24 marks no finality to their endeavor, and Matt. 7:14 specifies the ways men pursue, again without indicating their final ending. Rather should we heed the "whosoever," of Acts 2:21; the "not one," of John 18:9, and the "all," of Rom. 5:18.

Miss M. P. F., Philipsburg, Pa. 1. Was Christ a Roman citizen? 2. If he was, did he inherit or buy his citizenship? or was citizenship given to the people of Judea? 3. Is it right to discuss the political side of Christ's life?

1. No; had he been a Roman citizen, they dared not have crucified him. 2. No, to all these. Roman citizenship was not conferred on the people of Judea till the edict of Caracalla, A.D. 212. 3. Most assuredly. He is our example in all that makes for righteousness.

R. M. L., Newburgh, N. Y. Where are the ruins of Casas Grandes, mentioned in press accounts from Mexico?

Casas Grandes is a town in the State of Chihuahua, Mexico. It is connected by railroad with El Paso, Texas. There are a large number of ruins about the town, discovered by the Spaniards in 1660.

J. B., Philadelphia, Pa. Why is it that the House of Lords so bitterly oppose a budget which contains a land tax? Is it patriotism or selfishness?

It is simply a matter of money. The peers did own, and probably own to-day, more than one-fifth of the total acreage of the United Kingdom. They held some 16,500,000 acres, only a portion of which is subject to taxation. Some of the largest titled owners are: Duke of Sutherland, 1,358,545 acres; Duke of Buccleuch, 469,108 acres; Marquis of Breadalbane, 438,358 acres; Earl of Seafield, 305,930 acres; Duke of Richmond, 280,409 acres; Duke of Fife, 249,220 acres; Duke of Devonshire, 198,572 acres; Duke of Northumberland, 186,397 acres; Duke of Portland, 183,189 acres; Duke of Argyll, 175,114 acres; Marquis of Conyngham, 166,710 acres. There are at least twelve other peers who have holdings running all the way from 100,000 to 162,000 acres.

O. W. B., Traer, Ia. 1. Why was the word "dram" used in I. Chron. 29:7, and what is the value of a dram of gold, as used in this connection? 2. What is the value of a talent of brass; also of a talent of iron?

1. Notwithstanding the substitution of the word "daric" (R. V.) for "dram" (A. V.), the fact is that the Persian "daric" was not coined before the reign of Darius, so could not have been used at the time specified. All money values in the reigns of David and Solomon were computed by weight, the standard being "the shekel of the sanctuary," which was carefully guarded by the priests. This shekel was of silver, and was fixed as the standard by the Mosaic law. There were two variations of it, however, in use: the shekel of commerce, introduced for transaction of business with foreign merchants, and "the shekel of the king's weight," introduced by intercourse with Assyria. In the same way did the "talent" vary; the weight talent of the king being equivalent to 3,600 shekels, the gold talent equaled 3,000 shekels; likewise the much larger silver talent. The comparative value of these metals being different, also of iron and brass, we must expect that while the talent did not vary in weight, it would vary in pecuniary value. The term "dram," or "daric," as has been shown, was not in use at the date of building Solomon's temple; hence, in any attempt at computation in these modern times, it must be set aside. The "holy shekel" was equivalent to 56 cents of our money; on which basis the value of the talents mentioned in this verse [illegible] be computed. The "dram," or "d[illegible] (introduced at a much later date), [illegible] equivalent to a quarter-shekel; it being [illegible] practice in Solomon's time to break or [illegible] the shekel, for convenient use. 2. The [illegible] and iron would be weighed by the "shek[illegible] the sanctuary," and valued according t[illegible] values of those metals at that time. But v[illegible] of metals have materially changed since [illegible] time, and it has become an impossibili[illegible] accurately estimate the present monetary [illegible] represented in I. Chron. 29:7.

Rev. J. P. L., Adrian, S. C. 1. How old [illegible] Christ when he was crucified? 2. Wa[illegible] rich young ruler that went to Christ, [illegible] the rich man that went to hell, the [illegible] man or not?

1. Supposed to be about thirty-three [illegible] old; no precise data. 2. Absolutely no co[illegible] tion between the two. One was fact, the [illegible] parable. Nothing but a monkish legend o[illegible] sixth century is the authority for supp[illegible] them the same.

O. W. H., Compton, Calif. What is the [illegible] eral meaning of the French term Jeu[illegible] Dorce?

The term, which means "gilded youth," [illegible] inated in 1794, when it was applied to a [illegible] of young men who tried to oppose the b[illegible] thirsty policy of the revolutionists. Late[illegible] was used to describe young men who lived [illegible] pleasure as their chief aim in life, a mea[illegible] it still holds.

J. B. L., Boston, Mass. How many bri[illegible] now connect New York with Long Isl[illegible]

There are four, a new one having [illegible] opened last week, a little north of the Broo[illegible] Bridge, which was the first span put across [illegible] East River. The bridges, in their order g[illegible] north, are the Brooklyn Bridge, the Manha[illegible] Bridge (the one just completed), the Willi[illegible] burg Bridge, and the Queensboro Bridge.

C. N. L., Hoboken, N. J. Who was called "Rock of Chickamauga?

General George H. Thomas, of the Fe[illegible] Army. The sobriquet was given him for determination in holding the position he [illegible] taken in the battle of Chickamauga.

J. M., Mississippi. 1. Respecting mentio[illegible] "star" in Matt. 2:2, is there no acco[illegible] legendary or otherwise, that such a [illegible] would be given? 2. What authorit[illegible] there for likening the Gospel of Mark [illegible] lion; of Matthew to an ox; of Luke [illegible] man, and of John to an eagle?

1. See Num. 24:17, which in those [illegible] would be considered sufficient authority [illegible] astrological observation. Tacitus, Suetor[illegible] and Josephus agree in affirming that such [illegible] astronomical phenomenon occurred, but [illegible] attribute it to the birth of Emperor Vespas[illegible] Kepler, and after him Ideler, proved tha[illegible] conjunction of the planets Jupiter and Sat[illegible] was visible at this period; an opinion endo[illegible] by Dean Alford, in the first edition of [illegible] Greek Testament. 2. Ezek. 1:5; Rev. [illegible] In the second century, the church attrib[illegible] this symbolism to the evangelists: Matthew [illegible] ured by the man or cherub (not the [illegible] because in his Gospel the human nature [illegible] the Saviour is more insisted on than the divi[illegible] Mark, the lion, because he has set forth [illegible] royal dignity of Christ; Luke, the ox, hec[illegible] he has emphasized the priesthood of Christ [illegible] which office the sacrificial ox is emblemati[illegible] and John, the eagle, symbolical of the higl[illegible] inspiration.

H. A. C., Mentor, O. What is the Kesw[illegible] doctrine?

It may be summed up in the words "Holi[illegible] unto the Lord." Its followers believe in a [illegible] petual Pentecostal blessing, the gift of tong[illegible] healing by faith alone, and other tokens [illegible] Spirit-power; and lay great stress on E[illegible] 12:14.

F. B., Dwight, Ill. Who were the "barbaria[illegible] mentioned in Rom. 1:14?

According to Grecian usage, all persons [illegible] did not speak Greek were accounted "bar[illegible] rians." As Greece was then the seat of [illegible] learning and philosophies, the apostle ampli[illegible] his statement by affirming his indebtedr[illegible] "both to the wise and to the foolish." In t[illegible] verse the apostle expresses his indebtedness [illegible] all men.

Effingham B., Madison, Wis. How are we [illegible] regard the astonishing statement, app[illegible] ently coming from Constantinople, that [illegible] precise site of the Garden of Eden has [illegible] last been found?

With equanimity, preferably. The site [illegible] Eden has been found by enthusiastic travel[illegible] in at least half a score different countries, [illegible] cluding Ceylon, Armenia, Africa and Aral[illegible] This latest discoverer is not a Turk, but [illegible] British subject, Sir William Wilcocks, w[illegible] locates the Garden at Hairieh, northeast [illegible] Bagdad, where there are four converg[illegible] streams, that agree with the Biblical descr[illegible] tion in Gen. 2:10-14. Professor Edgar Jar[illegible] Banks, of Chicago, who has traveled very [illegible] tensively in Bible lands, made a similar [illegible] covery in 1905, which he fully described in T[illegible]

CHRISTIAN HERALD. His Edenic site was 100 miles north of the Persian Gulf, on the Shatt-el-Arab, and in a neighborhood called Kourna by the Arab natives, who have inherited legends and traditions which they claim prove it to be the original Garden. Its location and surroundings meet all the Scriptural requirements. These people showed Professor Banks a tree, which they declared the lineal successor of the original tree of knowledge.

A. P., Fort Scott, Kan. Explain Acts 2:4; objection in verse 13, and Peter's reply in verse 14.

A fulfilment of the promise made by the Baptist (Matt. 3:11), also of the benediction of Jesus (John 20:22). These passages clearly show that the bestowal of the Spirit was "of the Lord." Exception must not be taken to the "gift of tongues," since it was the fulfilment of various prophecies, and was continued in the early Christian Church (see Epistles). Peter refutes the charge of drunkenness, reminding them that by Rabbinical law it was too early in the day for Jews to indulge in the use of wine.

M. M. W., Newport, Vt. Give some information about Andreas Hofer, who figures so much in German paintings.

Hofer was an Austrian patriot, born in the Tyrol in 1767. He died in 1810. He was an inn-keeper. When Napoleon took the Tyrol from Austria and gave it to Bavaria he headed a revolt, and drove the Bavarians twice from the country. In 1809 he again defeated the French and Bavarians, occupied Innsbruck, and defeated them near that city once more. He was betrayed to the French, who took him to Mantua and shot him.

Mrs. L. S., Red Oak, Ia. 1. How many books are in the Bible? 2. How many in the Douay Bible? 3. Does any church accept the Apocrypha?

1. Sixty-eight. 2. Eighty. 3. Latin Church, by ordinance of the Council of Trent.

A. C. T., Shreveport, La. What is the plan of the Gothenburg liquor system, used in some parts of Europe?

It is a Swedish system to control the liquor business. First, the licenses are limited, with the idea that in the end the sale of liquor shall be a monopoly of the city itself. All who derive profit from the trade were to be excluded. It was much advocated in England, and has been suggested for adoption in this country, but has met with little favor, as the idea of a city government going into the liquor business in any form is repugnant to the American people.

Reader, Chicago, Ill. What is a morganatic marriage, mentioned in connection with the late King Leopold of Belgium?

It is a marriage between a member of a royal family and one of less than royal rank. It is stipulated that neither she nor her children shall have the rank or inherit any of the possessions of the husband. The children are legitimate. In the ceremony the left hand is given instead of the right.

W. L., Dunedin, Fla. Which is correct, the island of Hayti, or Haiti?

Both are used. The Standard Dictionary gives preference to the latter way of spelling it.

Miscellaneous

Mrs. S. N., Bangor, Mich. "Selah" indicates a pause in music.

Prdence J., Gilmore City, Ia. We are not disposed to discuss purely speculative science and philosophy, however fascinating. No progress can be made by applying the laws of nature (which we only partially know) to spiritual things.

J. W. T., Springfield, S. Dak. No specific directions as to the form or manner of baptism are given in the Scriptures, otherwise every Christian denomination would follow that form. Each should employ the method of his own denomination, and tolerate the same liberty of action in others.

J. R., Ronkonkoma, N. Y. 1. The closing lines in the hymn "Sweet Hour of Prayer," imply that believers who have passed from earth to heaven have no more need of prayer. 2. See Acts 20:35.

Reader, Baltimore, Md. The wise men were supposed to be three kings or princes, and tradition has preserved their names as Melchior, Caspar and Balthasar. Some legends say they came with a great retinue of servants and camels, bearing rich gifts.

R. M. G., Bridgeport, Conn. The foremost patriotic societies connected with our earlier history are the Society of Mayflower Descendants, the Society of Colonial Wars, the Patriots and Founders, the Colonial Dames, the Holland Dames, the Sons of the American Revolution, the Sons of the Revolution, the Cincinnati, the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Daughters of the Revolution and the Society of 1812.

Referring to a recent paragraph in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, L. McC., Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "The actual Roman Catholic population of France is 38,000,000; approximately 300,000 profess some form of Protestantism; eliminate 500,000 more avowed non-Catholics and there remain at least 73,000,000, at least nominally Catholic. How many of these are practical we do not know, but if only half are practical there would still be over 18,000,000 Catholics."

THE UNIVERSAL PRAYER*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

IN 1893, at the four hundredth celebration of the discovery of America, in Chicago, there was a Parliament of Religions, whose daily conferences for fifteen days were opened by the Lord's Prayer, led one day by Cardinal Gibbons, another by a Protestant, another by a Brahman, another by a Confucian, another by a Parsee, another by a Buddhist, another by a Mohammedan, all joining in the words "Our Father, who art in heaven," which was thus adopted as the universal prayer. Only an ignorant man can therefore propose to omit the Lord's Prayer in our American schools "to please the Catholics." Rather should it be used in all the schools of the world as the beginning of every day of intelligent study of a world made by a mind like ours, but greater, "the Father of our spirits." When Count Okuma and other Japanese statesmen were seeking new foundations for moral education in that land where the new learning had produced uncertainty among students as to which is the true religion, the writer suggested, and the suggestion was favorably considered, that ethics should be based on this universal prayer, which the leaders of all religions had adopted in the manner above described.

"Our Father Which Art in Heaven"

You can see the walls of the room in which you are, but there is something as large as the walls, filling all the space between them and all around us, that you cannot see. Can you think what it is? It is something that you breathe. Can you see the air? And yet you know it is just as real as the walls that you do see. What is it that drives the snow about and makes the sailboats move so swiftly? You have felt it blowing in your face, and heard it whistling around the house. Wind, you know, is only the air moving about.

Now this air that we cannot see (although we can see what it does, and so know that it is real) will help us to understand God, our Father, who does so many great things, although no one sees him.

Let us see how the air helps us to understand God, our Father. First, the air is everywhere, up in the sky and down in the caves, and even among drops of water in the ocean, and here so near that I can feel it when I blow on my hand. Still more, God is everywhere, not only in heaven, but here with us. As a little boy said, "There isn't room for but one God, for he fills heaven and earth."

Our father on earth cannot always be with us to protect us and help us, but God is with us, as close as the air, "all the days."

Second, the air is very powerful, as it lifts the waves toward the skies, and sometimes blows down the great trees and buildings, reminding us that God, who "causeth the wind to blow," is all-powerful. Our fathers on earth are sometimes not strong enough to defend us or provide for us, but our Father in heaven is stronger than the mighty winds, and promises to protect us and help us by his power. Once a great emperor was riding in a chariot through a city when a little boy ran through the lines of soldiers toward the chariot. The soldiers cried, "Stop, that is the emperor." He answered, "He is your emperor, but he is my father," and so he kept on, and was taken by his father into the chariot. So the mighty God, who rules the winds, is our Father, and we are not afraid to come to him in prayer.

Third, the air is very useful and necessary. We could not live a minute without it. If the air should be taken away, all the men and all the animals, and all the birds and all the plants would soon die. So we could not live a minute without God, "in whom we live and move and have our being."

And let us remember also, as we breathe the air into our lungs to keep us alive, so God our Father promises to come into every heart that will pray to him.

"Hallowed Be Thy Name"

Long years ago, a good minister and prophet, named Isaiah, was allowed for a moment to look into heaven. He saw on a beautiful throne a shining light, brighter than the sun, which he knew was the glory of God; and all around the throne the angels were crying "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord!" At another time, another minister and prophet, named Moses, saw just such a shining light in a bush, down here on the earth, and when he came nearer to it a voice told him that the place was "holy ground," and he must put off his shoes (as they do in some countries, instead of taking off their hats, when they go into a church), and then he knew that the light and voice in the bush proved that God was there to speak with him.

So you see that while the angels treat as holy God in heaven on his throne, we are to treat as holy whatever God sends down to the earth to represent him or to remind us about him. We are reminded of God in five ways: by his Names, his Sabbaths, his Bible, his Churches and his Son. That is just what it means when we pray, "Hallowed be thy name"; that is, holy be thy name, and everything that represents thee on earth.

1. How can we treat God's names themselves as holy? You know that anybody's name stands for the person himself. Your name, written on the leaf of a book, or a letter, or the list of a Sunday School class, stands for you. Anybody who treats your name badly treats you badly. Any one who speaks your name kindly treats you kindly. So, if anybody abuses your mother's name, it is abusing her. God has sent his name to the earth to represent him, to stand for him, and any one who uses God's name profanely in swearing abuses and displeases God himself, and any one who speaks God's name in prayer lovingly and reverently honors and loves God himself. That little boy understood it who said to those who asked him to swear: "God is my Father, and do you think I would say rough words of my Father?"

It chills my blood to hear the blest Supreme Rudely appealed to on each trifling theme.
Maintain your rank, vulgarity despise;
To swear is neither brave, polite, nor wise.
You would not swear upon the bed of death!
Reflect! Your Maker now may stop your breath.

2. God has given us not only his name, but also the Sabbath, to remind us of him, to represent him; and so, when we pray "Hallowed be thy name," we should think also of the day that God commands us to "keep holy."

3. We should hallow the Book that God has sent us to represent him, the Holy Bible. It is wrong to treat the Bible roughly, or mark up its leaves with scribblings. To let the dust gather on it because we neglect to read it is not keeping it holy. We treat God and his Word rightly when we read, study and obey it, as Timothy did when a child.

4. When we pray, "Hallowed be thy name," it means also that the churches that belong to God are to be treated as holy. Jesus made a whip of cords and drove out of God's temple at Jerusalem

. We must especially treat as holy Gd's Son, Jesus, who comes to our hrts to be our Saviour and Lord.

"Thy Kingdom Come"

A poor boy was once dying in a hpital. He was a soldier, but a mere by for all that. The lady who wtched by his bedside saw that death ws coming fast, and placing her hand o his head she said to him, "If this isleath that is coming upon you, are yu ready to meet your God?" The lge dark eyes opened slowly, and a sle passed over the young soldier's fe as he answered, "I am ready, dear lay, for this has long been his kingdn," and as he spoke the placed his hd upon his heart. "Do you mean," qstioned the lady gently, "that God res and reigns in your heart?" "es," he answered; but his voice sonded far off, sweet and low, as if it cne from a soul already well on it way through the dark valley and sdow of death. And still he lay thre, with his hand upon his heart, evn after that heart had ceased to bt and the soldier boy's soul had gone uto its God.

That boy was right who answered th question, "What is the kingdom o God?" by saying, as he pointed to h heart and then toward heaven, "I is something here and something thre." All the hearts in heaven and inearth that trust and obey Jesus are lal subjects of this kingdom.

That little girl was right, too, who cne from her room after she had been pying, so happy that her mother sd, playfully, "Have you been to the kgdom of heaven?" and she answred, "No, but the kingdom of hven has come to me."

If the Bible had not told us about it, w might have thought that none but gwn people could enter this kingdom. Bt the King himself has said, "Suffer lile children to come unto me, and fbid them not."

"Thy Will Be Done in Earth as It Is in Heaven"

I seem to hear some one say, "How c we know what God's will is, so that w can do it?"

Little Samuel heard God's voice saking to him in the night, and tellin him just what to do. We don't hr God speaking aloud in these days, b conscience, which a little girl rhtly called "Jesus whispering in our hrts," tells us some of the things tht we ought to do and some things tht we ought not to do. Conscience isne of our teachers as to what God's wl is, but it only tells us a part of it.

How can we, down here on the earth, kw more about what our Father in hven wishes us to do? The fathers in our earthly homes, when they die al go up to heaven, let their children al friends know what they wish them todo in this way: they leave a paper in some trunk or bureau to tell their sns and daughters what to do with th money and land, and they write in italso anything else that they wish tlm to do. This paper is called "a wl," or "testament." So our Father inheaven has given us two wills, two "estaments," the Old Testament and th New Testament, that together mke up the Bible, to tell us what he whes us to do in order to be happy.

When we pray, "Thy will be done," its asking God that we, and all others, my do what our Father in heaven tells u in the two Testaments of the Bible, tlt he wishes us to do.

"ive Us This Day Our Daily Bread"

I suppose you have heard at home or in the Sunday School about the men, wnen and children of Israel, out in th wilderness, where there was no fod, gathering up the little grains of manna which God sent down, like flakes of snow, every day for the hungry people.

There is only this one sentence in all the Lord's prayer about things for our bodies, and when we ask for "bread" it means clothes and water and money and health, as well as food—all that our bodies require and that is best for us.

Forgive Us Our Debts as We Forgive Our Debtors"

If we do not forgive those who wrong us, then in saying the Lord's Prayer we tell God not to forgive us, because we say "as we forgive." We ought to pity, instead of hating, any who wrong us, because they are hurting their own souls more than they are harming us. "And lead us not into temptation." When we pray to our Father in heaven, "Lead us," it is partly because we do not know enough about the path we ought to walk in to go in it alone; and so we desire the all-wise God, who knows all things, to lead us.

But there is another part of this prayer, "Lead us not into temptation." We ask God, who knows where there is danger and sin, to guide us away from them whenever it is best for us; and we ask God, because he has strength for his children, to give us power to resist and refuse all temptations when we must meet them.

"Deliver Us From Evil"

This prayer reminds us, first, that God can deliver our bodies from evils and dangers. He has often done this for us, as really as he saved Daniel and David from lions, and Paul from a snake, and Elijah from starving, and Noah from drowning, and Daniel's friends from the fire, and Peter from prison, and Jacob from his brother Esau, and the disciples from shipwreck. He saves those in these days who pray, "Deliver us," whenever it is not better for us to suffer than to be delivered.

But we ought, most of all, to ask God to deliver us from evils that injure our souls, from sin and wrong.

"For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever."

The Instantaneous Answer

AMERICAN TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO. LOCAL AND LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE BELL SYSTEM AND ASSOCIATED COMPANIES

Sending a message is only half of the transaction. The other, and equally important, half consists in getting back the answer.

Sometimes this is a reply to a question, or the acceptance or rejection of a proposal. Sometimes it is simply an acknowledgment that the message has been received.

The value of the message depends upon getting an answer.

When a general manager sends word to a representative in a distant city, he wants to know that his man is there, that he receives the message, and that he will act.

If the answer is not final, but raises another question, there is no delay. The other question can be settled at once. It is possible, in one telephone interview, to come to a decision which could not have been reached without the instantaneous answer.

Each answer is made instantaneous by the Bell telephone service.

The Bell system, with its ten million miles of wire, provides the instantaneous answer for anybody, anywhere, at any time.

Increased use of the Long Distance Telephone means greater results in every line of human endeavor. Telephone efficiency means One Policy, One System, Universal Service. Every Bell Telephone is the Center of the System.

of 1787. Other States, more or less willingly, followed suit, and May 14, 1787, the delegates from every State but Rhode Island (aforetime cantankerous and difficult) met in the State House in Philadelphia. Full attendance was not secured until May 25, when George Washington was chosen chairman and William Jackson secretary. The former proved again his right to the title "First in Peace." The latter was perfunctory in discharge of his duties, and the world has had to depend for an account of this momentous convention upon the diary and notes of James Madison of Virginia, afterward President of the United States, and always shrewd, able, diplomatic, comprehending. The convention sat with closed doors and finished its labors September 17, 1787, when it made its final report.

September 17, as Rossiter Johnson points out, is a memorable date aside from its being that of the conclusion of the Constitution. On that date, in 1796, Washington made his farewell address, and September 17, 1862, witnessed the battle of Antietam—one of the bloodiest contests in history.

Place and Personnel

It does not require a very vivid imagination to picture that assemblage and its environment. If desks, rostrum, walls, lights and conveniences in general were of the antique and severely plain, the fifty-three who there deliberated, debated, orated, contended, compromised and federated, were neither plain nor ignoble. There was glimmer of brocade, gleaming of powdered heads, sheen of silken hose, stateliness of presence, gravity and courtesy of demeanor, and now and again flashes of compelling eloquence. We may be sure some of the delegates wore swords that had flashed on more than one stricken field, or took snuff from boxes with histories older far than that of the republic itself.

Impossible as it is to tell of the difficulties encountered and overcome, we may be sure the greatest was to placate the jealousies between States; to remove apprehension from the minds of the Southerners lest their five commonwealths be out-voted and out-influenced by their eight Northern neighbors; to preserve slavery where it then existed, without doing violence to the sentiments of its Northern contemners.

It is a noteworthy fact that when the Constitution was finally submitted for State acceptance it was so full of compromises that some of the highest, brightest Americans—Washington and Hamilton among them—openly expressed doubts as to its continuance. They builded better than they knew, these very human, very great Americans. They had not, could not have, due perspective.

Why It Is "The Best"

The American Constitution is the best the world has ever known, because:

It is unique in its explicit provision for a tripartite government: Legislative (Congress), Executive (the President), Judicial (the Supreme Court).

It is concise. Compare it with the administrative law of France, with the confederation agreements of the German States, with the vast volumes of acts of parliament which serve Great Britain as a Constitution.

It is final. There are no countries in Europe wherein the Legislature or the royal ruler does not claim the right to construe the Constitution—a right that in America rests solely with the majority of the nine members of the United States Supreme Court—that "most august body of modern times," as an English jurist calls it.

It is lucid. Despite the number meanings read into it; despite the c stitutional-law suits and the compl ity of views in Congress and out of in minor courts and in State Legis tures, the main, the basic, the vi provisions laid down in the origi Seven Articles are expressed so clea that only those wilfully blinded prejudice or treason can mistake th

It is comprehensive. It has pro ample and compelling, even under stress of civil and foreign war; it embraced and, often, beneficently qu ified the complications of modern

It is a model. From the France the last years of the eighteenth c tury, to the Young Turks, the consti tional Chinamen and the oppres Russians of the early years of twentieth, the American Constitut has been the pattern for free gove ment, the inspiration for republics, fount of wisdom for patriots statesmen.

It is a warning. No despot in world—thank God there are few lef but dreads the influence of our C stitution upon his subjects; no ru into whose heart that great docum has not put proper fear.

Probably the greatest text-book Story's Commentaries on the Consti tion, and a close second are the p lished judgments of Chief Jus Marshall. Rossiter Johnson and ward W. Townsend have written Story of the Constitution, and in fo and manner alike entertaining and structive. Bryce's American Comm wealth has many chapters, full of d interest, on this subject, as have histories written by Rhodes, Wils and Bancroft; while the last volume Washington Irving's Life of Washi ton will give the reader insight of times and men involved in the weld of our organic law.

Before the meeting of the consti tional convention many weak-kn opportunists insisted that only s things as the people would appr should be embodied in the docume by "the people" meaning the debat discussers and doubters, who were plentiful and potent then as they h often been since. Against such ti serving contention George Washing uttered the memorable words wh Fiske, the historian, aptly says "ou to be emblazoned in letters of gold, posted on the wall of every Ameri assembly that shall meet to nomin a candidate, or pass a law, so long the weakness of human nature sl endure." Washington gave this k note for the body over which he to preside:

"It is too probable that no plan propose will be adopted. If to ple the people we offer what we oursel disapprove, however can we afterw defend our work? Let us raise standard to which the wise and hon can repair: the event is in the h of God."

What the convention did was furnish what the prophet Jerem described as "a covenant with all people to proclaim liberty unto the

Nicaragua's New President

PRESIDENT MADRIZ, the new Chief Executive of turbulent Nicaragua, is not finding his chair of office very comfortable. Zelaya forced his election by the Nicaraguan Congress, and he is following the deposed dictator's plans as far as possible. General Estrada is still pushing forward, and it would seem that Madriz's term of office may be suddenly terminated by his political rival. Dr. Madriz is a lawyer, and was a judge of the Central American Court when called to Managua to take up the reins of government at the request of Zelaya.

THE MODEL ENDEAVORER*

E great success of the Christian ndeavor Society has emphasized eally one certain profound truth, id is often lost sight of. It is the t hat different aspects of religion r t different people.

Th cause of Christian Endeavor is use of the church. Its activity a art of the wider activity of the a original movement inaugurated Christ and his disciples; and yet, th ts expressive name, set apart as is or the younger Christians, and t ed by excellent mottoes and its n eculiar organization, it has ap- all to many to whom religion in y ther guise had not before ap- all—perhaps never would.

Th lesson is plain. We must use f nt methods with different men d ith different classes. If one mo- e loes not touch the friend for o salvation you are praying, try o er. Be "fertile in expedients." P sident William De Witt Hyde, in l oquent analysis of the great e philosophies, and the compari- n ith them of the Christian reli- n lays especial stress upon the n er in which our faith embraces w ich was good in those wonderful l stems: "The Epicurean's varied d spontaneous joy in life is not n ished, but enhanced, by the n ian spirit. The Epicurean lived a little world of himself and a few u y self-centred companions. The n ian lives in the great world of m nd shares all its joys with all m human children. Christianity has the Epicurean gladness without its baseness, its geniality without its heartlessness.

"Christianity takes up all that is true in the Stoic teaching, without falling into its hardness and narrowness.

"Christianity is as lofty as Platonism; but it gets its elevation not by rising above drudgery and details, but by lifting them up into a clearer atmosphere, where nothing is servile or menial which can glorify God or serve a fellow-man. It is so much higher than the highest dream of Plato that it guards certain forms of social good at points where, even in Plato's ideal republic, they were ruthlessly betrayed.

"The Aristotelian principle was the devotion of life to a worthy end, and the selection of efficient means for its accomplishment; but it is because the end at which the Christian aims is so much higher and the fortitude demanded by it is so much deeper that Christianity has superseded, and deserves to supersede, the noblest teaching of the greatest Greeks."

It is to exemplify this perfect religion that the disciple is called.

Then we shall have the Epicurean joy in life, which Paul described to Timothy when he told him that "every creature of God is good"; we shall train ourselves to "endure hardness," like the Stoic; to set up high ideals of intellect and spirit, like Plato; to bend all our energies to the selection of the best means for attaining the best ends, like Aristotle; and, above all, to love our fellow-men, and live for others, not ourselves, like Christ, our model.

INSOMNIA

Leads to Madness, if not Remedied in Time.

"Experiments satisfied me some 5 years ago," writes a Topeka woman, "that coffee was the direct cause of the insomnia from which I suffered terribly, as well as the extreme nervousness and acute dyspepsia which made life a most painful thing for me.

"I had been a coffee drinker since childhood, and did not like to think that the beverage was doing me all this harm. But it was, and the time came when I had to face the fact, and protect myself. I therefore gave up coffee abruptly and absolutely, and adopted Postum for my hot drinks at meals.

"I began to note improvement in my condition very soon after I took on Postum. The change proceeded gradually, but surely, and it was a matter of only a few weeks before I found myself entirely relieved—the nervousness passed away, my digestive apparatus was restored to normal efficiency, and I began to sleep, restfully and peacefully.

"These happy conditions have continued during all of the 5 years, and I am safe in saying that I owe them entirely to Postum, for when I began to drink it I ceased to use medicines." Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

An Exceptional Issue of 6% Bonds Secured by a Thousand Farms

Here are brief facts about one current issue of Irrigation Bonds They will illustrate what ideal security lies back of such bonds when the issues are rightly selected.

The Bitter Root Valley Irrigation Co. owns one of the largest irrigated fruit land projects in the world. The Company is composed of well known men who are wealthy, experienced and capable. The land to be watered consists of about 40,000 acres in the heart of our greatest fruit belt—in the famous apple region of the Pacific Northwest.

A large part of the valley has been under irrigation for many years, so the possibilities of the land have been demonstrated. Fruit land in the valley has lately sold as high as $1,000 per acre.

The water rights are unassailable, and the total water supply is more than sufficient for all needs. For the irrigable land is distinctly limited by the mountainous bounds of the valley.

$2,500,000 Invested

The Irrigation Company has invested in the project about $2,500,000, or about twice the total bond issue. And the bonds are secured by a first mortgage on all the property which the Irrigation Company owns.

The bonds are additionally secured by first liens on the lands and the orchards watered. These liens are given by individual land owners in payment for the land and the water rights. Forty per cent. of the price is paid down, and the balance, secured by the liens, is payable in annual installments.

To secure each $1,000 bond there are deposited with a Trust Company as trustee $1,400 of these first liens on farm land.

The average price at which this land has been sold is about $200 per acre. The minimum price at present is $250 per acre. Yet the bond issue is limited to $30 per acre, or to less than one-sixth the average selling price of the land.

Double Security

Thus the bonds have double security. The first is a mortgage on all the property which the Irrigation Company owns, and the Company's investment is nearly twice the whole bond issue. The second security is these first liens on farm land—on land which is worth more than six times the amount of the bonds which it secures.

One can hardly conceive of more ample security. Yet these bonds pay six per cent. interest, because the demand for irrigated land is so great that the projects are very profitable.

Part of these bonds mature each year from 1914 to 1919. One may have his choice of maturities.

Ask for the Facts

In the past 15 years we have purchased 75 separate issues of Reclamation Bonds—Drainage and Irrigation. All have been secured by first liens on good farm land, and not a dollar of loss has resulted to any investor.

Irrigation bonds have now become the most popular bonds that we handle. No other large class of bonds offering equal security now pays six per cent.

We have issued a book on Irrigation Bonds, based on all this experience. Every investor, small or large, owes to himself its perusal. Please write for the book to-day. Cut out this coupon so you won't forget.

How to Watch*

IN one of the very pleasant and profitable stories of Miss Ellen Fowler she makes an elderly woman say something like this: "I used to think that when one reached a certain age there was no more danger from the attacks of the evil one. But it isn't so. I find he has temptations for us suited to all ages and sizes, like ready-made clothes."

There was never a truer word. From the time that we know anything, on to our dying day, the motto for every one of us may well be "Watch!"

And the more secure one feels the more danger there is likely to be. "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall."

We realize this the most keenly, perhaps, when we see that conceited persons are often the most defective, while the ablest and best are likely to be the most modest.

A few months before the death of James Russell Lowell he confided to an intimate friend his belief that his work had been greatly over-praised. "I am ashamed of nearly all of it," he said sadly. "Nothing that I have done will live—and yet I did my best."

How often we find commonplace people who think that their works are wonderful! They think that they stand—yet they fall.

This foolish belief in our own mental perfections is even more universal in the moral world.

Thus, in a small New England village, a minister once preached a searching discourse upon the failure which men often made to square their deeds with their professions, intimating that there were those present who might well take the lesson to heart. As the congregation passed down the aisles a certain Jotham Sikes, a prominent church member, sitting on one side of the church, pointed to one on the other side, and whispered to a friend, "I guess Stillman Peck felt pretty mean this morning. Anybody could see that that sermon was aimed right at him"; while Stillman Peck was saying also to a neighbor, "You wouldn't have thought that Jotham Sikes would have had the face to sit through that sermon. It fitted his case to a T, and he must have felt it."

It was only another example of the mote and the beam; and it behooves us all to try ourselves from time to time, and see if the sins of which we often accuse others are not also deforming our own lives; or, if not just those sins, others quite as bad.

There is nothing more astonishing than the rosy light which is shed around our own pet sin, which, when committed by another, looks gross and revolting.

One of the most beautiful of our modern religious poems, familiar doubtless to many of our readers, deals with this great subject. We are bidden to watch at the eventide when "we have time to sit in the twilight, in the rays of the sinking sun"; at the midnight when

> The fire burns low and red
> And the watch is ticking loudly beside the bed;
> At the cock crow when the night is dying slowly
> Along the sky,
> And the sea looks calm and holy,
> Waiting for the dawn of the golden sun
> That draweth nigh.

And so on, until the last beautiful stanza:

> So I am watching quietly every day,
> Whenever the sun shines brightly I rise and say,
> "Surely it is the shining of His face,"
> And look unto the gates of his High place
> Beyond the sea.
> For I know He is coming presently to summon me.
> And when a shadow falls across the window of my room
> Where I am working my appointed task,
> I lift my head to watch the door and ask
> If He is come.
> And the angel whispers sweetly in my home,
> "Only a few more shadows and He will come."

Pure Milk for Baby

Sanitary milk production was first started by Gail Borden in the early 50s. The best systems to-day are largely based on his methods, but none are so thorough and so rigidly enforced as the Borden system. For over fifty years the Eagle Brand Condensed Milk has proved its claim as the best food for infants.

A New Watch Idea
In the Jeweled Ingersoll-Trenton

Never Such a Watch for the Money Before

ANY RESPONSIBLE jeweler can now show you the first moderate-priced watch built in bridge-model construction like the very best American watches.

Here is a strictly high-grade watch of exceptional accuracy.

It embodies every essential feature found exclusively in the most expensive movements. It contains 7 ruby, sapphire and garnet jewels protecting the points of principal wear.

It will give 20 years of service.

Every Ingersoll-Trenton Watch is placed in its case, timed, tested and regulated at the factory and a printed guarantee given with it covering the complete watch. No other is sold this way

Ingersoll-Trenton

The Best 7-Jewel Watch

One grade of movement only $5 in solid nickel case $7 in 10-year gold-filled case $9 in 20-year gold-filled case

Although the Ingersoll-Trenton is entirely different in construction from our Dollar watch, and is built in another factory, yet it is the same value per dollar of cost as the Dollar Ingersoll.

Every Ingersoll-Trenton has its price plainly printed on its guarantee so that you cannot be overcharged. Others are sold at different prices in different stores.

Other watches have increased in price since the passage of the Payne Tariff Bill. The "I-T" is sold at the same advertised prices as formerly. It's the only one that gives you the full worth of your money.

You can buy the "I-T" only at Responsible Jewelers

The "I-T" watch can be handled only by Jewelers who are competent to regulate and repair it and who will sell it at the moderate prices established and advertised by us. The "I-T" is new now. Jewelers who have not yet put it in stock, or those who demand exorbitant profits, as well as those whom we consider irresponsible and undesirable as sales agents, may recommend something else.

But in your own interest simply insist upon examining the new "I-T" and comparing it in quality, appearance and price with others. Many Jewelers display the "I-T" in their windows. Our free booklet, "How to Judge a Watch," is a complete explanation of watch construction which every man who carries a watch should understand. Send to our home office for it and also for list of local jewelers who sell the "I-T."

BEWARE of "Hoss" Traders

There lived in Michigan a shrewd old horsedealer who gave folks due warning to beware when he donned his selling clothes. He used to say, "When I say 'Hoss'—look out! I'm a-goin' to trade. But when it's 'Horse,' nawthin' doin'! Ye're perfectly safe."—Extract from Horse Secrets.

Did you ever find a lemon in a horse's nose? How and why did it get there?

What was the meaning of the ears being tied together with a fine silken thread?

Perhaps you are half persuaded to buy a horse because you like his "ginger?" Are you sure it is health and high spirits, or is it ginger—commercial ginger?

Are you sure you could tell the age of a horse by its teeth? Or would your experience be like that other man's, who paid $3500 for a 17-year-old horse, thinking he was buying a 7-year-old? The horse had been Bishoped.

Horse buying and trading offer hundreds of opportunities and temptations to use trickery and sharp practice. There is only one way to meet it.

"Horse Secrets" Will Protect You

—make you horse-wise and crook-proof, and save you from being cheated by dopes or tricks when buying, selling or trading. It exposes and makes you acquainted with the tricks, many secret drug preparations, and handling methods of gyps and a certain class of unscrupulous dealers. Many of the secrets of this book are now made public for the first time. No such collection of Horse Trading, Horse Buying, Horse Training, and Horse Feeding information has ever before been published. It is impossible even in this large space to give a complete list of the secrets in this sensational and instructive book. Some of the topics of greatest importance are:

Secrets About Horse Feeding and Raising

Secret of hand-raising a foal.
Secret of successful silage feeding to horses.
Secret method of fattening draughters.
Secret of molasses feeding for horses.

Secrets About Horse Trading and Selling

The lemon trick explained, the horsehair trick, the fresh butter trick, flaxseed trick, etc.

Secret of shutting a "heaver."
Secret of plugging a "roarer."
Secret of making a horse appear vicious.
Secret of making a horse appear unsound.
Secret of stopping a "switcher."
Secret of hiding a spavin.

Turpentine, gasoline and ginger tricks exposed, and many others.

Secrets About Horse Training and Handling

Secret of stopping halter pulling.
Secret of keeping a mule from kicking.
Secret of handling and curing balky horses.
Secret of curing stall kicking.

"Horse Secrets" has been prepared by Dr. A. S. Alexander, the famous veterinarian, who has had upwards of 25 years' experience in Horse-Breeding and Veterinary Science. He is the author of the first stallion service regulation and inspection regulation adopted and enforced in America. He is Professor of Veterinary Science at the University of Wisconsin. There is no more competent authority on horses anywhere.

FARM JOURNAL is the paper taken by nearly every busy farmer, and the man that wants to know for sure about agriculture. They value it so highly that it is kept year after year and is continually re-read and referred to. It is a departmental paper with a convenient arrangement for the reader to find what he wants, and it is what he wants when he finds it.

The Farm, the Home, the Cow and Dairy, Bees, Poultry, Fruit and Garden occupy their proportionate share in every issue. Then there are the less technical and material pages devoted to matters of the home—fashions, housekeeping, recipes, and bright, fresh reading for the younger members of the family.

FARM JOURNAL is a paper that you don't have to "blue pencil" before handing it over to the children. It is never carried out of the house with the tongs. The advertising columns receive the most careful scrutiny of our editorial department and the bars are up all the time against medical, deceptive, suggestive or nasty advertising of any kind whatever.

We believe in the goodness of the good things of this earth, and through FARM JOURNAL we tell our readers about them.

The Little Frame Church Upon which the Women Labored Lovingly

Mrs. Mumford as Carpenter

THE CHURCH THE WOMEN BUILT

By HELEN CHRISTIAN BENNETT

F the college professors, the profound thinkers and other learned men, who hold that the church is decadent, could but gather for an instant out a little frame church in Philadelphia perhaps re might creep into their minds the shadow of a dbt as to the finality of their belief. It is rather rude little church. It stands on a narrow lot, at corner of Fifty-second and Jefferson Streets, classified as to architecture, resplendent as to sh paint, sending out through its windows joyous nds of real old camp-meeting hymns. The sser-by would probably not deem it a church to proud of. It is a low, one-story building, with ny ordinary paned windows and a plain door. ere is little that is distinctive about the church, t the people who are its congregation look upon not only with reverence, but with pride, for it is e first church they ever possessed, and it is almost entirely e work of their own hands.

Men, women and children ve labored at that low frame ilding. The first spadeful of rth removed from the cellar as taken up by a child of four ars! Little girls of eight d nine have carried lumber, men have hammered and wed and swept and painted, d, when they could do nothig else, sung good old camp-eeting hymns to cheer the en on. With all their hearts d souls and bodies they wantd a church in which to worship d, and they were too poor to t it in any other way.

A little over a year ago the ritory between Fairmount rk and the Pennsylvania ilroad was churchess. A gle chapel in the neighborod closed its doors for lack of tendance, and was finally removed. Yet the tery between Fairmount Park and the Pennsylnia Railroad is a populous one. There are streets th many small houses, and the churches south of e railroad are a good way off.

In June, 1908, the Baptist City Mission sent Mr. d Mrs. Mumford to try to organize a church. r. Mumford is an architect in the employ of the ard of Education in Philadelphia. He is also an dained minister, a graduate of Temple University. rs. Mary T. Mumford, his wife, is also an ordained nister. There was a vacant lot at Fifty-first reet and Parkside Avenue, and on this lot r. and Mrs. Mumford held their first service, the ngregation consisting of four young girls, three four children, and a man leaning over a garden nce. At the close of the service the man who had ned over came to the preachers and became the first convert. Meetings on the lot were held nightly after that. During the summer a tent was erected, and evening after evening saw its capacity tested by the hundreds waiting to hear the Gospel. When fall came, and the cold weather threatened to stop the meetings, women brought oil stoves from their homes, and begged the ministers to keep on. Those who joined the congregation pledged one-tenth of their income to its support, and with this money and some outside contributions they were enabled to rent a property at 5012 Parkside Avenue just as winter set in. All winter the services continued, and all next summer the congregation prayed for a chapel.

There Is a Fine Growing Sunday School of Bright Children

Although the members brought regularly their tenth, their incomes were so small that a chapel was an impossibility. It would cost $6,700. Nevertheless, they prayed and believed.

One day in the fall a man in the audience sought Mrs. Mumford at the close of the service. He had seen a small chapel for sale. Although she had no money, the plucky woman pastor went directly to the owners.

"Why do you want the chapel?" she was asked.

"We have been praying for it all summer," she answered, and told them of the poverty of her congregation and their desire for a church. They gave her the chapel. The next step was to get it moved, and to get a place to put it. Among the recent members of the congregation is Dr. Joseph Kennon Ellis, a physician of some means. He bought a house and a large lot at Fifty-second and Jefferson Streets, the house for a parsonage, the lot as a chapel site. But, unfortunately, the construction of the chapel made it necessary to take it to pieces to move it, so that when it was placed upon the site it represented mere heaps of lumber, window frames and nails. Mrs. Mumford explained the situation to her people.

"No money," she said cheerfully, "but a chapel, and a lot, and hands." The faces of her audience lightened. In a twinkling the men of the congregation—hard-working laborers on the railroad, for the most part—had promised their evenings, their Saturday half-holidays and their holidays toward the labor of erection; the women had promised every spare hour, and the schoolboys and girls added ther promises. Night after night saw the men, women and children gather. Women and children carried lumber and with the men worked side by side, with hammer and saw. The work ran into weeks and months, but the workers never grew weary. When the women and children were not needed, they sat and sang cheerily all the hymns they could remember, while the hammers pounded. Schoolboys came from classrooms with overalls under their arms, and fell to gilding radiators and pipes. Industrious girls swept up shavings and rubbish and carried them away. Sometimes all worked till after midnight.

During all these weeks, meetings were held almost nightly. The noise of the workers was but a part of the devotion. Dr. Ellis and Mr. and Mrs. Mumford took charge of the meetings in turn. Every service was marked by joyful praise and earnest thanksgiving. The Gospel preached at the chapel is the plain orthodox Gospel. It accepts the Bible from cover to cover; it renounces theatres, cards and dancing; it does not countenance church suppers, bazars, fairs and entertainments inside the church. Although Mr. Mumford and Dr. Ellis share the labor of preaching with Mrs. Mumford, the last named is the real pastor of the people, as both men earn their livings by their professions. Not one of the three receives a single penny from the church. Mrs. Mumford is a cheery, buxom woman of thirty, with one little daughter, four years old. "The best thing in life," she says, "is saving souls."

She is called "mother" by all the girls in her congregation; she is the recipient of all their confidences. She personally leads the choir of fresh young voices. "The trouble to-day," she declares,

God's Golden Overplus

TEXT—John 6 : 12 (R.V.)

"He saith unto his disciples, Gather up the broken pieces which remain over, that nothing be lost."

VICTOR HUGO has somewhere spoken of those who are at home in the infinite. Confining the idea to the possibilities of genius, he makes much of "lofty minds in full riot of omnipotence." Shakespeare is the Frenchman's supreme illustration of this thought. He says Shakespeare—the condor alone gives some idea of such gigantic flight—departs, arrives, starts again, mounts, descends, hovers, sinks, dives, drops, submerges himself in the depths below, merges into the depths above. He is one of those geniuses that God purposely leaves unbridled, so that they may go headlong and in full flight into the infinite. Beyond question, Hugo had rare capacity for saying startling, brilliant things. If Shakespeare's rhythm is so vast that it staggers, Hugo's rhetoric is ofttimes so dazzling that for the moment it blinds us.

The Divine Breaking Through the Human

Strictly speaking, however, there has been but one Man who was at home in the infinite. The infinite cannot be explored by genius, but its uttermost reaches are caught and blended in the person of Jesus Christ. He himself is the final and commanding miracle. It is begging the case to ask miracles to explain him. They were but flashing swords drawn from scabbards of unseen power. He intended them to be only intimations of the truth lying back of them, even as the highest music is but a suggestion of an invisible world of harmony far beyond all human ken. Now and then we see assertions of his authority over material things. Into the raging winds he breathes the breath of his power, and the winds cease. Into the roaring billows of the sea he drops the note of peace, and there is calm. Disease vanishes before his touch, and the dead are kissed into life. But I insist that these attestations of his power do not explain him. Rather does he explain them, for he is the only sufficient cause and explanation of them.

Therefore the text is a record of God's golden overplus—a history of the divine and infinite breaking through the human and finite, a veritable flashing forth of the eternal upon the temporal, revealing that back of the common and material are the hidings of spiritual forces, ready to be touched into activity by the finger of God. Rightly do we call the multiplication of the five loaves and two fishes a miracle; but behind the miracle is the world-old parable of man's perplexity, the unfading picture of unavailing human endeavor. There is the weary Christ toiling up the mountain side in search of rest. He needed to be alone with the Father in prayer, and, as so often in his life, sought his sanctuary in the mountain. But when the multitudes heard that he had gone into the mountain, "they followed him on foot from the cities." What a picture it is of the multitudes pursuing the Christ! Confessing that their aims were not always the highest, let us remember that the Christ looked beyond their meanness, thinking only of their need. "And he came forth, and saw a great multitude, and he had compassion on them, and healed their sick." That was the Christ's masterful way of doing masterful things!

The Perplexed Disciples

Consider, in the first place, the perplexed disciples. I do not wonder at their perplexity. Considering the circumstances in which this miracle has its setting, I should rather be surprised if they were not deeply perplexed. The disciples were of a very human set of men. Being such, they exhibited the weaknesses of humanity. Consequently, it is hardly in point to say, as one eminent critic does say, that Philip had an opportunity to overcome his weakness in strength by boldly saying, "We have neither meat nor money, but we have Thee," and that Philip let his opportunity slip by fixing his eyes upon the two hundred pennyworth of bread, instead of remembering the resources of Jesus. Granting that Philip lost his opportunity, is not that just what men have been doing from the beginning? Philip and his brother disciples may have lost their opportunity, but I hold that there are some legitimate reasons for their doing so. And these reasons, it seems to me, not only throw into the scene a humanness as tender and deep as the universal heart of humanity, but they open the way for the entrance of the divine element, without which there is neither thrilling power nor high spiritual significance.

Now, what was it the disciples said to Jesus as they looked upon the thousands of men, women and children in need of food? They said precisely what man has been saying through all the centuries. "And when even was come, the disciples came to him, saying, The place is desert, and the time is already past; send the multitudes away, that they may go into the villages, and buy themselves food." The desert place, the time already past, the famishing multitudes—here, in brief, are the shadowed lengths and breadths of humanity's checkered history—the tragic loneliness, the deepening wail of hopeless despair, the unsatisfied necessities of man's soul.

Over against the naturally perplexed disciples stands the unperplexed Christ in glorious perspective. To that plea to send the multitudes away into the villages to buy food comes the full-toned, majestic answer of the Son of God, "They have no need to go away." "But, Master, you forget that we are in a desert place!" "On the other hand, I remember that I am Lord of the desert. They have no need to go away—I am here." Here, then, is the God of necessity abroad in his world. Let necessity confess her Master. That day the Christ added a new lesson to the soul's literature. Under his touch the sullen desert puts on a smile. Under his tread life's waste places tremble with song. He turns the clod of despair into the bread of life. He smites the rock, and it answers back in refreshing streams. "O man," he says, "you have no need to go away from your desert place in life. I am in the desert with you. I am the shadow of a great rock in life's weary land."

The Lord of the Desert

Teaching the disciples that he is Lord of the desert, he says, "Give ye them to eat." They answer, "We have here but five loaves and two fishes." Is it not the old story of man's great task and his appalling weakness? Is it not the history of man's supreme problems and his insufficient wisdom to solve them? Has there not come to every truly great soul this command to feed the waiting thousands? Here is that Midian shepherd keeping his flock at the back of the wilderness. Told by the angel in the flame that God would send him to deliver Israel out of Egypt, Moses answered, "Who am I, that I should go unto Pharaoh, and that I should bring forth the children of Israel out of Egypt?" "Who are you?" God seems to answer. "You are nobody. You get your significance from the fact that I am with you." Here are Homer, Dante and Shakespeare, commanded by God to feed humanity's hungry heart with inspiring song. "Who are we, that we should be entrusted with such high work?" they answer. "You are minstrels of the divine. You are prophets of the dawn. You are harps of a thousand strings. The Great I Am writes your song, indites your message, inspires your music. Therefore, give ye them to eat." Here is Chrysostom entering the practice of law at Antioch. The wickedness about him opened his eyes. In grief and disgust he abandoned the forum forever. Beyond the precincts of the licentious city, the disappointed man joined himself to a colony of monks. He lived in cells with them, studied with them, fasted with them, prayed with them, slept with them on beds of straw. After spending six years in the desert, practising ascetic severities and eating root dinners, God said unto Chrysostom, "Leave your cave. Go back to the hungry multitudes. Open your golden mouth. I will fill it with wisdom divine. Give ye them to eat."

God's Strength and Our Weakness

But still insisting that "we have here but five loaves and two fishes," what then? Why, there is but one solitary alternative, and that is to get our slender, scant resources to Jesus Christ. He said in the desert, and he still says, "Bring them hither to me." Oh, how far this call reaches to the uttermost needs of our humanity! God's strength is indeed made perfect in weakness, but the weakness must first be laid alongside the strength before perfec splendors the soul. Life's first, last and grea end is to be brought to its Master. Tissot be with five loaves and two fishes of art. He aln lost these by wasting many years of his life pa ing the vain women of Paris salons. But he c to himself, gathered up the remnants of his tatte genius, brought them to Christ, left the gay went to Palestine, followed the earthly footstep his Master, and after years gave to the world noble collection which now adorns the Brook Museum. Alfred Tennyson began with five lo and two fishes of song. His first poem was wri one Sunday morning, after his mother and brot had locked him in the room and gone to chu Alfred was too little to go to church, but he big enough to play with his five loaves and fishes of rhyme. He brought them to Jesus, they were multiplied into powers which gave b to a song vibrant with immortal melodies.

Peter Cooper came to New York when sevent years of age. He held less than five loaves and fishes in his youthful hand. Walking the str for days before getting a place, he at last succee in apprenticing himself to a carriage-maker for board and two dollars a month. While working fifty cents a week he said to himself, "If I ever rich, I will build a place where poor boys and g of New York may have an education free." brought his unpromising store to Jesus. His b hood dream was multiplied into that golden rea named the Cooper Institute in New York C

Paying His Debt to God

Only recently a princely layman in New York ca his bookkeeper into his private office. The gr merchant said to his trusted employee, "Accord to your own statement, I still owe God $45,000 this year's business. Make out the check, brin to me, and I will sign it." I tell you that m known around the world, is not in business for h self alone. He must be about his Father's busin because in early life he got himself to Jesus. I told that this same man finds time to spend thi minutes each morning with God in prayer. W a lesson to the thousands in this great city who wedded to their golden idols, and who are also r erably lean in heart and soul! My brothers, th is but one problem in life, and that is to get selves, our loved ones, our unfortunate brothers, unconsecrated things to our blessed Lord Master! Consider, also, what happened when perplexed disciples brought their loaves and fis to Christ. Ready obedience to the divine voic always a forerunner of the divine overplus, wh is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. Th is, first of all, orderliness. "He commanded multitudes to sit down on the grass." They h been running here and yonder, weary, panting, h gry, as sheep without a shepherd. The dee voices of the soul are drowned in the noise bustle of the world. Men need to be taught retaught the high philosophy of pausing, of sitt down on God's green grass and hearing again commanding voice of the ageless Messiah. what is the next step? "He took the five loaves, the two fishes." Ah, this is the upper-world hist of the little becoming great, of the human becom divine, of the finite becoming infinite! He t them into his own omnipotent hands—that is story of every lofty movement, of every worthy stitution, of every royal soul that has thrown resistless impulse into the current of these hun years.

Moreover, it is the only way of the little becom truly great. Martin Luther alone is puny inde but Martin Luther in the hands of Christ hurls thunders of another Sinai. John Bunyan alone only a tinker; but John Bunyan, taken by Chr takes the world by his sublime allegory. John W ley alone is a polished churchman; but John Wesl conscious of the indwelling Christ, changes the c rent of the eighteenth century. Dwight L. Mo alone is a shoe clerk; but Dwight L. Moody, Christlike layman, girdles the world with his fi ing evangel. When men and institutions are pas through the divine hands of Jesus Christ, t drop the old trade-marks and take unto themsel ernal values. If all light is at some int condensed into a flame, it may be tly said that every epoch is consed in a man. And the higher och-making men are always Christ-ade men—men who have yielded temselves into his hands and been tributed as soul-food for the marching generations!

Then, too, we behold the divine meth- of distribution. "He gave the aves to the disciples, and the disples to the multitudes." It has been id that whenever a masterpiece apars, a distribution of God is taking ace. Now, that is just what occrred when Jesus fed the multitudes miraculous fashion. He command- the disciples to distribute God to ose hungry thousands. Are not we, disciples, commanded to do likewise day? O men, we are called to be tributers of God! A smaller conption of our Christianity will not ffice, and hardly a larger, grander eal could urge us forward in our rk. Science teaches that physical e cannot be sustained except by ing as food that which has been ve. The nutritive properties of rth and air must be assimilated for by living plants and animals before can use them. For instance, the int sucks sustenance out of the rth. We can live upon the plant, t not upon the earth. The ox fatns on grass. We can eat the ox, but t the grass. Nor is it otherwise th spiritual nourishment. The souls men cannot thrive on abstract truth. od knew we would shrivel up on stractions, becoming at best only in-blooded and spectral worshipers. herefore, the Word becomes flesh, and is when we reproduce the living ord in our own lives that the famning multitudes are fed. Let us go rth into the world, my brothers, with is thought making melody in our larts—we are the divinely chosen distbuters of God!

The overflowing abundance of that sert meal must not be overlooked. nd they did all eat, and were filled." hile every man, woman and child reved their full share, they did not haust the divine supply. Exhaust e divine supply? Why, the mere tement suggests these questions: oes the vast vital fluid that we call agnetic or electric flash through the oud-masses with less splendor beuse it consents to perform the office pilot to a bark, and to keep constant the north the little needle intrusted it, the gigantic guide? Is Aurora s splendid, clad less in purple and erald, suffers she any diminution majesty and of radiant grace, beuse, foreseeing an insect's thirst, she refully secretes in the flower the dewop needed by the bee? Much less the bounty of the soul's Father in nger of being exhausted by supplyg the needs of men. To the last ur of the world it may be said, "And ey did all eat, and were filled."

Finally, there is the divine economy. He saith unto his disciples, Gather the broken pieces which remain er, that nothing be lost." Do we t always find a remainder in God's ack? He not only fills the cup of e with abundance, but there is still od's golden overplus—the love of hrist, which passeth knowledge, fillg the soul unto all the fulness of od! Man is still put in a cleft of e rock and covered by the divine nd. When God passes by in his unspeakable glory, what can the soul do t cry, "He is able to do exceeding undantly above all that we ask or ink"?

But you say, "I know so much more life's broken pieces than I do of the erflowing cup." Be quiet, be patnt, be trustful, dear heart! The aster's eye beholds not only the frag-

ASH WEDNESDAY AND CLEAN LENT

By Rev. J. M. FARRAR, D.D.*

FEBRUARY 9 is Ash Wednesday, and the first day of Lent. March 27 is Easter Sunday, and the last day in Lent. From early times the church has set apart this season in memory of Christ's forty-day fast. The name of Lent comes from an old word meaning Spring. This observance in memory of Christ's forty days' fast in the wilderness came in the spring, so they called it Lent. Some call it "Clean Lent." What a strange name? What do they mean? On Ash Wednesday, in some of the churches, ashes and holy water are sprinkled on the people in the sign of the cross. Ashes mean humility—we must be humble. Water has reference to our need of washing clean from all sin. The sign of the cross refers to what Christ has done for us. Because Lent begins on Ash Wednesday with this ceremony of cleaning it is called Clean Lent.

A QUAKER, named Isaac Hopper, was a great lover of little children. When he met a boy with a dirty face or hands he would ask him, "Didst thou ever study chemistry?" The boy, with a wondering stare, would answer, "No." "Then I will teach thee how to perform a curious chemical experiment. Go home, take a piece of soap, put it in water, and rub it briskly on thy hands and face. Then thou wilt see what a beautiful froth it will make. From it thou canst make soap bubbles. This is a chemical experiment; I advise thee to try it."

IT is not the body, but the mind and soul, that are to be cleansed and made ready for the Easter joy. In our church we do not have the chemical experiment with ashes and holy water, but we do want you to be humble and to keep your mind and soul clean. Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow. On Ash Wednesday just think, think, think of what the day means. You wash and get ready for dinner. Lent is the getting ready for the feast of Easter. Let your prayer every morning be, "Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow." At the close of Christ's forty days' fast we read that the angels came and ministered unto him. Make this "Clean Lent," and at Easter I am sure the angels will bring blessings to you. Remember not only the water of cleansing, but also the ashes of humility. Humility means bowing your proud head. Can I help you to remember this? Listen! An eccentric minister, preaching on "The Ark," said: "Noah sent his boys out to measure the animals, in order to know how large to make the door of the Ark. The boys brought back the measurement of the elephant as the largest animal. When the door had been completed, they came in, much excited, and said, 'Father, father, the door is too low! We found a giraffe, with head so high it can never get in.' The old gentleman replied, 'I have made the door large enough to admit the elephant, and that high-headed giraffe must get its head down to enter.' And I say, brethren," continued the preacher, "the door into the Ark is wide enough to admit an elephant of a sinner like me, and if you high-headed sinners want to get in you must get your heads down." You must be humble and use God's method of cleansing. I hear a junior say, "I am not a great sinner, I am sure my sins are not like scarlet; why should I be humble and ask God to wash my mind and soul?"

DR. HULBERT'S story about one drop of red paint will help you to understand. A boy walked into a house-painter's shop one day, and stood looking at the different colors. The painter had gone out for something, and the boy began to meddle. On the floor stood a large keg of white paint, and close beside it was a smaller one, filled with Indian red, all ready for the brush. The boy took hold of a paddle in the smaller keg and held it up, watching the thin red stream which flowed from the end. Something startled him, and he turned quickly and let a single drop fall into the white paint. The boy was frightened, and tried to hide the one drop of red paint by mixing it well with the white paint. At last he thought that the red drop was completely hidden. But the first thing that the painter said when he came in was, "That keg of white paint isn't very white. I wonder what's the matter with it?"

SOME of you have tried the same thing with the spots in your characters that the boy did with the spot in the paint. You try to hide your sin by mixing it in with your good life. But one little, mean sin will spoil your good character just as the one drop spoiled the keg of white paint.

God's Golden Overplus

ments which remain after the feast, but our God sees the broken pieces which never knew any feast. Out of these broken pieces thou shalt be made an eternal excellency! "Thou shalt also be a crown of beauty in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God." This moment God is sweeping his universe in quest of the broken pieces, for they must be gathered up, that nothing be lost! Hereafter thou shalt know and understand.

But not to-day. Then be content, poor heart!
God's plans, like lilies pure and white, unfold;
We must not tear the close-shut leaves apart—
Time will reveal the chalices of gold.
And if, through patient toil, we reach the land
Where tired feet, with sandals loosed, may rest,
When we shall clearly see and understand,
I think that we shall say, "God knew the best!"

The Mikado's Garden Party

REV. CHARLES W. IGLEHART, a Methodist missionary assigned to educational work in Tokyo, Japan, in a letter to relatives in this country gives a description of the palace garden party of the Emperor of Japan, a portion of which we give to our readers:

"I think the greatest example of a man who has freed himself from the old days on non-essentials, but who has kept all the best from the past, that I have ever known of is the Emperor of this country. At the imperial garden party, which I attended, I had a fine chance to see the Emperor on one of the most democratic occasions of the whole year. He walked into the grounds. I was on the front row of the people, who simply moved back, and made a lane for him to pass through, and he was as simple and friendly in his looks and bows as an ordinary man. Only a few years ago he would not have thought of looking at anybody as he walked by. There was an open pavilion set up, and he took his stand under this, to have the presentation of the various personages who were present.

"I had a superb chance to stand there and watch him. His figure, especially from the waist down, is not prepossessing. He was dressed in the uniform of an army officer, and would have carried native Japanese dress much better; but his face was worth a long journey to see. Instead of the extreme formality of the court, which there has always been in Japan, he stood with extended hand and freely greeted every person who was presented, even the ladies (it is a very new thing for any one but men, and these only of a certain rank, to come into his presence). He talked to each person, and shook hands again as they retired. The Empress also received, a little distance away from him. On his way out, I was on the front row again, and, on making as pretty an obeisance as I knew how, actually got a bow in return.

"The Emperor has gradually introduced many new ideas without any jar, and the people are so used to the exercise of their new privileges that when he ceases to reign there will be no serious danger. He is directly responsible for the Constitution. I feel sure that his purpose was to divert some of the loyalty of the people from his person to the country and its laws. He is still vigorous, and every one prays that he may live a long while still to see many reforms farther along. Prince Ito's death makes a great vacancy, but the work of his long life is already secure. The Korean Crown Prince is here in Tokyo, being educated; we saw him the other day. I met Mr. and Mrs. O'Brien at the embassy on Thanksgiving Day, and had quite a nice little visit with them. CHARLES WHEELER IGLEHART."

PRESIDENT TAFT ON THE LAW'S DELA

AT the recent three days' session of the National Civic Federation Congress, in Washington, President Taft was the principal speaker. He delivered an address at the opening session on January 17, in which he urged the desirability of having the States use actively their powers in the interest of uniform legislation affecting conservation of national resources, divorce, marriage, and more expeditious judicial procedure. He intimated also that the cry against the over-centralization of the government would be hushed if the States worked in harmony with each other in their law-making, otherwise Congress will be urged to enact for the whole country the laws which conditions demand and State statutes fail to supply.

President Taft Addressing the National Civic Federation Congress in Washington

The President further said that there should be uniformity in judicial procedure. If anything in the system deserved attack, it was the delay secured by the wealthy under judicial proceedings. He advocated changes in the form of Federal Court proceedings which could be taken as an example by the States. Court procedure could be simplified along the lines of English practice.

Concerning conservation he said: "The Federal Government has no power to compel owners of forests to attend to those forests with a view to the welfare of the community, of the neighbors who live there, or of those who are affected by the denuding of the land of the trees. That must be done through the State governments if it is done at all. The same applies with respect to many of the streams. There is more to be done by the States in the conservation of resources than by the Federal Government."

Addresses were also made by Hon. Seth Low, Ex-Judge Alton Parker, Governor Wilson of Kentucky, and several others. It was a most representative assemblage, including Governors and delegates from all parts of the United States, representing various commercial, labor and social associations, among them the American Federation of Labor, the National Grange, the Farmers' National Congress, the National Association of Life Insurance Presidents and the National Association of State Boards of Arbitration.

STRICKEN MESSINA RISING FROM ITS RUINS

Marching to the Service to Commemorate the Disaster

Portable Houses Sent by America After the Earthquake

IT was but little over a year ago that one of the worst earthquakes in the history of all Italy—a part of the world where the surface of things seems unable to lie easily, and is striving continually to readjust itself—shook down the walls, churches, palaces and homes of Messina, and devastated about thirty other towns in Sicily and on the mainland of Calabria.

The readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, always ready to lend a helping hand to those in distress, no matter from how great a distance the cry for aid comes, responded generously to the appeal made in the columns of this paper to contribute to the Italian Relief Fund, and especially to the Mothers' and Babies' Fund, whose fame spread over two continents, and which was under the direct charge of her gracious Majesty Queen Helena herself.

Now it appears, contrary to all prophecies made in regard to the future of Messina, that the city may in time be rebuilt. For several months after the appalling disaster it seemed as if the once fair city of the straits would be abandoned forever.

Within the last few months, however, a change seems to have come over the spirit of the people. Messina, in part, is being rebuilt. Not as it was before—the ancient Messina has gone forever. The new Messina is of wood, American wood. Many of the houses were built by money from the American relief funds.

In the interior of the city, and in the new suburbs built by the refugees, the greatest revival of activity is now noticed. There the people have really begun to live as nearly as possible in the way they did before. In the Via San Martino numerous shops have been opened, displaying wares of all kinds, which are attracting customers, many of them visitors from the mainland, who have come over to Messina to view the havoc wrought by the earthquake. Visitors also furnish the support of the new wooden hotels, which are fairly well constructed and have clean, well furnished rooms.

The manager, all smiles and politeness, receives the American tourist with many bows, and one cannot but notice that "mine host" looks quite prosperous. He is dressed in a frock coat of the latest and does not seem at all depressed by the fact t he is keeping a hotel in a city of ruins. The cha bermaids are pretty and neatly dressed, and doorkeepers are in smart liveries. The wait move about the dining-room with surprising agil acquired no doubt when the walls were falling ri and left and safety lay only in a man's speed to
"out from under" before they came down.

Small churches have been built of wood and c rugated iron. The high schools and gramn schools have been reopened, and quite a number students are registered at the university.

As the visitor watches the renewal of the cit life there arises in his mind a grave question as the wisdom of it all. The city has been shaken do by one of the most fearful earthquakes in histo and, though the people seem confident of th safety, there is no reason why it should not oc again. Plainly nature has shown that this is a place intended for the habitation of man, and would seem that people are taking fearful risks.

FOR WORLD-WIDE EVANGELIZATION

THE LAYMEN'S MISSIONARY MOVEMENT BANQUET IN THE HOTEL ASTOR, NEW YORK, JANUARY 14

A MASS meeting of 5,200 men on January 16, in the Hippodrome in New York City, indicates to some degree the enthusiasm aroused by the Laymen's Missionary Movement, which is conducting a campaign of education on a national scale, with the endorsement of the Foreign Mission Boards of America.

It is doubtful if any meeting was ever before held in New York of just such character and significance. The effect of five thousand men singing in one mighty chorus "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," or Onward, Christian Soldiers," was to melt the heart and stir the soul, as well as to testify to the conviction of mighty responsibilities to be enthusiastically assumed.

The campaign, as outlined, includes the presentation of the question as to America's part in evangelizing the world at seventy-five conventions between the months of October, 1909, and May, 1910. The fourteen conventions held previous to this great gathering in New York were attended by leading laymen of the various cities. Wherever the movement has been presented it has received the enthusiastic commendation and co-operation of representative men. A commission of six laymen, from the United States and Canada, presented the movement in Great Britain, where it was taken up, and national committees organized, both in England and Scotland. It has since spread to Germany and to Australia. It seems as if the time is rapidly approaching when the Christian men of all nations will be federated for co-operative action in behalf of mankind.

"We shall never be able to save America until we are willing to undertake an intelligent, well-planned crusade for the redemption of the world," declared J. Campbell White, general secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, who was introduced as the active potential force and the single best type of the activities of the movement. "Expression deepens impression. Three-fourths of the laymen in our churches have had an idea that their duties are to fill the pews throughout the year, and make up the deficit in the accounts at the end of the year. It is a great thing when a layman realizes that it is his duty and opportunity to stand shoulder to shoulder with every other man in the church in a comprehensive movement to evangelize the world. One of the important discoveries of the last two years has been that the Christian forces of a whole nation can be led to act together in behalf of a cause that is large enough to appeal to them."

"In an ideal investment," said Mr. G.S. Eddy, "we seek good security and large returns. In these two respects missions present a gilt-edged security. Nothing is so sure and nothing yields larger returns. When the government of Japan went to the English money market to finance the Manchurian Railway scheme, it was learned in London that the money was spent in the United States to buy railroad supplies, amounting to some $50,000,000. The reason why the Japanese government spent English money in the United States was due solely to the fact that the Japanese engineers in charge of the work had been educated in the United States, at the expense of American missionaries, and had there imbibed Yankee notions, which made it impossible for them to build a railroad along any other than American lines. Thus, in one swoop, American commerce reaped a direct return of $50,000,000 from missionary effort. That one order would have paid the cost of all the missions in the world from the North American continent for the last seven years."

"Twenty-five years ago Korea was a closed land, having no trade with the United States. To-day there are 200,000 Christians in Korea. A hundred years ago we sent the first missionary to China. Our trade to-day with that country totals nearly $50,000,000 and is rapidly growing. American commodities are found in the heart of India and China, miles from the railway, and our trade alone receives a tenfold return for all that is spent in missions. I believe in God, I believe in humanity, therefore I believe in missions."

Through the next four months a "double team" of speakers will be in the field, holding meetings simultaneously through the West and South, culminating in a National Missionary Congress in Chicago May 3 to 6.

A GREAT GATHERING OF LAYMEN IN PITTSBURG

GREATER PITTSBURG made great preparations for the Laymen's Missionary Convention, which is now being held in that city. The Laymen's Missionary Movement originated here years ago in the city of New York, at the time of the celebration of the centennial of the "Haystack" Prayer Meeting. It is the massing of the churches of all denominations on the platform of giving Christ to the whole world in this generation. The headquarters of the Pittsburg campaign are in the Central Young Men's Christian Association Building, and the energetic executive secretary is Mr. C. W. Hensel. He is assisted by a large force of secretaries and stenographers.

The convention is self-entertaining. A charge of a dollar is made for registration to meet the necessary expenses. No collections or subscriptions are taken. The convention opened on Thursday, January 20, at 6:30 P.M., with a dinner. The first speaker on the programme was the Rt. Rev. Cortlandt Whitehead, D.D., Episcopal Bishop of Pittsburg, on the topic "The National Missionary Campaign." The second speaker was Colonel Elijah W. Halford, of New York, on "Men and Missions," and the last speaker Mr. J. Campbell White, of New York, on "America's World Responsibility." The session on Friday forenoon, January 21, was devoted to addresses from missionaries from Alaska, West Africa, India, Siam, Japan, Philippine Islands, China and Korea. Among the speakers at this session the leading names are Bishop Peter Trimble Rowe of Alaska, Dr. J. L. Dearing of Japan, and M. D. Eubank, M.D., of China. The balance of the programme was as follows: Friday afternoon an open conference, Mr. J. Campbell White presiding. The topics include "Encouraging Features in the Present World Outlook," "How to Enlist the Men of the Church in the Work of Evangelizing the World," "The Pastor as a Leader," "The Missionary Committee," "Missionary Education," "The Every-Member Canvass." At 6 P.M., a supper with co-operating committees to determine the policy to be recommended to convention. Friday evening's topic, "Business System in Missionary Finance," the speakers being Mr. J. Campbell White, of New York, and Dr. Homer C. Stuntz, also of New York. Saturday morning's topics: "The Spiritual Significance of the National Missionary Campaign," "The Effect on the Home Church of Really Obeying the Great Commission," "What Should This Convention Undertake?" "How to Conserve and Extend the Influence of this Convention?" "Missions, the Supreme Opportunity for Investment," among the speakers being Dr. Stanley White, of New York; Dr. Cyrus J. Musser, of Philadelphia; Mr. John W. Wood, of New York, and Bishop J. E. Robinson of India. Among the speakers on Saturday evening are Rev. C. A. R. Janvier, of Philadelphia, and Dr. Isaac Taylor Headland, of Peking.

THE promised article by Rear-Admiral Sigsbee, which he has specially prepared for the readers of this journal, and in which he gives his views concerning the raising of the battleship Maine, will appear in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of February 16. It is a contribution of the first importance, and should be read everywhere.

The "Meat Strike"

THERE are indications that the boycott recently begun in the West against the inordinately high prices of food will quickly spread to many States. It has already attained considerable proportions in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Missouri, Michigan, Virginia, Maryland, Nebraska and Kansas. In Cleveland nearly sixty thousand persons have united in a "meat strike," with the prompt result that twenty-seven butchers have lowered their prices. Similar tactics are now being pursued to bring down the cost of eggs. In Pennsylvania the movement involves one million five hundred thousand consumers, and is felt in many counties. In Kansas City, Atchison, St. Joseph, Topeka and Leavenworth the strike has taken a wide sweep, and many families are living temporarily on cereals and vegetables.

It is undeniable that the increased cost of living is one of the most important questions now before the public. It is a problem which takes hold of every household and almost every individual. Some authorities tell us that the advance in all kinds of food is caused by the tariff; others assure us that it is due to the over-production of gold; while still others declare that the trusts are to blame for all the trouble. But it is a waste of time to speculate concerning causes while the actual situation confronts us. Bread, milk, fruit, all kinds of meats, vegetables, eggs, and almost everything that goes to make up the daily menu of the average American family, have risen until they are nearly out of reach. Families are driven to sharp economy; boarding-houses are obliged to raise prices, and restaurants reduce the regular portions to the lowest point the public can stand. It is a situation that calls for a quick remedy. To appeal to those who control the sources of supply would be useless; to wait for the slow process of regulative legislation would be equally futile. In the adoption of the German boycott—which means a general understanding to abstain from the buying of any article of commerce so long as it is held at inordinate figures—it may prove that an effective, if radical, remedy has been found. It is impossible to predict to what proportions this movement may yet expand, and it would not be surprising if it should grow to be big enough to teach a well-deserved lesson to those who juggle with the price of the necessaries of life, regardless of the natural laws of supply and demand.

The Master's Business

TO many of those who attended the great gathering of the Laymen's Missionary Movement in New York recently, when over five thousand men, representatives of many kinds of business and professions, were present, there must have come the conviction that here was evidence of a great transformation in the methods which we Americans have heretofore followed in our religious affairs.

It may be said briefly that the keynote of the Laymen's Missionary Movement is "the Evangelization of the World in this Generation." How is this great work to be accomplished? Is world-wide evangelization a dream, as so many have pronounced it, which we hold up before our eyes as though we were looking upon some beautiful vision that is wholly impossible of realization? Shall we ever see "a nation born in a day"? Will the time indeed come in this generation when "many nations shall join themselves to the Lord"?

In that assemblage was an unlooked-for element of inspiration in the presence of Mr. J. Campbell White, who is, in a sense, the founder of the movement. He is one whose faith outruns that of the multitude, and he unhesitatingly declares that, not years hence, but now is the time to girdle the world with the Gospel and bring to pass the literal fulfilment of the Great Commission. He holds that world evangelization is a practical enterprise, and needs only the adoption of a proper business system to bring it about. Such a system is indispensable, just as it is in the affairs of secular business. It is the lack of it that has been the cause of our failure in the past. He therefore appeals for business methods. We must work by consecrated human agencies and invoke God's blessing upon their operation. We have made a mistake too long in holding our missionary work to be a mere matter of sentiment. We have turned it over largely to women, instead of making it a men's concern. To the everlasting honor of these women, let it be recorded that they have done their part nobly and well. In every congregation they have been permitted to bear the principal burden of the missionary effort while the men have not taken the work seriously.

There is another point on which the same high authority lays special stress. Mr. White holds firmly to the great Gospel truth that we are merely trustees of our worldly possessions, and that to advance the Lord's work in the right way we must practise, systematically and liberally, the grace of giving. We must give wisely as well as quickly—give as we have been prospered, and not hold back; and we must put implicit faith in God to make the investment good. He will not fail to give the increase; he never fails.

A Busy Gospel Life Ended

BY the death of the Rev. Michael Paget Baxter the London Christian Herald loses its founder and editor, the Gospel activities of the English metropolis lose a stanch and generous friend, and various missionary enterprises in foreign lands a strenuous co-worker and liberal supporter. Mr. Baxter personally, and in conjunction with the forces he organized and controlled, was equal to a strong missionary army corps. In a quiet and unostentatious way the influence of his spiritual teaching reached countless multitudes in his own land and elsewhere. Life for him held a high and very definite purpose, and through it all, in his own simple evangelical way, by pen, voice, hand and purse, he labored strenuously and faithfully for the furtherance of evangelical Protestantism. To him THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of New York owes its origin. It ceased to be his property twenty years ago, but its present owner and editors have always remembered kindly the Gospel-loving, soul-winning, warm-hearted, talented English preacher, who first conceived the idea of the publication which has since grown to be the greatest religious newspaper in the world.

A Mother's Problem

A CORRESPONDENT writes us this letter: "I am the mother of a large family, the youngest of whom is now ten years old. None of them have confessed Christ. I joined the Episcopal Church at the age of sixteen, but after my marriage moved to a country place where there is no Episcopal Church. The children and I attend the Christian Church near us. My husband is not a member of any church and rarely attends one. It troubles me that my children are not Christians. The boys especially are drifting away. Do you think it would influence them to be Christians if I should join the Christian Church and enter into its work?"

This pictures conditions that are doubtless duplicated in many thousands of American rural homes. It is a beautiful thing to join early the church of one's parents, and remain always in its communion. The writer of this letter should love and honor her girlhood's choice for creed and worship; but since "from out her bourne of time and place" the tide has swept her into the vicinage of a different church she should cheerfully enter into its life, and do what she can to build it up and to interest her children in its work.

By throwing herself heartily into the work of her new church, this troubled mother may yet be able, with God's blessing, to gather her loved ones into his fold.

It is as if all denominations were marching under one great flag, though the banners of the differe divisions may each bear a different motto. Enl in the one which is nearest you, and fight the gc fight with your whole strength. It is all done ' His name."

GENERAL NOTES

—THERE IS A STIR among the suffragists in New York o the charge that some of the leaders have advocated the c cealment or disuse of the wedding ring.

—THE OMAHA Bee is authority for the statement that V liam Jennings Bryan will be a candidate for President in 19 It credits this statement to R. J. Metcalfe, editor of Commoner.

—PROF. HUGO MUENSTERBERG, the celebrated psychologist Harvard, has declared that Eusapia Paladino, the noted spi ualist medium, who puzzled the scientists of Europe, is a dec tion and a sufferer from the worst form of hysteria.

—PAULHAN, the French aeroplanist, made a record fli for height at Los Angeles January 12, rising in a Farn biplane to an altitude of nearly 5,000 feet. This would se to dispose of any apprehension that the aeroplane cannot beyond the range of the rifle.

—IN THE LAST great snowstorm in the Eastern States 1 inches of snow fell, being the heaviest precipitation in a sin fall in sixteen years. The removal of the snow from the stre of New York City kept 18,000 men and 2,800 carts busy greater part of a week.

—TWENTY THOUSAND ACRES of fruit lands in Oregon, bord ing on the Columbia River, will be thrown open to settlem by the government at 9 A.M. on February 10. It will be p tioned out in farms of from 10 to 40 acres, and the charge irrigation will be $60 per acre, of which $18 per acre m be paid the first year and $6 per acre yearly thereafter. matic conditions in this beautiful fruit region are said to perfectly adapted for the purpose.

—IT IS A WISE suggestion, if a novel one, which Mr. Marli a business man who is deeply interested in missions, makes relation to raising funds for that branch of Christian w hereafter. He would organize a syndicate of business men supply the money, just as syndicates are now formed and op ated to provide funds for many great business enterpris which, with ability in financing and skilful management, forward successfully. There is unquestionably a very la body of business men who have safely passed through the sto and stress of the early struggle and reached a point wh competence brings leisure, many of whom would be glad employ their talent and experience in channels where tl might accomplish great spiritual good.

—WHILE THE Unionists, who support the House of Lor have made considerable gains in the British elections, it is n fairly probable that the Liberals, together with their allies, Laborites and Irish Nationalists, will still control. Up to J uary 21—the returns still being incomplete—the figu showed the Liberals to have 137 seats, Labor members 29 se Irish Nationalists 53 seats, a total of 219 against 163 se for the Unionists. This is a net Unionist gain of 61 se Should the same ratio of gains continue, the net Unionist g in the next Parliament would be 107, reducing the Liberal c lition majority to 120. These figures show that the House Lords, and the traditions that surround it, have a much stron hold upon the English people than was supposed. The Uni ists have whittled down their opponents strength in ma districts, but if the coalition holds, the Liberals will still h a fair working majority in the next House, thus assuring uninterrupted progress of the reform measures of Chance Lloyd-George and his associates.

Menelik and His Successor

MENELIK, Emperor of Abyssinia, for a score of years has ruled his country with a wise head and a strong arm; by his ability, tact, ccrage and statesmanship he harmonized the factiis led by warlike chiefs, and bound the restless feeration of States into the strong empire of Eiopia. A year and a half ago, he suffered a stoke of paralysis, which disabled him, and caused sdewhat a relaxation of his grip upon the governmit, and in October he suffered another stroke, wch paralyzed his body and dethroned his mind. Ira period of mental lucidity, he selected, as the sucessor to his throne, Lij Yasu, son of the Emperor's daughter, Waizaro Shoa Rogga, and Ras Mihael. There is grave apprehension in the home lad, and among the nations, who by the triple allaie are to a certain degree responsible for the good beavior of the Ethiopian empire, that the death of Menelik and the change of rulers may result in a evolution, in which the chiefs of the various provins may fight for the throne. The word Abyssinia is rom the Arabic Habash, which means "mixed poulation," indicating what congleneration there is among the elemits of the various provinces. Tese provinces are Tigré, Lasta, Ahara, Gojam and Shoa. Abyssia is called the Switzerland of Aica, and is one of the most beautil and fertile countries on the gbe. The Christian Church was plted in Abyssinia fifteen hundred yers ago, and has existed continuouly in that country until the preser time. It has been diluted from tie to time by Judaism and other is's, but it has been the basis of a fa better civilization than that of pranism, and makes it the more ea for the empire to take its place, ast does to-day, among the progressi nations of the earth. As Menel had no direct heir he was understd to favor the recognition of the sc of Ras Makonnen, a relative of hi wife, the Empress Taitu. The bc died five years ago, and the Empiss, who was very ambitious to rule th empire herself through some agnt, and who had great influence ov her husband, persuaded him to dp the consideration of a successor tois throne; but when the Emperor physical and mental condition bame so grave his councilors and th foreign ministers at his court as wl, insisted upon the designation of aheir to succeed him. The matter w compromised by the marriage of th grandson, Lij Yasu, and the Princes Romaine, niece of the Empress Titu, which united the old dynasty of Tigré with that of Shoa and fasteed the ruling house to many powerul families.

The young Emperor is only thirten years of age, and he has been gen over to the guardianship of one of Menelik's most faithful friends, Ras Tasma. The council of ministes, providing a guard of 50,000 soldirs, commissioned the father of the yng Emperor to defend the city. The prospective clnge of rulers provoked a revolt in the provire of Tigré, which the Governor suppressed, but afa fearful loss of life, three thousand men havir been killed on one battlefield. Great Britain, Fnce, Italy and Germany especially will do all in thir power to aid the new Emperor in the preservatin of peace, and in the promotion of prosperity. Ayssinian tradition claims that King Menelik was a neal descendant of King Solomon, and he himself mde the same claim and boasted in the fact. There is record given of the selection of Solomon as the Kig by his father David in the following language:

t Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet anoint him there ki over Israel: and blow ye with the trumpet, and say, God sa king Solomon. Then ye shall come up after him, that he may cce and sit upon my throne; for he shall be king in my stead: ar I have appointed him to be ruler over Israel and over Judah. (I ings 1:34, 35.)

P Breaks; Mill Stops

The breaking of a pin in the driving-wheel of the fishing engine in the rail mill of the Illinois Steel Corporation at South Chicago recently cost the compay $369,000. The mill, which was compelled to bidle for the greater part of a week for repairs, sfered the enormous monetary loss. The little pieces of machinery among mills and men are just as important as the larger ones, and anything that would derange or break them will seriously interfere with the harmonious working of the machinery of society. The little things in the material and spiritual world must be carefully looked after. The necessity that the smallest pin in the machinery of character or of human life shall be in perfect form and adjusted is suggested by the Saviour, who declares that:

He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much: and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much. (Luke 16:10.)

Killed by Leopard

Pauline Russelle, the animal trainer, was fearfully wounded by a black leopard which she was training, and died a week after in Bellevue Hospital as the result of her injury. Mrs. Russelle had for some years appeared at summer parks and museums as an animal trainer. A short time ago she went to Yardsley, Pa., and secured from an animal dealer a troupe of five leopards. She took the animals to New York, and was training them in a loft for a museum entertainment when Clayton, the largest of the leopards, struck her down and would have killed her on the spot had not the attendants come to her rescue. She leaves two children, for whose support she was providing. In subduing the beasts of appetite and temptation there is the greatest danger, and the need of prudence and wisdom to prevent their pouncing upon and destroying us. The prophet in his description of divine judgment makes reference to the ferocity of the leopard in these words:

I will be unto them as a lion: as a leopard by the way will I observe them. The wild beast shall tear them. (Hosea 13:7-8.)

False Weights

Dr. Fritz Reichmann, New York State Superintendent of Weights and Measures, spent a year in carefully inspecting the systems of weights and measures throughout the State, in which he has found fraud so gross and general as to be a public scandal. The revelation of these frauds has been made in a report to Governor Hughes, and special legislation to check this wholesale dishonesty has been recommended. The following are some of the frauds which Dr. Reichmann has revealed:

One-pound print butter is 14 ounces; No. 10 gallon can holds 3 quarts; No. 3 3-pound can has 1¼ pounds; No. 2 2-pound can has 1 pound; large bottle, quart, is 1-5 gallon; small bottle, pint, is ½ pint; olive oil measure, 8 quarts to gallon; pound box crackers is 8 to 12 ounces; 2-pound package cereal is 1-pound bag.

At this time, when the price of living is soaring so high as to inconvenience and afflict the people, it is doubly disgraceful to add to the price of the living by such wholesale theft through false weights and measures. Those who are responsible for these dishonesties should be prosecuted and punished at once. How hateful to the Almighty must these dishonesties be, and if unrepented of how severe will the penalties be!

A false balance is abomination to the Lord; but a just weight is his delight. (Prov. 11:1.)

Youthful Suicides

The shocking record of twenty-two suicides the first week of this year in the city of Berlin is recorded, and that which seems even worse is the fact that a boy of twelve years of age is included in the list. The rate of suicide in Germany is greater than that of any other nation in the world. It also reports a much larger number of children's suicides than other countries. The Germans are very highly educated, and the children of no land are so driven in their studies as the school children of Germany, and scientists and physicians have been inclined to trace quite a proportion of the self-destruction of children to the excessive strain put upon them in their educational system. Suicides from over-study by boys and girls, young men and women, in this country frequently occur. It is commendable for school boards and teachers to have a high standard, and excite a very laudable ambition upon the part of the scholars to reach it, but there is often the dangerous experiment of trying to push the whole school up to the pace of the most brilliant scholars rather than to adjust a curriculum which will suit the capacity of the average child of the school. It is a sin and shame to take the joy and spice out of the life of childhood and shatter its nerves, and even destroy its life, in an unnatural pressure toward a high standard of scholarship. The wise men recorded the damaging effect of over-study when he wrote:

Much study is a weariness of the flesh. (Eccles. 12:12.)

Clergyman Favors Sunday Theatre

Newspapers report that one of the ablest and best clergymen of New York City, in a recent sermon, referred to the popular demand for a Sunday theatre, and commended the putting of plays of a high character upon the stage on Sunday night in response to this demand. It is also reported that he went to Albany with a delegation to talk with the Governor about the kind of law that should be enacted legalizing a Sunday theatre that should be pronounced morally safe by a constituted commission. This seems almost as foolish as that of meeting the popular demand for a saloon with a "religious" saloon, which proved such a dismal failure in the Subway Tavern experiment, which failed at the end as a financial undertaking and was a moral failure at its beginning. The Sunday theatre is justly a lawless institution, breaking the laws of God and of man, and the church is in poor business undertaking to reduce our laws to a low standard of ethics, rather than elevate the morals of the community up to just laws. The church does not make any headway yielding to the wrong; it is only in fighting it, and fighting it uncompromisingly, that there is any certainty of success. It is a lamentable confession the pulpit makes when it confesses its inability to compete with a lawless stage on Sunday nights. The thing that must have surprised some of the projectors of this scheme is that many of the theatre men themselves object to it upon the ground that six days are enough in which to work, and that the seventh ought to be left for rest. And they have voiced the command of the Almighty, expressly given:

Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work. (Ex. 20: 9. 10.)

OUR NAVY'S TAILORING PLANT

THE government clothing factory in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, where Uncle Sam furnishes the enlisted men of the Navy with their trim-fitting uniforms, is one of the busiest and most important places in the yard. The United States can justly claim the best dressed sailors in the world, for the uniforms in quality and making are of the highest standard. The naval clothing factory, in Building No. 31, is up to date and modern in all its details, and contains many ingenious appliances for testing, cutting, making and baling the numerous garments. Thirty-four thousand garments a month were turned out last year; 342,341 garments of various kinds were made, in addition to 359,993 small articles, such as caps, rating badges, distinguishing marks and insignia. The cost valuation amounted to $717,366.75.

In order to have the sailors' apparel uniform in appearance, material, cut and make-up, each man is bound to purchase a prescribed outfit from the naval clothing factory at a fixed listed price. On enlisting in the Navy, every young sailor receives from the government his first suit, called a "bounty outfit," valued at $45. In buying clothing thereafter, the young tar first gets a requisition signed by the commanding officer of his ship. He presents this to the paymaster of the clothing factory, who delivers the desired goods in the presence of some divisional officer. The amount is then charged to the purchaser and deducted from his allowance. There is no limit to the number of suits a sailor may own. Each man must have six different uniforms. These are blue flannel dress, blue flannel undress, white working dress. The cost is as follows: Blue flannel overshirts or coats, $2; white dress trousers, $1.05; undress trousers, 90 cents; white dress jumpers, $1.40 a pair; working undress, 60 cents; trousers, dungaree, 80 cents; jerseys, $1.50; overcoats, $10; neckerchiefs, $1; caps, 40 cents. An athletic equipment is given to each ship free. Last year the factory sent out to the ships 161,000 jumpers and overshirts, 175,000 of several kinds of trousers, 100,000 hats, shoes, underwear, socks and neckerchiefs.

Probably one of the most interesting operations carried on in the factory is the cutting out of the numerous styles of garments. A skilful operator manipulates a marvelous little electric cutting machine, supplied with a thin blade of steel. This knife flies up and down at the rate of two thousand times a minute and ploughs through many layers of superimposed cloth, cutting the thick and bulky mass as easily as though it were a single sheet of paper. The machine does the work of fifteen men using shears. It goes through eighty thicknesses of denim and white duck, sixty of flannel, forty of trousers' cloth and twenty of heavy overcoat cloth. The cloth to be cut is arranged in layers, on long tables, and press-board patterns are so arranged on them th no cloth is wasted. When all is ready the operat grasps the bundle of the electric cutter, and, follo ing in the wake of the chalked pathway, severs ea pattern in a twinkling. The numbered lots belon ing to each particular garment are gathered u and, together with the proper trimmings, are co bined in a bundle for the final sewing and finishir This is not done in the factory, for lack of room, b by expert needlewomen outsi the majority of whom are wi ows, sisters and relatives dead or incapacitated navy pe ple and veterans. They ea profitable wages by their han work.

Relatives of Sea Veterans Employed at the Navy Tailor Shops

Each Wednesday and Satu day morning at nine o'clo some thirty or forty call f their allotted bundles. A go price above the sweatshop a commercial house figure paid, but the department return demands exacting a strictly first-class work. Ma once well-to-do families, it said, are represented in the a sembly.

The Navy Department pa these women nearly $250,0 last year for their labor. garments are inspected aga after they are made, and a package coming from a hou containing contagious disea is at once sent to the chemi for disinfection.

The last stage is the balin and compressing of the finish garment for transit and sto age. The clothing, by hydra lic pressure, is made into sma solid bales to save space; these are kept in the pre for an hour or more. During this interval the ba is first wrapped in black enameled cloth and afte ward with a layer of burlap. The seams are sew and painted with white lead, the whole forming tight, waterproof parcel. The name, size and nu ber of garments contained within are marked large letters upon the outside, and on call the nav clothing factory can safely send these to any part the world.

LILLIAN E. ZEH.

THE REV. MICHAEL P. BAXTER DEAD

ON Friday, January 7, Rev. Michael Paget Baxter, founder and proprietor of The Christian Herald, of London, England, died of heart failure at his residence in Highbury, North London, at the age of seventy-six. Mr. Baxter was a clergyman of the Church of England, and had made a life-long study of the prophetic Scriptures. He was converted in his twentieth year, while a student at Cambridge. In 1867 he began the publication of The Signs of Our Times, with special reference to prophecy, of which he was an ardent student. In 1873-74 he enlarged the paper and printed extended reports of the great Moody and Sankey revival. In the same year he renamed his publication The Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times, the title it bears to-day. All these years he has been its active directing spirit and editor. He also established The Prophetic News and The Signal.

Mr. Baxter's activities, however, were not confined to editorship. He was imbued with the true missionary spirit, and took especial pleasure in aiding weak and struggling missions at home and abroad, and in founding such missions where opportunity offered.

Of late years he was widely known for his practical work of philanthropy. He was, indeed, "a succorer of many." Few have any idea of the extent of his gifts to the poor and needy. Distressed at the number of half-starved men to be seen in London, he founded the Willow Street Philanthropic Mission at Shoreditch, which is doing a quiet but extensive work of benevolence in providing food and shelter for the distressed. In addition to this, many branches of evangelical effort were liberally helped by him. He was particularly interested in the distribution of Gospels in Continental cities. For many years, until prevented by increasing infirmity, it was Mr. Baxter's custom to go almost every Saturday to some Continental town, and stand in the streets for about six hours, where he would give away on an average from 3,000 to 5,000 Gospels. It is estimated that he has personally distributed between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 Gospels with his own hand in Belgium, France, Italy, Spain and England.

Mr. Baxter was a lineal descendant of the brother of the famous divine, Richard Baxter, of Kidderminster, author of The Saints' Everlasting Rest, written in the year 1650. He founded The Christian Herald, of London, with the view of reaching the common people, and more especially the non-church-going masses, with a cheap evangelical publication, representing every phase of Gospel effo at home and abroad. He succeeded beyond his e pectations, and his paper soon reached a circulatio of several hundred thousand, being sold at a penn per copy.

The Late Rev. Michael P. Baxter

Mr. Baxter, some thirty years ago, conceived th idea of an American edition of the paper, which wa started in 1878, with Joseph Spurgeon as busine manager and the late Dr. B. J. Fernie as editor. I 1890 the American CHRISTIAN HERALD was pu chased from Mr. Baxter by its present proprieto Dr. Louis Klopsch, and has been conducted ev since as an independent publication.

Mr. Baxter and his wife (who was a Miss Elizabet Foster) were both intensely interested in missionar work. In addition to large domestic missionary i terests in England, they were personally intereste in work in India, China, Japan and several oth foreign countries, and aided, through their pap and otherwise, in the support of many workers i the field. Both traveled extensively in missionar lands. Mr. Baxter's deep study of prophecy brougl him into much prominence, and he was one of th leading figures in the prophetic conferences whic have met annually in London for many years pa to discuss the "end of the age" and the "secon coming." He was a warm personal friend of bot the late C. H. Spurgeon and Dr. Talmage, and ha published many of their sermons in his paper.

Personally Mr. Baxter was a large man, of pow erful physique, with a kindly voice and an open generous hand for those in need. He devoted prac tically all of his large income to missions and charit and to the spread of the Gospel. He was in a sens a bishop, though an evangelical one, having in h care, providing for the support and arranging th work of a number of evangelical preachers. He wa greatly esteemed by those who knew him as a ma of singularly upright character and conduct, whos devotion to Christian work amounted to a consumin passion. He is survived by his widow and one so M. P. Baxter, Jr., who has been associated with h father in the latter's various enterprises.

FOR A NEW NATIONAL PARK

Two States Unite to Give the Nation a Great Reservation Where Washington Crossed the Delaware

PART of the picturesque country in the vicinity of the little settlement known as "Washington's Crossing," in New Jersey, is to be set aside for a national park. A commission has been appointed by the Governor of New Jersey to carry out the negotiations, and the State of Pennsylvania will cooperate, so that the land on both sides of the Delaware can be reserved forever for the nation as a great national park, which, like the reservation at Valley Forge, will be a Mecca for patriotic pilgrims for all time.

The scene of the famous exploit that put heart into the despairing patriots and changed gloom into sunlight has been neglected by the historical societies. One reason is that the scene of the crossing of the Delaware is a little difficult to reach. Only one railroad goes there, and trains are infrequent, while the trip by trolley is a slow business. Nevertheless, one monument has been erected. This stands on the road from the station to the house where Washington made his headquarters during the battle. The inscription reads:

This tablet is erected by the Society of the Cincinnati in the State of New Jersey to Commemorate the crossing of the Delaware by General Washington and the Continental Army on Christmas night, seventeen hundred and seventy-six.

A little farther along the road is the little frame house where Washington directed the attack on the surprised Hessians at Trenton. There is no tablet to mark the house.

"I am often asked what has become of the tablet," said the present occupant of the house to the writer, "but I cannot tell where it is. No tablet has been seen since I came here, and if there ever was one it must have been taken down and spirited away during the period of restoring or rebuilding the old place."

This neglect to mark the headquarters of General Washington during the battle will doubtless be remedied now that the scene of the crossing and subsequent conflict is to be made a national park.

Other monuments will probably spring up to mark the most interesting places on this famous battleground. The exact spot where Washington himself crossed will be difficult to locate accurately, for on that wild Christmas night, when the elements had conspired both to hinder and to help the patriot army, the shivering Continentals crossed as they could, dodging the cakes of floating ice and making the most rapid progress possible under conditions that were about the very worst that human energy and determination ever coped with.

Blame for the surprise of the Hessians quartered in Trenton has been laid upon various shoulders, the commander of the mercenaries, Rall, coming in for most of it, some would say, because he paid for whatever mistakes he made with his life, and therefore could not reply to his critics. But if some of the ragged patriots who marched on Trenton that Christmas night, leaving a trail of blood from their bleeding feet, could be called to life again and asked to give their opinion of the matter it is probable that they would answer that the same wild storm that made it impossible for the patriot army to keep its powder dry and rendered it a task almost herculean to march under such weather conditions was a blessing in disguise in that it kept the Hessians under cover and made the surprise complete.

Visitors to this new park in the future will see a pretty country, with rolling slopes picturesquely wooded, and a peaceful looking river, moving between low banks. It will require a vivid imagination on the part of the summer visitor to picture the almost insuperable obstacles that Washington and his army overcame in the descent on Trenton.

From the Famous Painting by L. Leutze

Washington Crossing the Delaware

When the patriot army prepared to move from its camp, on the Pennsylvania side of the Delaware, only twenty-four hundred men were in condition to undertake the expedition. They started at three o'clock on the afternoon of Christmas Day, every man carrying three days' rations and forty rounds. With them were eighteen field pieces.

It was twilight when the army reached the ferry, where the boats, manned by Glover's sailors, from Marblehead, were waiting to take them across. Rowing in and out of the ice cakes that drifted down the river, the little army reached the Jersey shore and disembarked as they could. The condition of the troops can be imagined when it is said that a messenger, who had followed them, had easily traced their route "by the blood on the snow, from the feet of the men who wore broken shoes."

Artists are fond of picturing the patriot army at this time in fine looking uniforms and a military equipment. The actual truth was that many of them were a ragged lot and worn with privation. But men who could win the Battle of Trenton must be judged by different standards from that of the art critic. Half frozen and almost despairing, the troops and artillery were at last all got over the river, and prepared to march the nine miles between the crossing and Trenton. One American general found that the powder of his men had been rendered useless by the wet, and he so informed Washington.

"Tell your general to use the bayonet," replied Washington, "for the town must be taken, and I am resolved to take it."

Huddled in a hut, sheltering from the snow and sleet, the Hessian pickets made small opposition, and when the drums and bugles aroused the sleepy soldiers in Trenton it was too late to make a stand. The Hessians were confronted by the enemy whichever way they turned, and finally surrendered, the loss on the American side being only two officers and one or two privates wounded, while the British lost nearly a thousand in prisoners and a score or two in killed and wounded.

The scene of such a victory should always remain on the patriot's map as one of the sacred spots of the country. While the defeat and capture of a thousand Hessians may not seem a very vital matter, it was actually one of the most important in the war, for the waning courage of the patriots was revived and the fact demonstrated that the Continental Army, ragged and despised, was able to beat the German mercenaries at the war game.

Employments Open to Women

FIFTY years ago there were but few employments open to women, and definite training in preparation for work was almost unknown. In every class of work to-day women with skill and training can command good salaries. Wages are undoubtedly higher than they were fifty years ago, but the cost of living is much greater. General averages of wages, in computing the absolute gain to men and women, are of little use. In almost every trade a few receive high wages, and therefore averages conceal the wages of a large number of workers. Again, the worth of wages depends upon the cost of living, and income from wages depends, not on what a woman receives per day, but upon the number of days in the year she works. Statements of wages are vitiated by the bias of opinion of those who interpret or collect data. Reformers often estimate wages lower than they are, to show the need of reform. Supporters of political administrations are tempted to statements as roseate as possible, and often misleading.

As to occupations, women are in the majority in only nine, viz., musicians, or teachers of music; school teachers, boarding-house keepers, housekeepers, laundresses, nurses, servants, stenographers and typewriters. Among the occupations in which there are about as many women as men, as nearly as can be estimated, are: acting, architecture, journalism, music, government employments, janitor service, agencies, bookkeeping, salesmanship, stenography, typewriting, telegraphy, telephone service, baking, pottery, confectionery making and selling, clock and watchmaking, book-binding and photography.

Many new vocations are being rather cautiously, but successfully, taken up by women. They are cutting and setting gems, hammering brass and silver, and working in gold. Bee-keeping, mushroom culture and fruit and poultry raising are profitably pursued by many women.

AROUND THE HOME HEARTH

A Talk About Millinery

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

WHEN the Princess Alexandra, radiant in youth and beauty, came from her native Denmark to marry the Prince of Wales it was said that the first offering made her by her future husband took the shape of millinery. In other words, fast following upon the heir to England's throne came several persons carrying boxes in which reposed bonnets appropriate for the wearing of the royal maid. One's heart warmed at once to the man who had the thoughtfulness thus to honor his lady love.

The milliner's art is extremely important in the eyes of women. The woman who can design and trim her own hats and bonnets is a fortunate being. For one thing, she is certain she can save money. Over and above what one pays for headgear, as to mere material and workmanship, there must be counted in what one pays for creative skill. The successful milliner is an artist, and she puts as much thought and talent and possibly genius into the hats she sells her customers as the painter puts in his pictures. If a woman is possessed of a suitable hat and of well-fitting shoes and gloves the rest of her costume is comparatively unimportant. No matter how beautiful a gown may be, no matter how modish a cloak or coat, the whole effect will be spoiled if on her head a woman wear a hat that is out of harmony with the remainder of her toilette.

One day in the autumn a milliner's shop was crowded by women, young and old, who eagerly selected something in her line. It was her opening day, and she displayed a great many remarkable hats. Most of them were large and overweighted with plumes, tinsel, flowers and foliage. A sweet-faced, elderly lady came in, wandered around, gazing hopelessly at the triumphs in the show-cases and on the tables. "What I want," she said, addressing one of the assistants, "is a simple black velvet bonnet, with satin bows and strings to tie under the chin; a bonnet suited to my age and general style." The young woman to whom she spoke in turn gazed hopelessly at her. "We have nothing like that to show you," she said, "but perhaps madame can make what you want, if you really wish to be out of the fashion."

A letter that came to the editor of this page the other day frankly stated a similar situation. The correspondent described herself as in her sixties, with white hair, rather thin on the top of her head, although capable of a graceful arrangement. The preposterous hats of the hour, she declared, made her look like a fright; but where was she to find what she longed for, a comfortable, close-fitting shape, neither too severe nor too ornamental, a hat which would stay on her head without the necessity of torturing hatpins? Where indeed? The lady who knows what she wants, and sees it in her mind's eye, must have the strength of her convictions and insist on their being respected when next she goes to her milliner.

For a long time thoughtful women have been persuaded that large and showy hats were not in good taste at church services. In places of amusement such hats are universally removed at present, but they are still worn in church, to the great discomfort of pastors and people. The minister from his pulpit surveys a congregation in which faces are obscured by headgear with wide brims, waving feathers and clustering flowers and fruit. But for the presence of men in the audience the preacher would find himself sorely at a loss for the responsive gaze that helps him in his work. As for the sitters in the pews, most of them subside into quiescent resignation before the service has proceeded very far. To see around and over the big hat in front of you is so manifest an impossibility that all you can do, fair reader, is to shut your eyes or fix them on your lap. Happy for you if your conscience does not prick you with the knowledge that your own hat is a trial to those behind you, just as that worn by your neighbor in front is a trial to you. One of these days there may come in a beneficent fashion of great simplicity in the raiment worn at church. We may help to bring in a reform, but to make it popular pretty girls and lovely young matrons must help along. It will never be successful if the only ones to push it are those who are elderly and, perhaps, a bit old-fashioned.

CLOSE OF A LONG DAY

The long day's work is over and done,
Rest is earned by the set of sun;
Lullaby, little one, sleep is sweet,
Mother enfolds you, her joy complete.
The kettle is singing and night falls fast,
Daddy is hurrying home at last.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—RIGHT OR WRONG? The following letter was received by Aunt Prudence the other day. She would like the sisters to speak in meeting and give their candid opinions. Is there anything essentially wrong in a bowling club on a week-day afternoon? If it is right for other people, is it wrong for church members to engage in this diversion? If so, why? Write to Aunt Prudence Payson, care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Here is our friend's letter: "I submit the enclosure, which was on our last Sunday's Church calendar. I do not agree with it, and look upon it as a disgrace: 'Women of the church who would enjoy the recreation of an afternoon bowling club, and will join, are requested to report their names to Mrs. Blank.'"

A Foolish Strike

A USEFUL and practical portion of the wo done in the Babies' Hospital, New York Cit has for some years past been the training nursery maids for employment in private familie Under the supervision of trained nurses these you women have been taught how to take excellent ca of infants, so that they have been regarded a sought for as mothers' helpers by families who cou afford to pay high wages for good service. N very long ago the entrance upon the scene of a ne sub-official nurse wrought havoc in the minds of t whole squad of young women who were learning be nursery maids. The new comer politely a dressed them as Miss Jennie, Miss Mary or Mi Kate, and was told by the superintendent that t prefix Miss was not in order, and that she mu speak only to the nurses by that designation. Love at First Sight

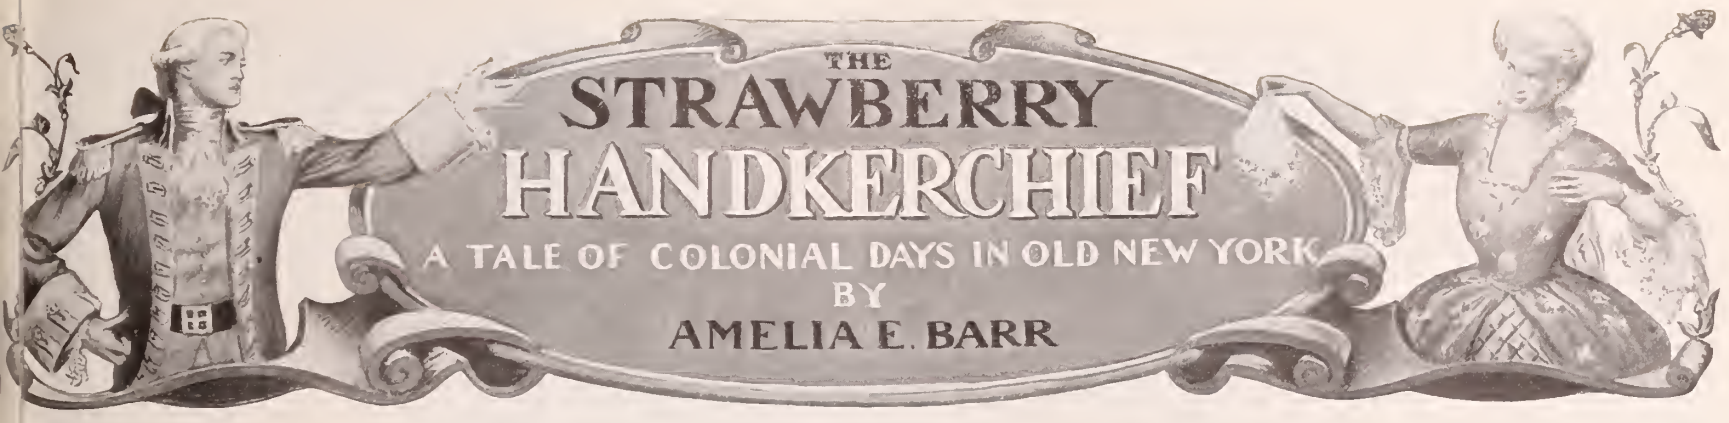
If the old married folk wh read this family page woul turn over a leaf in the past, an tell the rest of us their expe rience, at least half would hav to admit that with them in the days of youth it wa love at first sight. Love is not generally an affai of deliberation. Very slight causes determine it i the beginning. A young man steps from a railwa train, and sees a pretty girl in a white frock walkin up and down the platform. He does not know he name and has no ideas about her people, but ther she is, a beautiful being, who in a mysterious wa attracts him with magnetic force. A little later, b some happy coincidence, he meets and is presente to the radiant girl, and a few months later the tw are engaged.

In a certain instance, a man now gray-haired wa riding on an express train to keep a business ap pointment. Sitting in front of him was a girl wit books in her hand, evidently going home from schoo on Friday afternoon to stay until Monday. H watched the back of her head, and now and the caught a glimpse of her profile as she glanced fro the window. He said to himself, "There is the gir I would like for my wife." Providentially, as i seemed to him, she stepped from the train at his sta tion, and, lo! waiting to receive her was her brother who had been his classmate at college. In the nex vacation these two were married, and they have ha a long and happy life.

Love at first sight may be trusted to outlast th spurious article, dim with alloy or cheapened b mercenary considerations.



SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

For the benefit of our new subscribers we give a brief synopsis of the preceding chapters of Mrs. Amelia E. Barr's most interesting story: The scene is laid in New York, at the time of the Stamp Act, in 1765. Captain Jansen Van Vroom was a rich, retired sea captain, and lives with his wife Katrina in the Dutch house, by the North River. They have a daughter, Virginia, whom they wish to marry to a young sea captain, Batavius De Vries, for whom she has little liking. She is in love with Joris Artaveldt, a dashing young officer. Virginia's dearest friend is Lady Rose Harley. Captain Van Vroom is against the enforcement of the Stamp Act. Joris and the two girls dine at the captain's house, after which the two men leave. Van Vroom, the son of the house, appears and is introduced to Lady Rose. The next morning Van Vroom describes the conditions of New York to his son, and the things that were leading to the breaking point. Lady Rose becomes interested in Arent while he describes his voyages. Joris declares his love for Virginia, and she returns his affection. Arent, her brother, falls in love with Lady Rose, who gives Virginia a handkerchief embroidered with strawberries. She herself has made it. Virginia gives Joris the handkerchief. Politically, things grow worse. The people determine to resist the oppression of the British government, and wear only home-made clothes. Batavius De Vries suddenly returns, expecting to marry Virginia.

HARRY RUTGERS and Virginia were by this time at the side of Rose and Batavius. Batavius loved his adieus almost down to Rose's rose slippers. And Virginia noticed that one of them was suddenly flung backward with all the passion of an undeveloped kick. In fact, the action was so impressive that Harry Rutgers looked from Rose's foot to her face, and received in return a look from her wide open, angry eyes that fully explained the action.

"The compliment was not for me?" he asked.

"No," she answered sweetly; "it was for Captain De Vries! but alas! I fear he did not understand it"—and Batavius was so obtuse that all the way to Cherry Street he worried Harry to tell him what private signal of Lady Rose's favor he had missed.

And all that night Batavius could think of nothing else, though there would have been shadows in his thoughts and dreams if he could only have heard the following conversation between Virginia and Rose, as hand in hand they sauntered back to the house after the two men had departed.

"When did the creature get here, Virginia?"

"I found him sitting with father when I returned from the Waltons' at Midways'."

"If I prevent this marriage, will you do all I tell you?"

"Everything! Anything! Rose, can you really help me? I would rather die than marry him."

"You shall neither die nor marry him."

And so with their anger, their youth, and their hope they went to Virginia's room, to consult on Rose's ways and means. And Rose's decisiveness soon inspired confidence to Virginia; she began to be conscious of that sustaining something which whispers an assurance of "living happily ever after."

CHAPTER SIX

THE PLOT AGAINST BATAVIUS

ALL of passionate and bewildering feeling, Joris stumbled upon for every occasion he had tried for weeks to avoid—an hour suitable for the presentation of his hopes with regard to Virginia. In the first place, in his desire to dine at the Van Vrooms' he had forgotten the Artaveldt dinner hour, and his father's anger at any unpunctuality respecting it. And then as he neared his home, and did remember, a kind of obstinate defiance of all possible circumstances took possession of him. In a crisis so imperative, a certain reasonable impatience was natural, and he could have met his father's anger with dignified explanations if it had at once settled on Virginia; but passionate words about "cold soup," and "meat baked to a poultice," it was impossible, in his frame of mind, to justify.

"Virginia, my child, come here to me"

"I am quite indifferent to the soup," he said, with an air of contempt.

"I am not, and while you are in my house, remember, sir, that soup is served at half-past twelve."

"It seems the fact is important. I will try and remember it."

"Did you reach the fort with my letter to the Governor?"

"Yes, sir."

"What did he say?"

"Nothing at all, to me. He gave your letter to a secretary, and told him to read and report on it."

"But it was marked private."

"It was given to a confidential clerk, I suppose."

"You suppose! When I send you on an important message, I expect from you certain details as to how the message was received. The Governor must have looked pleased or displeased. His manner surely said something, if you had taken the trouble to observe it."

"The Governor's face was expressive of nothing but personal worry. I think it likely he regarded your letter as an addition to it."

"He asked after my health?"

"No, sir. He made no inquiries at all about you."

"And pray, then, what did he say to you?"

"He hardly noticed me."

"What was the matter with the man?"

"Bad temper, I dare say. It seems prevalent this morning."

"And I would like to know what made you send Corisande home with Dan. Dan is unfit to trust with any decent horse. Corisande had been ridden hard."

"I am sorry for that. I will attend to Dan in a short time. I trusted Corisande to him, because I saw Miss Van Vroom on Broadway, and I wished to walk home with her."

"I'll be bound you did, if only because you knew I would rather you walked with any other creature."

"I will trouble you, sir, to speak with respect of Miss Van Vroom. If her father permit me that honor, she has promised to be my wife."

"The old man will be only too glad to tag her on to a reputable family like the Artaveldts."

"I am quite sure he regards no family to be of greater importance than his own."

"Likely enough. He is an impudent old sea dog. Why should he object to you? Because you are an aristocrat—because you are my son—because you wear a sword——"

"Nonsense, sir! He has no particular objections to me, except that I interfere with plans he has already formed for his daughter."

"And pray who may the favored party be—a De Lancey—a Walton—an English officer—prospective lord, or earl, or——?"

"Sir, you are turning into ridicule interests dear as life to me."

"Nothing seems incredible in the matrimonial line. Can you tell me the name of your rival?"

"Sir, I wish I could do so without shame, for if a soldier desires a foeman worthy of his sword, a lover—if he must have a rival—wishes it to be a man worthy of the woman he loves, as well as of his own honor. I cannot believe Captain De Vries is either."

Justice Artaveldt laughed complacently as he asked, "Do you mean Captain Batavius De Vries?"

"Yes, sir."

"I know the man. Well, Joris, he is not a bad selection. Batavius is a fine sailor, a ready fighter, not to be beat at a trade, and, as he is never weary of telling us, a great admirer of morality and respectability—the latter qualities kept for use on shore. He was brought up by Van Vroom on his own ship, and he is now his partner in business. The man is fairly rich, and not very repulsive looking; most women would consider him eligible."

"Virginia detests the fellow, yet her father is determined to marry her to him, on or before the feast of Saint Nicholas."

"Will he succeed?"

"She loves me, and has a will, not theirs. She will persist in refusing him, and be encouraged in her determination by her friend, Lady Rose Harley."

"There was your chance, Joris. If you had only given me Lady Rose for a daughter, I should indeed have been a proud and happy father."

"Sir, Lady Rose has her own fancies and ideas. I do not come into them."

"And as to Batavius, he is well enough—bluff and sailorlike, he makes no pretense; he stands for what he is. Do you intend to marry Miss Van Vroom? Or do you intend to let this boaster set you aside, and carry off the girl in your sight?"

"I am going to marry Virginia if by any human means I can compass it. I have no fear that if I fail Batavius will succeed. Virginia is not a woman to be influenced by a creature like Batavius De Vries."

"I am glad to hear it. I should not like my son to be plucked by Batavius De Vries—far from it. I have plumed myself, Joris, no little on your courage and good fortune, and I tell you point blank, if you let De Vries carry off the bride you desire, I shall think next to nothing of you. Now I will speak about an affair of my own—within a few months the Widow Eastman will become Madame Artaveldt."

And without a moment's hesitation Joris answered with evident pleasure, "I am glad to hear it, sir."

"Had you chosen a wife agreeable to my wishes, I should not have married again."

"But why not marry, sir? You are yet in the prime of your life, and I must away into the world to seek my fortune. Why for any one's sake deprive yourself of a good wife and a happy home? I have often seen Mrs. Eastman; she is handsome, and I am sure she is good-natured and sweet-tempered. I wish you every happiness, father."

"I consider myself fortunate, Joris, and I am pleased with your sympathy. As to the future, be content to leave it for a time. The luck and love that is for you will come to you, and if Virginia Van Vroom is your fate, I do not feel inclined to hinder destiny. Whoever does so, turns his way into a cross.

So the threatened storm blew over, and left the heaven of his hopes so far clear-skyed that he knew that such ill fortune as he was destined to meet with regard to Virginia must now come either from her own timidity and scrupulous sense of her father's authority, or else from that authority itself. He was not inclined to seek further revelations that day.

This afternoon the two girls had indeed more than enough material for consideration. First of all, Rose desired Virginia's unqualified dismissal of De Vries' pretensions.

"Could you possibly, under any circumstances, be the wife of that man?" she asked. "Of course you could not."

"I have only to think of Joris, then I feel that I would rather die than be the wife of Batavius," was Virginia's answer.

"I believe Batavius is a privateer, or something of the kind," said Rose.

"Both Arent and Batavius might be called privateers."

"Virginia! How can you take the two names into your mouth at the same time? Arent is of the noblest race of men, and to couple his name with that of the other man shocks me."

"I never thought of it in that light. Arent has known—the other man—all his life."

"Poor Arent! How has he endured the trial? But it will soon be a thing past and forgotten."

"Oh, Rose, I see not!"

"Oh, Virginia! Upon my word, I see clearly. The dear King is in urgent need of good sailors and fighters, and it is only just Batavius should do him some service. He told me, over and over, he was for the King and the government, and hated the low fellows against them. I am going to make him do his duty."

"You are surely talking in your sleep, Rose."

"Do not dream of such an explanation. I am in square earnest. It confounds me that a creature so suitable for a man-of-war has not been carried off by the press-gang years ago. How in the name of wonder he has sneaked out of his duty so long is a marvel."

"But, Rose, is it his duty? Batavius is a Dutchman."

"Why, has he not told me he was a Dutchman, born in Amsterdam, about a thousand times? That does not alter the matter. Every man sailing under the English flag—and his ship flies it on occasions—owes the poor dear King his service. Batavius is going to be kidnaped. Oh, Virginia! the thought is exhilarating! He has gone his selfish way of 'round the world and home again' quite long enough; it is high time he made himself useful. And really, he is now specially needed in the Indian seas. He told me he knew every wind that blew on them. Yet he is idling at anchor in New York Bay, when the dear King is pushed to the wall for men that know about India and the Indian seas. I can tell you, my father will snap up Batavius as if he was a heavenly miracle for emergencies; nor will he mind, if he thinks the miracle came from quite an opposite direction. I verily believe no woman ever had a more befitting thought. I wonder myself what quarter it came from—but that is of no consequence; the great point is, that Batavius is going to be kidnaped."

There was a minute's silence, and then Virginia looked at her friend and smiled. "How are you going to manage it, Rose?" she asked.

"The kidnaping is positive, Virginia; the precise ways and means not yet decided on. But I shall go to my father to-morrow and arrange the smallest details. Colonel Gordon, with his wife and an escort of twenty men, leave New York for Boston in the morning. I am going with them."

"When will you get back?"

"As soon as I find proper escort."

"And during that time, what shall I do?"

"Be true to yourself and Joris."

"Suppose father should insist upon my marriage while you are away?"

"Poor dear! Give me a kiss, and then remember how many invincible weapons are in your possession. You can be sick, awfully sick. You can cry. You can coax, and smile, and beg for a little more time."

"You leave me a hard part to play. I could do it with your help; alone I fear for myself. I never could get the better of father—mother never could."

"Oh, indeed, you are mistaken. Your mother never fails to overcome. If you find you must have help, then trust to your mother. Captain Jan will be vanquished, as soon as you two sit down before him. All I ask is, that by any and all means you put off the wedding day until Christmas. I shall be in New York long before that date, but I like big margins, don't you?"

Virginia said "yes," but said it so mechanically that Rose looked at her sharply, and her next question was one with no second thought behind it.

"Are you in earnest about this matter, Virginia? For goodness sake, speak sincerely. For if it be in the power of man or woman to make you marry that creature, say so. You can easily go mad, and do it without my help."

"Dear Rose, if my heart you could see! But look now, this is the way—whatever you do, you do with rush and power, and you have no other thought. That is your nature. I come more slowly, but quite as surely, to the same point as you. All afternoon my heart has been growing hotter and hotter, yet a faintness and fear made me dumb, when I wished most of all to speak. But I would think very ill of myself if I was willing to let you go to Boston on my affairs, and was not sure, and doubly sure, that I wished it. Yes, indeed, most grateful am I to you. For I would die rather than deceive Joris, and be the wife of Batavius."

"Indeed, Virginia," replied Rose. the thing I am going to do may prove to be a great good fortune for him. A commission in his Majesty's service will be easily within his reach, for he will certainly be sent to Bengal."

"Why to Bengal?"

"To help Lord Clive—the little Great Mogul—compel the real Great Mogul to surrender the whole Empire of Bengal to England. England wants it, and Lord Clive has promised it to the dear King for his next birthday gift."

Read how two egg-raisers made $12,000 a year

TO men, women, and young people who want to make money at home, one of the most interesting of recent books is the Corning Egg-Book, which tells how the Cornings, on a patch of ground at Bound Brook, N. J., have built up in four years an egg-raising plant that earns a clear profit of over $12,000 a year. When they took up egg-raising, both were in poor health, and had no experience. Capital? Well, they began with one little pen of thirty hens! Now they have a large and valuable plant, and their 1,953 hens averaged a profit for last year of $6.41 each.

THE CORNING EGG-BOOK is valuable especially because it shows how ordinary, every-day people, without large capital or special training, but with "gumption" and industry, can make money in a business that can be carried on anywhere. Egg-raising is much simpler than poultry-raising. The hard work of killing, dressing, and marketing fowls is left out. The rest can be done by persons who are weak, old, or in poor health. The Corning methods have proved successful on both a small and a large scale. There is a ready market everywhere. Everybody wants fresh eggs. They are better food than meat, easier to cook, keep fresh longer, and make a greater variety of dishes. Your own family wants them. When high you can sell them, when low you can eat them. You can sell one dozen or one thousand dozen a week, and for READY MONEY; and if you only learn the Cornings' great secret of raising a regular supply for customers IN WINTER, you can get fancy prices.

Main laying-house 160 feet long, with 1,500 pullets always at work

This and all the secrets of actual success in egg-raising are told in the Corning Egg-Book. It tells where the Cornings find their market, why they raise only white-shelled, sterile eggs, how they keep hens laying regularly in winter, when they hatch chicks to lay best in December and January, how to mix the feed that produces most eggs, how to prevent losses, how they found the best breed for egg-producing, and how their whole system works to that one end — eggs, EGGS, EGGS. It gives photographs and complete working plans of their buildings, which can be made in sections, large or small, as needed.

The FARM JOURNAL publishers believe that thousands of Christian Herald readers will want to learn how two novices could in four years make egg-raising pay a profit of $12,000 a year; so they have decided to offer the Corning Egg-Book to subscribers to the FARM JOURNAL to increase its subscription list to ONE MILLION for next year

FARM JOURNAL is the standard farm and home paper of America: made for housekeepers, boys and girls, as well as fruit-growers, truckers, poultrymen, stock-men, dairymen, suburbanites and village people. It has always "stood up" for women, and is a great favorite with them. It is clean, brief, bright, "boiled down," intensely practical. "Cream, not skim-milk," is its motto. It is thirty-three years old, and known everywhere. "Judge Biggle" and "Peter Tumbledown" are characters better known to many than Hamlet or Micawber. Its poultry department is famous for the practical value of its contents. It is well printed and illustrated. It has now more than 650,000 subscribers, but won't be happy until it gets a million, which it expects in 1910. Over half a million of its subscribers pay five and even TEN years ahead, which shows rare confidence in a paper. It never prints a medical, fraudulent or trashy advertisement, and it is famous among high-class advertisers for its extraordinary "pulling" power.

TEMPERANCE AT HOME AND ABROAD

—IT IS ESTIMATED that during 1909 saloons have been closed throughout the country at the rate of forty per day; that forty-one million of our people are now living in prohibition territory, and that seventy per cent. of the area of the whole country has forbidden the license liquor traffic.

—DURING 1909 four States were added to the list of State-wide prohibition territory: Alabama, Mississippi, North Carolina and Tennessee. Florida, through its Legislature, voted to submit a prohibitory amendment to the people. Four other States adopted local option laws. Twenty-eight State Legislatures passed temperance measures of various sorts. Two hundred counties, in the aggregate, voted "dry" during the year, in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, Michigan, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, South Carolina, Texas, Minnesota, New Mexico, Nebraska, Colorado, Washington, Idaho, Utah, Wyoming, California and Missouri. These statistics are given by the American Issue.

—MANITOBA HAS JUST experienced a "dry" wave, which added eighteen counties to the seventy which had previously voted for the restriction of the liquor traffic.

—MARYLAND IS NOW intensely interested in the discussion of State-wide local option, embodied in a bill proposed by the Anti-Saloon League. This bill, if enacted, will not of itself close the saloon. It leaves the matter entirely to the people for their decision whether the saloon shall go or stay—a question which may be decided at any time, under a proper system of legislative machinery created by the bill. The bill contains adequate enforcement powers for the people to carry out their will; and it provides against bringing saloons into territory now free from them.

—MR. ANDREW CARNEGIE, in a recent address on temperance, said he once offered to give any of his men ten per cent. of their yearly earnings as a bonus on condition that they would give their word of honor that they had not taken a single drink of spirituous liquor during the year previous.

—THE COUNTESS OF CARLISLE is not only a lady of exalted rank and title in England, but she is probably the most prominent woman in the temperance ranks to-day. She is president of the British Woman's Temperance Association and has done much to enable it and the Women's Total Abstinence Union to work in harmony. She is also president of the World Women's Christian Temperance Union, and for several years has been president of the North of England Temperance League, besides being an active official of the United Kingdom Alliance. Her husband, the Earl of Carlisle, is also an active worker in the temperance cause; but in no sense as prominent as Lady Carlisle, who is an admirable speaker and a splendid executive.

—IN A RECENT ISSUE the London Times ("The Thunderer") had this remarkable passage: "Drinking baffles us, confounds us, shames us, and mocks us at every point. It outwits the teacher, the man of business, the patriot, and the legislator. Every other institution flounders in hopeless difficulties; the public-house holds its triumphant course."

—AT THE RECENT International Congress on Alcoholism, held in London, a German delegate made the statement that Emperor William had instituted a very notable temperance reform in the army. "Schnapps," or liquors of any sort, is no longer served to the troops, as formerly. The only liquor allowed besides tea, coffee, water or milk is lemon soda.

—THE FAMOUS old temperance story, Buy Your Own Cherries—in which the drinking workingman is represented as being rebuffed in those words by the saloonkeeper, when he asks for a handful from the tempting bunch of cherries the whisky seller has just purchased—has a companion piece in a story told by the Knoxville (Tenn.) Journal. A miner, who was a hard drinker, wasted so much of his wages on liquor that he could only afford to buy 15 cents' worth of liver on Saturday nights for the Sunday dinner. One Saturday night, while he was in the butcher shop, he saw this saloonkeeper throw down a five-dollar bill, which he recognized as having been passed by himself over the dealer's bar during the week. Of course, the saloonkeeper purchased the best—roast and trimmings—for his Sunday dinner. This set the miner to thinking, and he told his fellow-workers about it. They put their heads together, and concluded to do something. That something was that they would not touch a drop of liquor that week—and they didn't. So the next Saturday night some forty miners marched down to the butcher store, and bought out every roast in his place for their Sunday dinners. When the last miner was being served the saloonkeeper dropped in. "Well, John," he said to the butcher, "trade's awfully dull. I guess I'll have to take liver this time." So the butcher sold him the liver.

—TWO COUNTIES IN Illinois, one "wet," the other "dry," show the result of such conditions in a very instructive way: Alexander County, which is under the domination of the liquor traffic, has sixty-seven of its convicts in the State penitentiary; Edwards County, which is "dry," and has had no saloons for forty years, hasn't had a single person in the penitentiary in thirty years. Besides this, Edwards County is free from debt, and has a balance in the treasury of $15,000.

—READERS OF THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in districts where the temperance question is now being agitated are invited to send us the facts for publication.

THIS is one of Mr. Alexander's new songs, which has proved popular wherever it has been tested. In Australia, in England and in America it has captivated great audiences. It is a hymn of hope and faith. At the Northfield Bible Conference, last summer it was called for constantly. Mr. Harkness tells how he came to write it: "I was driving with a friend along the banks of a quiet river, on the outskirts of Philadelphia, on a delightful April afternoon. The sun was setting, and as we rode along I looked into the placid stream and saw reflected some magnificent shadow effects. I stopped my trank in the beautiful scene. The tints of the trees bursting forth with new foliage; the tints of gold and red and blue and green combined to make a picture of rare beauty. As I peered into the water, Ps. 23:4 came into my mind, 'Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil.' 'Yes,' I thought, 'there are shadows in the water; but for the Christian the shadows and the gloom are dispersed. In Him is no darkness at all.' On returning to my friend's home I said, 'I want to write a song which came to me while I was admiring the beautiful shadow in the river.' Asking the Holy Spirit for guidance, I wrote the words of the first two verses and the chorus, and also the music of the song."

The Mark That Means Seventy-Cent Yarn

When you buy Holeproof Hose—the genuine "Holeproof," bearing the mark below on the toe—you get hose that are knit with yarn that now costs us an average of 70 cents a pound—a three-ply, "soft-as-down, strong-as-silk-cord" yarn, knit into the hose by the "Holeproof" process.

We could save 30 cents a pound by using a two-ply yarn. We could knit in the common way. But that would mean simply to waste 32 years of hose-making experience.

It would be a death-blow to our pride—a pride that compels us to spend for inspection, now $33,000 a year. We incur this expense simply to know that each pair that's sent out is perfection. This is more for our sake than for yours—but you get the benefit.

These are things you don't see in the hose when you buy them. But they count in the wear at the end of six months.

To be sure you are getting them look for this mark. Other marks look something like it. So please memorize ours.

The genuine "Holeproof" is sold in your town. Dealers' names given on request.

Hartford Fire Insurance Co.

With the coming of 1910, THE HARTFORD FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY has rounded out a century of business history. That means something in the hazardous business of fire insurance, for four out of every five companies organized in this country have either failed or retired. It means unshaken stability. The smoke of every great American conflagration has darkened the sky over the Hartford's head. In San Francisco alone it paid ten millions. But emerging triumphant from the ordeals of 100 years, it enters its second century stronger than ever.

Unshaken stability for a century is no mean heritage, but age is venerable only when adorned with honor. Honor implies more than honesty. It is the quality which impels an institution to meet every obligation, not only with promptness and exactness, but with fairness and a spirit of equity. That is the Hartford's record in the past, its aim to-day and its ideal for the future. Its policies afford unsurpassed indemnity, and by co-operating with its patrons to lesson fire dangers, it offers continuous service. Its business, scattered among more than 15,000 communities throughout this great land, is the largest of any fire insurance company in America. Its agents are everywhere.

T. K. H., Banksville, Pa. In what part of the Bible are nether millstones, or hand-mills, mentioned? If I mistake not, the children of Israel, while in the wilderness, were forbidden to loan them.

The passage you want is in Deut. 24:6. Mention is also made of millstones in Job 41:24; Isa. 47:2; Jer. 25:10; Matt. 18:6; Rev. 18:21, 22.

B. L., Lancaster, Pa. What is the estimated deficiency in the British budget of Chancellor Lloyd-George?

The deficiency amounts to £18,000,000 sterling, equal to $90,000,000. The largest item in the budget is $43,000,000 for old-age pensions. With the exception of $15,000,000 for naval increase, the other items are comparatively small.

J. G., Belle River, Ill. Do you believe a fall from grace possible? I believe that if one once completely falls, he can never get back.

Yes, a fall from grace is certainly possible (See Gal. 5:4; II. Cor. 4:15; II. Cor. 12:9; Eph. 2:5, 7, 8, and Heb. 7:25). We have no reason, however, to conclude that because one falls he is irredeemably lost. God's mercy is boundless, and Jesus saves "to the uttermost." Besides, we must not judge others who may have fallen, but rather endeavor to help them back to the right path.

Miss E. A. G., Norwich, Vt. Please explain exactly the meaning of graft; Tammany; watered stock; red tape; gold brick; Dr. Eliot's so-called new religion.

Graft is the slang term used to express money or advantage gained through one's political position or connections. For instance, a political leader is a contractor, and gets in consequence rich city contracts, which otherwise might have gone to some one else. This is his "graft." Tammany Hall is an organization formed within the Democratic party of New York, for the purpose of controlling the New York City government. It does not include all Democrats by any means, for the present city government, while nearly entirely Democratic, is anti-Tammany, as is Mayor Gaynor, who was endorsed by Tammany. When a company increases its stock issues unduly, not illegally, for the purpose of putting the control of the company in the hands of certain individuals, or for the purpose of getting additional funds, the stock is said to be watered. Often watered stock is so increased as to seriously diminish the dividends the company can pay, as the more shares the less the amount that can be paid from the earnings on each. "Red tape" means the long, tedious and official way of doing business. Gold bricks were ordinary bricks, gold-plated, sold to unsuspecting persons. Dr. Eliot's religion has been fully discussed in previous issues of THE MAIL-BAG.

W. F. D., Columbus, O. Did "ecclesia" (translated in our Bibles "church") originally mean simply an assembly or congregation, without regard to any particular organization or building? If so, when was it first applied to the church, and by whom?

The meaning of the word, as it is used in the New Testament, would seem to be, the whole company of God's elect—those whom he has called to be his people under the new dispensation. It had no special reference to any particular assembly, congregation or organization, nor to the place where believers met. It came, however, to be afterward applied to particular societies in certain places. The first instance of such application is probably that by Luke, in Acts 2:47.

L. L. S., Granthurst, Ontario. When were church choirs first established? Is a choir of any benefit to a church?

Sacred song has formed an important part of worship from the very earliest times. There are many passages in the Bible which show that praise and thanksgiving, with voice and instrument, have always been regarded as acceptable. Even as early as the days of Exodus the Israelites employed voice and instrument in their songs of praise for deliverance. The Psalms (which are the old Jewish hymnal) give instructions which show that they were to be both sung and played, and the choirs of the temple in David's and Solomon's day (the sons of Asaph, etc.) were far larger and more varied than we moderns have any idea of. The early Christians, too, comforted themselves with psalms, hymns and spiritual songs (see Eph. 5:19). The twelve apostles sang a hymn (see Matt. 26:30). When choirs were first established is uncertain, but, as we have shown, it must have been very early in human history. A church without music would miss much; it would be dispirited and soulless. Next to prayer, sacred music gives more zest and energy to the heart and soul of the worshiper than anything else, except possibly a good Gospel sermon.

d. cD., Paterson, N. J. What is the average otal annual output, or circulation, of Bibles, in the English language, at the resent time?

A recent writer, who has gathered all the ate available statistics on this subject, says: E.n year there are printed 17,000,000 restant Bibles, Testaments, and portions Pms or separate Gospels) in more than 500 an ages or dialects. Of these Bibles 10,000,-00lre published by Bible societies, and sold elc cost. The remaining 7,000,000 are ried commercially. Of the 10,000,000 Bibles nc arts of Bibles printed and distributed by haty, almost 2,000,000 are issued by the .mican Bible Society, and over 7,000,000 more y hilar organizations in Great Britain."

Ir A. C. G., Jermyn, Pa. Is a promise nade to the Lord by a child not old enough o realize all that the promise involved inding upon him for life? Ought he to eep it, under any circumstances, or should e ask the Lord to forgive him for making uch a foolish promise, and go where duty eems to lead?

A promise made before the age of responsi-ili is to be regarded in a different light from omise made by one who is responsible. ertinly, if such a promise, made before the esnsible age, be a foolish one it would be a re hardship were the person to be held to it trily. On the other hand, if one be pledged r dicated in childhood by father or mother, uc pledge or dedication ought by all means o regarded as a sacred obligation, assuming nait is of the right character. In the case ued in your letter, however, the promise wch was never to leave a certain church nc always to worship in the same building) rou seem to have been both unwise and un-ecsary, and the one who gave it should be bsed from keeping it.

(. M. D., Hagerstown, Md. About what er cent. of the men of the Bread Line esire work rather than charity?

A of them will work, if they can get any inof work they can do, and will be glad of ne opportunity. Many are weakened from as g and exposure, and incapable of compet-ign heavy manual labor with workers who av been well fed and decently cared for.

V. W., Amarillo, Tex. Is there any cure or appendicitis without a surgical opera-ion? If so, by what method, or remedy, nd by whom and where?

Ts question has been submitted to Dr. Sam-el . Tracy, of New York, who replies as ollrs: "Appendicitis in different patients ch its symptoms in different degrees of se-erty, depending upon the process of inflam-mation. How it should be treated depends ntely on the severity and progress of the isse. A layman cannot judge for himself, er a competent physician must say if the ndividual case under consideration is a med-ca or a surgical one. In acute attacks of ppndicitis most physicians consider the case nc which should be operated upon when the ev or temperature, is over 100 degress and ne pulse 110 to 120 beats per minute; also, wh a microscopical examination shows the wh blood-cells are over 15,000 and the pol uclear percentage over 80. Many cases f ppendicitis can be treated successfully without operation. All depends on the type of case. Each case is a study for itself, and only an intelligent and experienced physician can arrive at a definite conclusion as to tbe proper treatment."

M. C. W., Madison, Ill. 1. Why was Judas chosen a disciple when his true character was known to Christ? 2. Did Edison ever invent anything by which a vein of water was certainly located, and its depth from the surface?

1. He was drawn, as others were, by the preaching of the Baptist, or by the gracious words of Jesus. His call as an apostle implies that he had previously declared himself a disciple. What ulterior motives may have been bidden behind his profession no man can tell, although it is clear from the Scripture record that Jesus knew his purpose and his beart from the beginning (see John 6:64, 70; John 12:4). The choice of Judas is explained by some theologians on the ground of God's absolute foreknowledge (see John 17:12). The presence of a false friend in the company of disciples may have been needed to complete the circle of Christ's trials and temptations. This view, it is claimed, is upheld by prophecy (see Zech. 11:12, 13, and Zech. 13:6). 2. We have never heard that Edison invented a water-finder.

One in Great Trouble. The fact that you are so deeply concerned about your sins is evidence that the Spirit is still striving with you. Let none persuade you that you have "sinned away your day of grace." Jesus saves to the uttermost. God's love and mercy are infinite, and we cannot set bounds to them. He is more ready to forgive than we are to ask.

All of our readers are not like-minded concerning vivisection. Dr. Sophy Ellen Page, of East Bethany, N. Y., writes us, giving a woman doctor's view of the question. She says: "I believe in the prevention of cruelty to animals, but I also believe in the prevention of cruelty to human beings. Do you know what has been gained to medical science by animal experimentation? What does it mean to you? Have the lives of your children been saved by the use of the antitoxin for diphtheria? No doubt some investigators are cruel; but look around you and see how few of the laity are not cruel. The other day one of my neighbors let a horse die from neglect and insufficient food. Little was thought about it, but had I used that horse in which to develop an antitoxin for pellagra, no doubt the neighborhood would have been hysterical and called it "scientific savagery." But could it have been done, what a boon to those suffering from that fatal disease! Who is to judge as to what is included in the term 'scientific research'? I cannot believe that there is any graduate physician carrying on any kind of animal experimentation except in the belief that in some way it will add to medical science. It may not at once, but sooner or later it must, because every bit of knowledge gained means a step ahead."

THE USELESSNESS OF WORRY*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

WE are still with Christ listening to his Sermon on the Mount. It took him only a brief hour, or less, to deliver that sermon; but it has taken mankind ages long to comprehend it.

A Lasting Sermon

"Is the sermon done?" asked a late comer to church of a woman whom he met at the church door. "The sermon is preached," she said, "but it's not done yet." Neither is the Sermon on the Mount "done," although it was preached nearly twenty centuries ago. We are studying that sermon in sections; the portion we are now to consider concerns our earthly goods. A little boy had heard read from the Bible the story of the rich man and Lazarus, the former living sumptuously every day, while Lazarus lay at his gate; but after death the rich man was in torments while Lazarus was in the bosom of the heavenly Father. The boy was asked the question, "Which would you rather be, the rich man or Lazarus?" He replied, "I would rather be a good rich man." Those who are born rich, or who have the desire to become rich, can learn much for their guidance from Jesus' Sermon on the Mount. And also, those who have been born poor, or have no desire for riches (if any such there be), will find much to make their condition seem desirable. In either case all depends on being a Christian. Mr. Gladstone of England once said: "The older I grow the more confirmed I am in my faith and religion. I have been in public life fifty-eight years, and forty-seven in the Cabinet of the British government, and during those forty-seven years I have been associated with sixty of the master minds of the country, and all but five of the sixty were Christians." Jesus said in his sermon, "The lamp of the body is the eye; if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light; but if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be darkness." It is the "mind's eye" to which he refers.

Some people will say, "It is no matter what a man thinks, so long as he lives right." This is absurd, for no one can live right unless he thinks right. To attempt to do so is like trying to ride two horses going in opposite directions. And so Jesus said, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." We have all seen hideous pictures of idols, if not idols themselves. Some of them are many-headed and many-handed. Mammon might be called a three-headed idol, the three heads springing from one neck, selfishness; the three heads being riches, fame and pleasure. Who could be a devotee of such a god and a worshiper of the true and living God? Jesus said, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." It is not a matter of choice whether or not we will do the two things at the same time, but to do it is a "cannot of character." We must "hold to the one and despise the other." We cannot go east and west at the same time. Dr. Parker asks, "Where, then, is the value of your criticism upon the rich Christian man? You have mockingly said, 'That man has served God and mammon to some purpose, for he has accumulated immense wealth.' When a man's heart burns with the love of God, if he be the owner of the Bank of England, he lifts up all his property to the high level which inspires him."

The Unchanging Law

A man cannot be a correct astronomer who puts the earth, instead of the sun, as the centre of the solar system. Imagine what would be the disorder in the heavens, in the whole planetary system, if it were possible to instal both the sun and the earth as the centre. The planets would go flying through space, and worlds would crash against each other and destruction would follow.

Something like this occurs in human lives when we try to serve God and mammon. There can be only one safe centre, and that is God. "A self-centred man or woman is a most dangerous element in society and in the whole body politic."

Some one has said: "We must learn to think of our heavenly Father's will as the one unchanging and unchangeable law of all things in heaven and on earth, in body as well as in spirit." And thus we shall be saved from being mammon-worshipers and money-grubbers.

A little boy was once told that God could do everything, whereupon he asked, "Can God make a rock so big that he can't lift it?" It was told the child that God cannot do what is wrong or foolish. God cannot be tempted of evil (Jas. 1:13). It is impossible for God to lie (Heb. 6:18). These are some of the "cannots" of God's character. In his Sermon on the Mount Jesus says, "A city set on an hill cannot be hid. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit." Put beside these sayings, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." He thus finds a spiritual law in the natural world. It is not an arbitrary enactment of his own, but an eternal law of the universe, that only a purified heart can permanently produce right life, and that such a heart must surely make itself known in words and deeds, as the tree must reveal its life by leaves and fruit.

Something About Worry

Jesus might have said, "Ye cannot serve God and worry." He did not put it quite that way, but "Be not anxious." He knew full well that a lot of his hearers were serving the god Worry. Some people believe everything the worry god tells them, though he is the most vicious, lying, unhappy god anybody could serve. He not only troubles people all through the day, but he keeps them awake at night to fear things that may never happen.

There are bitter herbs enough
In the brimming cup of to-day,
Without the sprig of rue
From to-morrow's unknown way.

Robert Burdette says, "There are two days about which no one should ever worry: yesterday and to-morrow." But why worry about the happenings of to-day?

A woman was walking along a road, carrying a heavy basket. She was overtaken by a gentleman riding in a buggy, who invited her to ride. She accepted the invitation, but still kept her basket on her arm. The gentleman said to her, "My good woman, your basket will ride just as well in the bottom of the carriage, and you would be much more comfortable." So it would, sir, thank you," said she; "I never thought of that," and she set the basket down in the bottom of the buggy and was greatly relieved. "That is what I do very often," said the gentleman. The woman looked surprised, and asked, "How is that, sir?" And the gentleman replied, "The Lord Jesus has taken me up in his chariot, and I rejoice to ride in it. But very often I carry a burden of care that would ride just as well if I put it down. If the Lord is willing to carry me, he is willing to carry my cares."

But it often happens that the cares which never come, but are dreaded, reheavier than those which come pc us. The story is told of a lady rhofor a time kept a list of troubles rhin she thought might come to her. ift a few months, she checked off all na had failed to materialize, and she ou l that nine-tenths of the things he ad feared had not happened. God ro ises to comfort us when real sor- ow come upon us, but he gives no ro ises for imaginary troubles.

Tat day, as Jesus was preaching is ermon on the Mount, he doubtless awanxious looks on many upturned ac ; some bore the traces of insuffi- er food, some had on ragged gar- ie s, some bore the marks of disease, nd Jesus knew they were troubled bo what they should eat, and what he should wear, and how long they hig t live. And so he tried to comfort he by bidding them to consider the ary little birds, who were never anx- u about where their next mouthful ra to come from. Also, he directed he to consider the beautiful gar- ie s of the flowers, the tiny, blood-red lic that even now dot the fields of alstine. There was not a dye in he me of Solomon that could produce o rgeous a color, not even for the oy garments. And then he uttered he gracious words, "Your heavenly 'a er knoweth that ye have need of ll hese things. Are ye not of much no value than the birds and the ra s (the lilies) of the field?" And he we seem to see him, by a signifi- ar gesture, wave off the demon of vo y as he raised his arm and, point- ng with the forefinger of his left hand o e tip of the middle finger of his ig , and moving it along the hand n arm, clear to the elbow, said, Wich of you, by being anxious, can d one cubit unto the measure of his if " (unto his stature).

"Ye cannot serve God and mammon"

'eek ye first the kingdom of God n his righteousness, and all these hi s shall be added unto you." 'h is the large promise Jesus made ha day; good not for that day only, u for all days; not for that people nl but for all people.

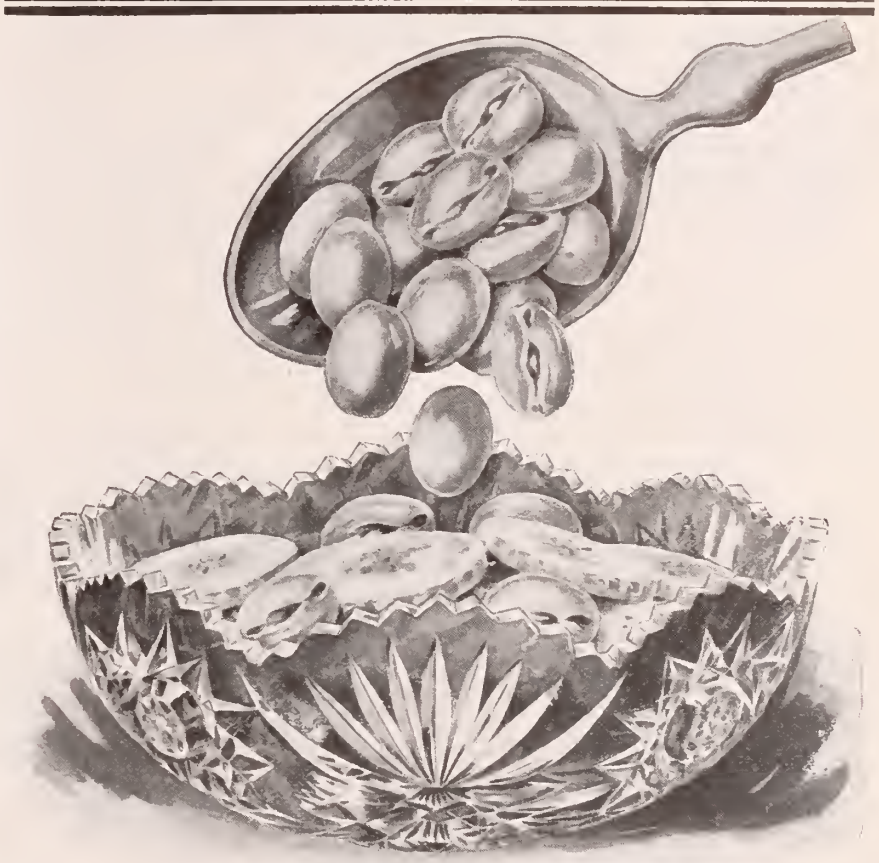
I t us not misunderstand this prom- se We are surely not to think that t i an easy way to obtain all we need o t and wear, and perhaps to attain gr t riches. If such a price had been u on prosperity, there would be a re small number of sincere Chris- ia s to be found anywhere in the vo d. But God does take care of his w King David said:

' have been young, and now am old; re have I not seen the righteous for- sa n, nor his seed begging bread" P 37:25). But he did not mean ha he had always seen the followers of God living in affluence. A story is told of two men who were riding together, one a farmer, who owned the wagon, and the other a newcomer. The newcomer spoke of a certain man in the village, and said: "He is a man of means, I hear." "Well, sir," replied the farmer, "he hasn't got much money, but he is mighty rich." "He has a great deal of land?" asked the newcomer. "No, sir, he hasn't got much land, neither; but still he is mighty rich." The farmer observed the puzzled look on the face of the newcomer, and added, "You see, he hasn't got much money, and he hasn't got much land, but still he is rich, because he never goes to bed owing anything to any man. He tells every man the truth, and does his duty by himself, his family and his neighbors; his word is as good as his bond, and every man, woman and child in the town looks up to him, and respects him. No, sir, he hasn't got much land, but still he is a mighty rich man, because he's got all he wants." That is the way of living Jesus must have meant when he told his hearers to seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness. In contrast put what a multi-millionaire, who lived in New York, said of himself: "I don't see what good it does me, all this money that you say is mine. I can't eat it, I can't spend it; in fact, I never saw it, and never had it in my hands for a moment. I dress no better than my private secretary, and cannot eat as much as my coachman. I live in a big servants' boarding house, am bothered to death by beggars, have dyspepsia, and most of my money is in the hands of others.

And so it must seem that a man rich in this world's goods is not, after all, to be much congratulated; certainly not, if he is not a seeker after righteousness.

The Right Kind of Investments

We begin to wonder if, after all, we have not quite mistaken the measure of a rich man! Can a person really be rich whose possessions are of such a nature that he may have to part with them at a moment's notice? That depends entirely upon whether he is making the right kind of investments. If he is "dealing in futures," according to the commercial idea, he cannot be too utterly condemned; but if he is dealing in futures according to the Christian idea, laying up for himself treasures in heaven, he must be commended. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord. . . . Their works do follow them" (Rev. 14:13). Thus it is that only what we give away we keep!



Puffed Wheat or Rice with Bananas

A Morning Treat

Puffed Wheat or Puffed Rice, when served alone, seems as good as anything can be.

But try serving Puffed Wheat in a dish of sliced bananas. Note how the flavors blend.

Crisp the wheat before serving, so you get all the nut-like taste. Then judge if any breakfast dish was ever more inviting

Whole Grains Made Wholly Digestible

Whole wheat and whole rice—the world's premier foods—are prepared in numerous ways.

But never before were they made so digestible as they are in this process—Prof. Anderson's process—where the results are accomplished by internal explosion.

Here the starch granules are literally blasted to pieces, so the digestive juices act instantly. In any other process—cooking, baking or toasting—only part of the granules are broken.

That's why Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice seem so hearty. That's why they're so wholesome. You are getting the whole of their food value.

Puffed Wheat, 10c
Puffed Rice, 15c Except in Extreme West

These are the foods shot from guns. The whole wheat or rice kernels are put into great guns made of bronze and steel, and sealed. Then the guns are revolved for 60 minutes in a heat of 550 degrees.

The heat turns the moisture in the grain to steam, and develops enormous pressure. Suddenly the guns are unsealed—the steam explodes—and every starch granule is blasted into a myriad particles.

The grains are thus expanded to eight times natural size. Yet the coats are unbroken, the shapes are unaltered The gigantic grains are made porous and crisp and digestible

Be Well Without Drugs

I will help you to

Vibrant Health and Rested Nerves

After my university course, I concluded I could be of greater help to my sex by assisting Nature to regain and retain the strength of every vital organ, by bringing to it a good circulation of pure blood; by strengthening the nerves, and by teaching deep breathing, than I could by correcting bodily ailments with medicine. It is to my thorough knowledge of anatomy, physiology and health principles that I attribute my marvelous success. I have helped over 44,000 women. I can help you to

Arise To Your Best

I have given to each woman that satisfaction with self which comes through the knowledge that she is developing that sweet, personal loveliness which health and a wholesome, graceful body gives---a cultured, self-reliant woman with a definite purpose, which makes her the greatest help to family and friends. She is a Better Wife, a Rested Mother, a Sweeter Sweetheart. She adds to the beauty of the world, thus contributing to its refinement, cultivation and education. I can help you to make every vital organ and nerve do efficient work, thus clearing the complexion and correcting such ailments as

Constipation	Irritability	Indigestion
Weak Nerves	Colds	Dullness
Rheumatism	Nervousness	Weaknesses
Sleeplessness	Torpid Liver	Catarrh

This work is done by following simple directions a few minutes each day in the privacy of your own room. In delicate cases I co-operate with the physician. I regard medicine for reduction as dangerous, and bandages and reducing appliances do not remove the cause, hence only give temporary results. In correcting faulty habits of digestion and assimilation, I build up the strength while I am reducing, or developing you.

This is practical common sense.

Think it over and write me to-day for particulars.

A Good Figure is Economy and Means More Than a Pretty Face

I have corrected thousands of figures as illustrated below. Style is in the figure and poise and not in the gown. The gown in Fig. 1 cost $250; the one in Fig. 2 cost $6.00. Fig. 2 is the same woman as Fig. 1, developed and in correct poise. Figs. 3, 4, 5 and 6 show actual photographs of pupils before taking up my work. (They have given me permission to use them). They all stand, now, as correctly and appear as well as Fig. 2.

Too Fleshy or Too Thin

When every organ of the body is doing efficient work, there will be no superfluous flesh and no bony, angular bodies. I have reduced thousands of women 80 lbs., and have built up thousands of others 25 lbs. What I have done for others I can do for you. It would do your heart good to read the daily reports from my pupils. Here are some of them:

"My weight has increased 30 lbs." "My kidneys are much better." "My eyes are much stronger and I have taken off my glasses." "I have not had a sign of indigestion or gall stones since I began with you." "I weigh 83 lbs. less, and have gained wonderfully in strength. I never get out of breath, the rheumatic twinges have all gone, and I look and feel 15 years younger." "I am delighted with the effect upon my catarrh." "Just think of it! To be relieved from constipation. Entirely free after having it for 30 years!" "Have grown from a nervous wreck into a state of steady, quiet nerves." "The relief from backache alone is worth many times the money, and I haven't had a cold since I began with you."

Write me to-day, telling your faults of health and figure. If I cannot help you, I will tell you so. I study your case just as a physician, giving you the individual treatment which your case demands. I never violate a pupil's confidence. I will send you an instructive booklet, showing correct lines of a woman's figure in standing and walking, FREE.

THE STRAWBERRY HANDKERCHIEF

"Do you believe the King will get it? I don't."

"I'll stake my word on it."

"Rose, I am now satisfied. Tell me what to do, and I will obey you in all things."

"There is only one thing positive, and beyond all shadow of doubt; that is, the secrecy to be preserved about the fate of Batavius. Neither by word, look, nor sign of any kind must our interference be revealed."

"I promise you perfect silence."

"I vow you the same promise. Now I shall go and see Mrs. Gordon, and I may drink tea with her; for Batavius might return, and I do not feel myself able to endure a second sight of him."

Batavius did not return. He found excellent business to be done with Colonel Rutgers, and was busy on The Arms of Stuyvesant all through the small hours of the night. Captain Van Vroom was evidently aware of the detention and its cause, for his words of approval were neither few nor cold:

"You cannot show me another man so clever in business as our Batavius," he said proudly to Madame.

"Ah, then, Jan!" she answered, "he comes to us always with his best side foremost."

"It is an undoubted matter. All the best business men speak of Batavius."

"And some speak ill, quietly. I have heard words not respectable—words like contraband—and——"

"Katrina, a close mouth is a wise mouth," interrupted Jan. "There is so much not to say, Katrina. And here is our Virginia, silent as a little mouse. What is thy wish, dear one? Another waffle?"

"I care not for them, father."

"Why art thou so still and cross? Will nothing please thee?"

"I am tired. My heart aches. I want to sleep. Perhaps I might have a good dream."

"A good dream! Why talk of that, when so many real good things are at thy hands and feet—money, jewels, fine clothing——"

"I cannot wear fine clothing."

"Not just now, but in a short time it may be worn, and thy good mother, and father, and brother, and thy friend Lady Rose, thy sweetheart, and the handsome house he is going to give thee. Both thy hands are full of blessings. So ungrateful art thou! It is very wicked to be so ungrateful! Smile, and talk to thy father and mother, and be glad in thy heart."

Madame looked at her daughter and moved the tea things about like a woman who wishes them to speak for her, but she did not continue the reproach in words. She saw it was useless. The air of revolt in Virginia's face was too positive, and an unhappy silence settled over the tea table.

Madame soon felt and resented the deadening influence. She rose in angry haste, saying, "Good food eaten in bad temper makes both body and soul sick"; and as she put away the silver and sweetmeats she accompanied her work with a little broken monologue about "sulky people" and "girls who did not know when they were well off." At length she went to the slave quarter, and left the father and daughter together—Jan nervous, and Virginia standing at the bow window apparently gazing into the garden, but really trying to persuade herself to go with a kiss to her father and make all right between them.

Ere she could do so he called her.

"Virginia, my little child, come here to me." Then she went hastily, and drew a stool to his side, and sat down at his knee, and looked into his face with a smile just dashed with tears.

"What is it?" he asked. "What troubles thee? Speak to me the truth. Eh? Tell thy father, who loves thee so much."

Bonds and the Cost of Living

ONE of the most absorbing questions of the day is the increasing cost of living. Everywhere people are asking, and newspapers are discussing, the reason why prices are so much higher than they were ten years ago. Leading economists are offering reasons, and even Congress is contemplating a minute investigation, of the subject. Every possible cause has been cited—monopolies, trusts, speculation, corruption, excessive freight rates, rising land values, labor unions, increase in city populations, greed of middlemen, demand greater than supply, extravagance, etc. Wall Street declares it is due to the depreciation of gold, and backs its opinion with imposing arrays of statistics, which seem to show that the general price level has kept accurate pace with the increasing supply of this most precious metal.

From the standpoint of the investor, this is the most significant reason of all those yet advanced, for the opinion of Wall Street is bound to affect its securities, and so it may be well to examine into it and see if a financial moral may be deduced for the benefit of the country at large. Here are the statistics, according to Mr. Byron W. Holt, that well-known Wall Street economist, who cited them for the consideration of the American Association for the Advancement of Science at its recent annual meeting:

The World's Supply of Gold

"From 1850 to 1856 the world's visible supply of gold increased from about $1,606,400,000 to $2,109,640,000, or 31 per cent., while average prices rose about 27 per cent. in this country. From 1870 to 1890 the supply of gold rose less than an average of 1½ per cent., and prices declined 22 per cent. Since 1896 the world's supply of gold has increased from $4,359,600,000 to about $7,500,000,000, or 72 per cent. And during this same period prices have risen about 60 per cent. in this country and 40 per cent. in England.

"The cost of producing gold, as compared with the cost of producing other commodities, will determine ultimately whether more gold or more of other commodities will, relatively, be produced. If, as seems probable, the net profits of producing gold, in most of the world's important gold mines, are now from two to five times the net profits of producing most other commodities, we should naturally expect the production of gold to outrun the production of other commodities. This it has been doing for two decades, and this it will probably continue to do for two more decades."

Depreciation of Gold

Now it is a self-evident truth that the greater the supply of a substance in the world the cheaper must it inevitably become, and this is as true of gold as it is of any other commodity, only, inasmuch as gold is the unit of monetary value we notice the effect of the condition in the decreasing purchasing power of each dollar. In effect, it is not that the necessities of life have become any more valuable (we produce and eat proportionately the same amount of food, buy and wear the same amount of clothes), but gold has become so plentiful, and therefore so cheap, that its old-time popular unit of value, one dollar, will not purchase nearly as much of these necessities as it would formerly.

If it were possible to increase the size of the unit of value, in other words, to issue a gold dollar the weight of which would bear a definite relation to the amount of gold in the world, the effect might be to bring about an equilibrium that would result in a steadying of the general price movement. But there are difficulties in the way of this that make it improbable of realization.

As Wall Street views it the gradual depreciation of gold will result in a certain increase in the interest rate, because as prices rise there occur unusual opportunities for the investment of money. This has already begun to affect the bond market in a peculiar manner. One of the biggest bond houses in New York has lately been doing a large business in relieving its clients of their long-term bonds, gilt-edged securities that have fifty or more years to run and yielding very small interest, and procuring for them instead municipal, irrigation, mortgage, or other short-term bonds yielding larger rates of interest.

This is one of the most significant features of the situation. Not so many years ago, the wise investor sought out the long-term railroad and other bonds, securities with a century, if possible, to run, absolutely safe as far as the underlying mortgage was concerned, and for that very reason yielding very small interest. But nowadays necessity for earning more money, due to the increasing cost of living, is compelling these investors to take up the shorter term bonds, yielding a rate of interest more in keeping with the inflation of the modern price movement.

Short-Term Bonds

The shorter-term bonds have also the advantage of not tying up money for a period of time long enough to result in probable depreciation. In England, for instance, there are bonds which are practically perpetual, in that they have several hundred years to run. They are a popular form of "permanent" investment for widows and orphans. Doubtless they are safe and the interest sure, but if the monetary unit keeps on depreciating, the value of a fixed interest, in the course of long time, will be greatly lessened and the bonds themselves will be worth far below par. The philosophy of the situation, then, is to buy only short-term bonds, securities with not more than twenty-five years to run, and as much less than this as possible, and yielding as high an interest rate as is compatible with safety. There are many of these secured by mortgages on real estate, municipalities and irrigation projects (the latter covered by the provisions of the Carey Act), and if the reliabiiity of the firm offering such securities for sale be unquestioned there can be but little risk in taking them up.

In acquiring such short-term securities the investor will have the opportunity, in a comparatively few years, of turning his money over and reinvesting it at whatever may then be the prevailing rate either as to value of principal or size of interest. As to the latter its maximum is, of course, determined by statute, but even here the personal judgment of the investor or the general integrity of the house selling the securities must be the determining factor. The mere legality of a rate does not necessarily assure its safety.

Outcome Good for Investor

Whatever the outcome of this present movement, it would seem to tend to the benefit of the investor, for to quote Dr. John Franklin Crowell, another keen investigator of social and economic conditions, "the borrowers of capital are also realizing that, from the investors' standpoint, additional inducement must be offered. We are undoubtedly entering upon a field of greatly enhanced demand for free capital. As that demand asserts itself, not only will the rates of interest have to be increased, but the older and more highly capitalized projects will have to make concessions in order to secure the additions to capital which they themselves may require to meet the enlarging burdens of business."

Municipal Irrigation Bonds

FIRST OFFERING:

We have just purchased a new Municipal Irrigation Loan and would call your attention to the following particularly strong points:

1—Municipal Irrigation District Improvement has added 125,000 acres to the famous Greeley District. This old district produces and ships more field products than any other equal acreage in the world. The principal development of the old district has been during the last 10 years.

2—Water supply. This district stands pre-eminent among the large irrigation enterprises of the country, inasmuch as its water supply is a constant and direct flow. This fact, combined with an ample reservoir capacity, makes a never-failing and continuous water supply.

3—These are municipal bonds, payable from a direct tax voted by the people, assessed by the County Assessor, and collected by the County Treasurer.

Savings Banks and Life Insurance Companies are buying these securities, as well as other institutions and private investors.

EDGAR BRIGGS—
Twenty Years At It

Briggs did it! BRIGGS, the Thomas A. Edison of the Poultry World—the man who wrote "Profits in Poultry Keeping Solved," a treatise so tremendously practical and original that four editions have already had to be printed. Briggs actually made each hen pay him more per month than her purchase price.

A. D. HOSTERMAN
Publisher of Poultry Success

No branch of mercantile business or farming pays the profit that poultry raising guarantees, under the Briggs system. Thousands who have never made a specialty of poultry raising are now starting in, most of them on a small scale—with only a few dollars invested and a chicken yard perhaps smaller than your garden. Under the Briggs system their flocks multiply and increase rapidly at trifling cost. Meanwhile the market price of poultry goes up, up, up!

BRIGGS' "POULTRY SILO"

Briggs' "Poultry Silo" discovery alone is now saving poultrymen thousands of dollars daily. He feeds his hens "poultry ensilage"—a processed feed that makes them lay regularly, even in the winter when egg prices are "out of sight." Briggs makes this "Ensilage" at not to exceed 15 cents a bushel.

Briggs' Poultry Book gives Secrets on Early Hatching—Raising Late Hatched Chickens—Insuring a Large Egg Yield Every Month—Erecting a Poultry Plant—Diagrams—Pictures—Running an Incubator—Brooders—Feeding—Breeding—and literally HUNDREDS of other secrets.

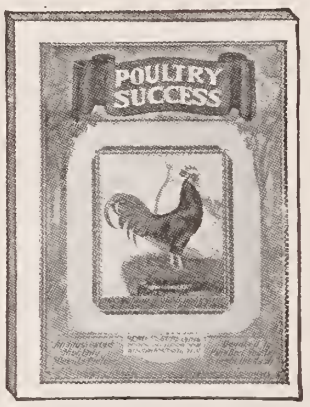
The Briggs book, "Profits In Poultry Keeping Solved," has been purchased by "POULTRY SUCCESS," the representative American poultry journal. Briggs' future discoveries, made at his big Experimental Poultry and Egg farm, will be announced exclusively by "POULTRY SUCCESS."

FEAST OF FACTS—$1.00

As an advertising feature, "POULTRY SUCCESS" now offers, for a short time, the complete new and Fourth Edition of the Briggs System and Secrets and a full year's subscription to "POULTRY SUCCESS" for a dollar. This is the greatest offer ever made to poultry raisers, comprising:

1. "Profits in Poultry Keeping Solved"—100 pages, fully illustrated and nicely bound. Worth $5, $10 or $100, according as one makes use of it.
2. The new section, "Secrets in Poultry Culture," a startling, useful Brief, by Briggs.
3. "POULTRY SUCCESS"—The leading monthly poultry publication. 21st year; 64 to 164 pages. If you have never read it, borrow a copy from your neighbor, or write for sample copies. 50 cts. per year.

All for only $1.00.



Decide now to make biggest poultry profits. Adopt the Briggs' System and "POULTRY SUCCESS" as your guide. You need only a few dollars—a small yard. You can make it pay big from the start. Send postal for free samples of Poultry Literature, or better still, order direct from this advertisement, enclosing $1.00.

"The Kuhn California Project" will irrigate 250,000 acres in the famous Sacramento Valley. The land is ready! The water is ready! Are you ready? The sale of these rich valley lands has just begun in tracts of 10 to 80 acres. Small payment down; then ten annual payments.

The valley is garden soil, 50 feet deep, yielding immense crops of fruit, alfalfa, sugar beets and all the famous products of California. Mature orange groves on these lands have yielded as high as $1,000 per acre. If you are going to have a farm, why not have the best? The Kuhns are always looking for the best, and their experts tell them in this enterprise they have found it. They are putting millions of dollars into improvements to make it still better. GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

The New York Tombs

THE New York Tombs, Inside and Out, is a neat octavo volume of over 300 pages, copiously illustrated, the author being the Rev. John Josiah Munro, who spent nearly ten years in the Tombs Prison as a chaplain. He writes, therefore, from a long and varied experience with the criminal class. His book contains much that is of an interesting, not to say thrilling, character. He met with from fifteen to twenty-five thousand prisoners a year, and had opportunity to converse with young men and women beginners in crime, as well as with the hardened offenders. Some of the incidents are extremely touching, and the lights and shadows of a life of crime are depicted by a skilful and sympathetic hand. The author shows that prison administration needs reforming almost as much as the unfortunate inmates themselves need it. The thirty-eight chapters of his book treat of a great variety of subjects, including How Criminals Are Made, Modern Temptations to Crime, Schools of Crime, Famous Tombs Prisoners, Strong Drink and Crime, The New York Police and the "Third Degree," Poverty and Crime, Crime Among Women, How Young Men Get Into Prison, The Cost of Crime, etc. The book has been favorably commented upon by the secular and religious press, as well as by many ministers and lawyers. The Rev. Dr. MacArthur, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, New York City, writes: "You have made a valuable contribution to penology and practical Christianity. Your wide and varied experience gave you a fitness for the discussion of the whole subject. I trust it may have a wide circulation. Your book is an important element of preparation for the work of citizen, lawyer, physician and clergyman." Copies may be secured, postpaid, by sending check or postoffice money order for $1.15 to author at 186 Ainslie Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

We Want All Hard-of-Hearing People to Use this New Hearing Device for 30 Days on Home Trial

The Electrophone in use—almost INVISIBLE

Electricity has worked an additional wonder, and by its use in this new device it is now possible for the deafest person to hear distinctly all the sounds audible to those who possess their normal faculties of hearing.

We have perfected this instrument to such n degree that we now unhesitatingly send it to any afflicted person on thirty days' trial, that they may know by actual experience that by its aid the deafest person can hear—can converse as those who are not afflicted converse and can enjoy the concert and distinctly hear public speakers.

The Electrophone is so sensitive that the faintest sound is multiplied many times in volume, so that the ear is made to receive and properly record every sound made.

The Electrophone is much more sensitive and multiplies the sound a great deal more than any other device. A small transmitter gathers the sound and transmits it with greatly increased volume to the ear, an electric device accomplishing this result.

Most people who use the Electrophone tell us it has greatly improved their hearing and that it stopped their head noises, and in many instances the normal hearing has been entirely restored. Just as the arms or legs shrivel and become useless through the lack of exercise, the ear also fails through disuse. The Electrophone exercises the parts of the ear, each to play its proper function, with the result the hearing is greatly improved.

Thousands of these instruments are in use. No treatment of any kind is taken in connection with their use.

If you are deaf or hard of hearing, don't fail to send name and address on this coupon. We will send you a list of many responsible people who are using the Electrophone. You are to try the Stolz Electrophone thirty days before you decide to keep it.

True Dignity of Human Life*

EVER since those early days when the first slaves were brought into America the question of the welfare of our colored population has been a pressing one for this nation. It was the cause of our Civil War. It cost us untold blood, treasure and anguish. In the Reconstruction days, it was a main obstacle to the restoration of peace and harmony. Even yet it is a living and ever-present stumbling-block. It will not down. It confronts us in a number of States of the Union. Sorrow and bitterness attend upon it, and must for many years to come.

Our chief hope for the peaceful settlement of this burning and insistent question lies in the uplifting of the country, of its white and black people alike, by slow evangelization and education. There is no way around it. The mountain is there. But one path is open for its conquest, and that requires money and helpers. We must all join to provide them. It is impossible that any intelligent person can fail to perceive the need, and only the hopelessly hard-hearted and unpatriotic can fail to respond to it.

Let us not undervalue the school for our dark-skinned fellow-countrymen; by all means let them be taught all that our white children are taught. Especially let them be taught the wonderful art of earning a living. Along with arithmetic and geography should be taught, to white and black alike, the use of tools—the value of the expert hand—the mastery of at least one branch of manual labor, by which regular wages may be earned upon leaving school.

But the education of hand and brain is a small thing beside that heart-culture which is the main element in good citizenship and true manliness.

"Evangelism," said President Mackenzie, of Hartford, "is the only true regenerator of the human heart, the only cleanser of the nation."

Really evangelize the people and the work of civilization will be easy. Teach every man to love his neighbor as himself, and the lesson of good citizenship has been learned. Plant a living church in every community, and the millennium will be hastened.

Here, again, is a chance to practise Christian unity. No matter what your denomination may be, remember that it makes little difference when you are reaching out to save some perishing souls. It is true that the work of the Methodists and Baptists has seemed to be the most successful among the colored people; but all of the other evangelical denominations are helping, and we must all uphold each other's hands in the great work.

Dr. Wilbur Chapman tells of preaching in one of the Southern States, when a colored member of one particular sect came up to him and said that he wished to join another one, but he could not, "because of the doctrine." The doctrine of election especially bothered him; and while they were talking about it an old colored man came up, and injected the following lucid explanation into the conversation: "Why, brethren," he said, "that is the very easiest thing in the church. You see it's dis away: the votin' is goin' on all the time, and God, he's votin' for you, and the devil he's votin' agin you; and whichever way you vote, that is the way the election goes."

Lay all but the essentials of the Christian faith aside when you are working in the mission fields. Everything else is simply an encumbrance. The Gospel of Jesus is sufficient for all needs.

Texts That Help*

THE texts that appeal to others may not exactly appeal to you. Nobody knows the wants of your own heart as you do. Study the Word until you find just what you need. Remember that it is always there. Look for it.

Few realize their dependence upon God until trouble overtakes them. When all goes well with us it is astonishing how self-sufficient we feel. We think we are so exceedingly clever that we need no help. This is why young people are usually less likely to be humble than are their elders. The young, perhaps, have not stood in the furnace of affliction, finding all human and earthly props of no avail. They have not been taught their own helplessness, and that God alone gives peace and rest. The true Christian has learned by bitter experience the sweet truth that nothing matters so long as he has his Bible and can lift up his heart in prayer.

Are you discouraged? Does your work seem hopelessly poor? Read the 111th and 112th Psalms. Have you blundered, and committed some fault which others find it hard to condone? Read Lam. 3:22-33, and Ps. 37:5, 6. Are you lonely? Do you feel neglected, forsaken? Read Ps. 27, Josh. 1:5, 6, and Is. 41:10, 13. Do you feel your faith wavering? Read the wonderful eleventh chapter of Hebrews. Are you in danger through fire or flood or famine? Read the 91st Psalm. Like apples of gold in baskets of silver, the fit word is waiting for you somewhere between the Bible covers.

In Scott's wonderful story of The Monastery occur these powerful lines upon the Bible, which are all too unfamiliar to our young people:

> Within this awful volume lies
> The mystery of mysteries!
> Happiest they of human race
> To whom our God has granted grace
> To read, to fear, to hope, to pray,
> To lift the latch, and force the way;
> And better had they ne'er been born
> Who read to doubt, or read to scorn.

It is a theory of one of the great religious bodies that the study of the Scriptures is likely to be harmful to the lay mind. Its mysteries are too deep to be understood, it is said, and bewilderment and doubt are likely to replace clear faith. Even the priesthood in that great division of the Christian army are not well furnished with the Scripture armor. Their loss is incalculable, for the history of civilization proves conclusively that it is in the countries where the Bible is most widely distributed and read that intelligence and morality are at flood-tide.

Before the art of printing was introduced there was a pitiable lack of Bible knowledge. It is related of a certain doctor of the Sorbonne, in Paris, that he was amazed at the reasoning of the reformers. "They constantly quote the New Testament," he said, "but I was fifty years old before I knew anything of the New Testament." And Albert, Archbishop of Mentz, in the year 1530, accidentally meeting with a Bible, opened it, and, having read some pages, observed, "Indeed, I do not know what book this is, but this I see, that everything in it is against us."

Let us count it one of our highest privileges that we may have the Bible ever beside us, and may learn by heart its blessed promises, "pure words, as silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times." "More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold. Moreover, by them is thy servant warned, and in keeping of them there is great reward."

TELLING GRANDPA THE SECRET

One Dollar

Puts the "RICHMOND" Suction Cleaner in Your Home

YESTERDAY, Electric Vacuum Cleaners cost $65.00 to $250.00—a big outlay in Cash. To-day, a single ONE DOLLAR BILL will put a guaranteed "RICHMOND" Suction Cleaner in your home.

And the balance of its purchase price you pay for out of the actual month-to-month money which it saves you.

You are paying the price of a suction cleaner now, anyway—whether you have one or not.

You are paying its price out in house-cleaning alone—for a "RICHMOND" makes house-cleaning needless.

You are paying its price out many times over, in the hard labor of sweeping and dusting, which the "RICHMOND" makes unnecessary.

You are paying it out, again and again, in the damage which dust does to your furniture, to your hangings, to your clothing, to YOU.

You are paying the price of a suction cleaner, when a single Dollar would save the waste!

Weighs Two Pounds Less than a Common Carpet Sweeper

You see here an electric suction cleaner which weighs but ten pounds—instead of sixty.

All that any vacuum cleaner or suction cleaner can do, this one does. And it does, besides, some things which no other machine can do.

You can, for example, use this "RICHMOND" Suction Cleaner either with or without the hose.

For use with the hose, we furnish, without extra cost, special tools for cleaning portieres, walls, books, bedding, upholstery, clothing, hats.

For Hair Drying

Also a special attachment for hair drying, pillow renovating, etc.

The hose attachment slides on and off with the same ease that your foot slides into an easy slipper.

Slip on the hose and the ten-pound "RICHMOND" rivals any machine—no matter how much it weighs or how much it costs.

Slip off the hose, and you have a floor machine which weighs two pounds less than an ordinary carpet sweeper—and glides over the floor more lightly, more easily than even the lightest carpet sweeper.

Advantage of Light Weight

The "RICHMOND" Suction Cleaner enables you, now for the first time, to clean by electricity without lugging a sixty to eighty pound machine from room to room—up stairs and down.

It represents as great an advance over heavyweight vacuum cleaners as these cleaners represented over brooms and carpet sweepers.

But light weight and easy operation are but two of the Richmond's exclusive superiorities. There are many more.

There is, for example, the vibrating brush, which you find in no other machine.

This brush fits in the floor nozzle of the "RICHMOND". It vibrates at the rate of 10,000 times a minute. Not a rotary motion to wear out the carpet, but a light up-and-down tapping motion.

Taps Out the Dirt

The vibrating brush taps the caked dirt out of the carpets and fabrics which no other machine could clean.

The brush slips in or out, without the use of tools. It is but the work of ten seconds to take it out or put it in.

And without the brush the "RICHMOND" will do all that any machine—vacuum or suction—can possibly do without working injury to even the finest fabric.

A Comparative Test

In a comparative test with the leading $125.00 machines, Messers Duncan & Lyndon, Consulting Engineers, 56 Pine Street, New York, recently found and reported:

First—that the heavy-weight machines consumed two and one-half times the electrical current which the "RICHMOND" requires.

Second—that the "RICHMOND" is more durable, being all metal, without valves, and with only two wearing surfaces.

Third—that the ten-pound "RICHMOND" equalled the $125.00 machines in efficiency—in every test.

Fourth—that the "RICHMOND" is the simplest known construction, easy to operate and easy to lubricate, there being but two oil holes, both readily accessible from the outside of the machine; while to lubricate the $125.00 machines requires 9 dismantling operations, with the consequent danger of replacing parts in the wrong position.

Simplest Construction

We could multiply comparisons endlessly.

But without saying more, you can judge our confidence in the "RICHMOND" by the fact that we not only cover it with the broadest possible guarantee, but we give you besides, if you choose, a full year to pay for it. Or, if you prefer to pay cash in advance, taking the discount, we give you a ten-day trial at our risk.

Absolutely Guaranteed

Your guarantee is the absolute guarantee of a $3,000,000 company, with four large plants and branches and agencies in all cities.

It is a guarantee by the manufacturers of "RICHMOND" Boilers, "RICHMOND" Radiators, "RICHMOND" Bath-tubs, Lavatories, Sinks, "RICHMOND" Soap-savers.

Surely you must see that the "RICHMOND" Suction Cleaner must give perfect service, perfect satisfaction, day after day, month after month, else we could not afford this offer. Snip out the coupon and send to-day to

Points About the "RICHMOND"

Costs less per month for electricity than the average family spends for brooms.

After a year of consistent use you couldn't find a thimbleful of dirt in a 14-room house if you took all the carpets up.

No more Spring or Fall "house-cleanings"—no more "sweeping days"—no more "dusty Fridays."

Its total cost is less than the cost of one single annual house-cleaning—to say nothing of saving the wear and tear which house-cleaning brings to furniture.

Cleans furniture, walls, upholstery, bedding, clothing, decorations, bookshelves, tile floors, hardwood floors, nooks and crannies, as well as making old carpets look like new.

Equally valuable in homes, offices, stores, hotels, hospitals, libraries, schools, churches, theatres, public buildings.

Without any change or adjustment, uses either direct or alternating current; universal motor of our own construction.

Thirty feet of electrical cord, with connecting socket, comes with the Cleaner—everything ready to start—any one can do it.

Handsome in appearance—all exposed parts are highly polished—operates with easy gliding motion, no pressure required.

Absolutely guaranteed for one year, and without abuse should last as long as a watch.

One Dollar brings it—you pay the balance out of the month-to-month money it saves you.

Many have written us that they were so delighted with the "RICHMOND" that they desired to own it outright at once.

Many have written us that they were so delighted with the "RICHMOND" that they desired to give it to someone as a present.

And for these reasons they asked us as a favor, if we would not make them a special cash price, so that they could own the machine outright, and present it to the friend whom they had in mind.

To meet these conditions, we make a special cash price of $65, and if after 10 days' use the "RICHMOND" isn't found to be all we claim, return the machine at our expense and we will return your money.

But please remember that we have such great confidence in the "RICHMOND" that we prefer to allow it to pay for itself through the work it saves you, at the rate of $6.00 per month!

The "RICHMOND" Suction Cleaner will pay its own cost and Earn You a Profit besides, from the actual month-to-month money it saves.

THE GREAT ANTI-MEAT STRIKE

THIS country, with its many industries and as many rival interests, has had a great number of widely extended strikes in its history, but he present great meat strike is the first of its kind America. Several years ago there was a similar e in Germany, which was successful in bringing out a reduction of prices. The whole question of gh prices of foodstuffs is more or less involved in is remarkable popular revolt against the ris- g prices of meat, so that every citizen, be he rich poor, is interested in the outcome.

It is needless to recapitulate here e various stages in the gradual rise the price of meat during the last vo years. Every housewife has had e facts brought home to her every me she has added up the family bills has gone personally to do the mar- eting. Many who have hitherto re- arded meat once a day as an absolute ecessity have been made vegetarians most against their will. The man ho lives in the suburbs, and can boast fifty or a hundred hens, is regarded ith envy by his city friends, who ust buy meat at high prices or buy gs for 60 cents a dozen, as they re now doing in New York City.

At last some one proposed, a few eeks ago, that people everywhere join a "meat strike" for 30 days or more, nd refuse to buy meat of any kind, nd see if the old economic law of sup- y and demand was still in working der or was merely cumbering the ages of the school text-books. Ac- rding to that old law, anything for hich there is little or no demand ust necessarily decrease in price, un- ss, to put in a modern amendment, it put in cold storage until the present t wave of indignation passes.

The idea was at first greeted with rision in some places, but one group ter another pledged themselves to stain from all kinds of meat for the irty days, live on cereals and eggs if ey could get them, and put the mat- r to a real test. At any rate, they ould save some money by the process, r though cereals might rise in price e increase probably in a short time would not be proportion to the recent rise in meat.

The plan proved surprisingly popular, and spread om city to city, gaining recruits from all classes society, from the man who worked in the street the merchant at the head of a large store.

There was one watcher of the trend of events get- ng ready to act in no uncertain way. That was e United States Government. It put all of the legal machinery of the Attorney-General's Department into operation to get all the whys and wherefores of the soaring prices of beef, pork and mutton, and see if it were the results of any illegal combine formed by the great packing companies and any attempt to raise the prices by agreement in restraint of trade. In addition to the action being taken by Attorney-General Wickersham, the Secretary of Agriculture is investigating the entire subject of the rise in price in all foodstuffs, and when his report is made it should be of interest to every American, for it involves not only our own personal comfort and physical welfare, but also that of the generations which are to come.

Sheep on a Colorado Ranch Ready for Shipment to Chicago

The centre of the government's legal investigation will be the headquarters of the world's meat packing business at Chicago. Mr. E. W. Sims, United States District Attorney at Chicago, has immediate charge of the investigation, though he is in constant communication with Attorney-General Wickersham in Washington. So urgent is the matter considered that it is said that the energetic district attorney uses the telephone to the capital more often than the more tardy postal service. Mr. Sims has three able lawyers to assist him in preparing the evidence which is to be presented to the grand jury. Probably various members of the large packing firms will be summoned to appear before the grand jury to tell what they can of the rise in prices during the last few months. Subordinate officials who are active in the packing concerns will also be asked to give information, as it is the intention of the government to probe the question to the bottom.

The government feels that the people are behind it in the matter, and that it will get much information from volunteers which will prove invaluable.

The firms of Chicago—the Swifts, the Morrises and the Armours—are said to control the prices of meat in all the great cities east of the Mississippi, in which they have big distributing depots. These firms do a business of from five hundred to six hundred millions a year. The government wishes to find out how much the prices may have been raised by the packers and how much by the natural increase in the cost of raising cattle on the western ranges. That the cost is greater than it was a decade ago no one will deny. The farmer who raises cattle for the packing houses has to pay more for his hay and grain, and must sell at a higher price to the yards.

An Anti-High Food Trust League has been organized, with a membership of thirty thousand to date, and including people from all over the country. Its founders hope soon to have over a million names on its lists. Whenever the price of any article of diet becomes excessive the members will stop buying it, even if they personally can afford it, and thus help force the price down. They have recently planned for a big conference in Washington. In the Capital City the meat boycott found strong support among the government employees; in the printing office over five hundred pledged themselves to support the "meat strike," and the anti-high-price movement spread to other departments. Papers were sent around for signatures, and there were few who made any objections to signing them.

A SERMON BY

Rev. A. B. Simpson, D.D.*

THE QUEST OF WISDOM

TEXT—Job 28 : 12

"Where shall wisdom be found?"

THE twenty-eighth chapter of Job is a realistic description of the process of mining, that would almost seem to have been taken from an actual scene of modern engineering. "Surely there is a vein for the silver, and a place for gold where they fine it. Iron is taken out of the earth, and brass is molten out of the stone." This, a general description of the process of mining and smelting silver, gold, iron and copper. Then he describes the deep shaft down into the depths of darkness and the discovery of sapphires and the rich golden ore. How fine is this picture of the miner's shaft: "There is a path which no fowl knoweth, and which the vulture's eye hath not seen; the lion's whelps have not trodden it, nor the fierce lion passed by it." Then he describes this path and how the engineer digs it through the mighty mountains. "He putteth forth his hand upon the rock; he overturneth the mountains by the roots. He cutteth out rivers among the rocks; and his eye seeth every precious thing. He bindeth the floods from overflowing; and the thing that is hid bringeth he forth to light." Where shall we find a more perfect picture of the tremendous operations of blasting and hydraulic engineering?

The Hiding-place of Wisdom

It is thus that man pushes through every barrier and obstruction of nature to find the precious treasures of material wealth. And then the patriarch pauses and asks, "Where shall wisdom be found?" This greater treasure of which he says, "It cannot be gotten for gold, neither shall silver be weighed for the price thereof. It cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir, with the precious onyx, or the sapphire. The gold and the crystal cannot equal it; and the exchange of it shall not be for jewels of fine gold. No mention shall be made of coral, or of pearls; for the price of wisdom is above rubies."

"Whence, then, cometh wisdom?" again the patriarch asks, "and where is the place of understanding?"

First, he tells us that it is not to be found through natural channels. "It is hid from the eyes of earth," he declares, "and kept close from the fowls of the air." The birds have their own instincts and know when to fly to Southern lands from approaching winter, and when to return to their nests in our Northern gardens and orchards. Even their knowledge of the poisoned berry is wiser than that of the scientist. But instinct is not heavenly wisdom.

Nay, "it is hid from the eyes of all living." Man knows much of material things, and culture and experience have taught him how to rend the rocks and blast the mountains and cut a passage for the treasures of earth's bosom and bring them forth in all their marvelous adaptation of modern art and industry. And man knows something of the secrets of nature, and the conditions of physical, intellectual and social culture and enjoyment. He has wrung from the sin-cursed earth many a beautiful flower, many a fruitful field and many a precious treasure and princely fortune. And man's intellect and achievements have not been trifling. Mathematics, poetry, science, art, music, architecture, commerce, all these have added to his pleasures, his treasures and his pride. But this is not wisdom. The dark blot of poverty, sickness, vice and sin has proved too well that humanity has failed to meet the real problems of life. And the cemeteries, of which all our landscape gardening and beautiful art and architecture have tried to make the fairest scenes on earth, point with cruel irony to the grave and the dark unknown that lies beyond as the last chapter here, at least in the history of every human being, and echo back the question, "Where shall wisdom be found?" Where shall we find a solution for the real problems of human life, and a remedy for sorrow, sin and death? Nothing else than this can be worthy of the name of wisdom. All the other achievements of humanity are but attempts to blind us to our misery and decorate the portals of that dark grave into which we are surely passing, one by one. Wisdom must be something which can meet the mighty problem of humanity and solve it. And "where shall wisdom be found?"

Centuries ago Greek philosophy tried to answer, but only made the darkness denser and the problem more hopeless. Buddhism, the light of Asia, came with its soft dreams of Nirvana and Rest, but Buddhism is only the stupidity of the silly ostrich, which hides its head behind a leaf and refuses to see the danger that is pursuing it. Atheism and agnosticism tried to answer the questions that will not be silenced. "There is nothing beyond this life. There is no future. Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die," it cried. But the human heart has not been able to accept these blind negations, for something deep as our instinctive consciousness tells us:

> It is not all of life to live,
> Nor all of death to die.

The Philosophy of the Foolish

Christian Science has played with the problem, but it is the silliest play that any set of children ever tried to find amusement in, for it coolly assumes that life is all a farce and nothing is real, neither life nor death, nor even the Christian Scientist herself. And now we have the latest foolishness, psychology, the science of the soul. If metaphysics were rightly described by a shrewd critic as a Scotch mist, surely psychology, as it is being taught to-day, is a modern mirage and not unlikely to become a deadly marsh and mudhole. Just listen to a few of the phrases which this modern science has already coined: The Subliminal Self, the Thingness of Thought, the Great Within, which, of course, means the big I, that is, the fool himself. This is a small specimen of the latest evolution of wisdom, and a little of it will go a great way. Surely God was right when he said, "Esteeming themselves wise they become fools." Well may we cry in dismay at all this multiplication of foolishness, "Where shall wisdom be found?" Listen: "God understandeth the way thereof, and he knoweth the place thereof. For he looketh to the ends of the earth, and seeth under the whole heaven; to make the weight for the winds; and he weigheth the waters by measure. When he made a decree for the rain, and a way for the lightning of the thunder; then did he see it, and declare it; he prepared it, yea, and searched it out. And unto man he said, Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil is understanding."

The Chief Business of Life

I. The first thing that overwhelmingly impresses us as we read this majestic paragraph is that the wisdom here introduced grapples at once with the great problem that lies at the root of all man's destinies and wrongs, the problem of sin and righteousness and our right relations with our God. "The fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil, that is understanding." The fatal fault with all other manifestations of human wisdom was that they ignored or evaded the real trouble, while heavenly wisdom diagnoses the disease and then prescribes the efficient remedy. The radical and fatal trouble with humanity is that it is wrong with God and wrong at heart. It has departed from its divine centre and it has wandered into darkness, sin, sorrow, death, and eternal despair. And before it can ever be made happy it must be made right.

That is the supreme quality of the revelation of Jesus Christ. He might have unfolded to us all the secrets of the stars and all the mysteries of the universe, but he lived thirty-three years among us, and left but one message, How to get right with God, how to be saved from sin. The one crying evil that he was fighting at every turn was sin, and ruin as its unavoidable result, and the very name which he assumed was significant of the one business of his life: "Thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins."

Everything, therefore, in the Gospel of Jesus Christ bears directly upon the great question of sin and its remedy. And if we are wise, as our Master was, the great business of our life will be determined with relation to this question. We shall feel that we have not rightly measured the meaning of life and the responsibility of our individual existence, unless we have lived, like him, to remedy the one great wrong of our race and to save our fellow-mortals from their sins.

And how wisely did the Master work for this great end! Was there ever such a problem pr sented even to the mind of God? Once before, s had entered the universe, and it was dealt wi effectively, but fatally to those that sinned. By o swift act of justice they were hurled to the abyss darkness and expelled from the universe whi they had defiled and threatened with dissolutio Once again the problem arose, and this time with profounder complication; not merely, how can s be expelled and punished, but how can sin be e pelled and punished and yet the sinner saved? Ho man's wisdom would have dealt with this proble appears in man's various religious beliefs and rem dies for sin. The prophet Micah expresses some them when he represents a heathen king as askin "Wherewith shall I come before the Lord, and bo before the high God? Shall I come before hi with burnt offerings, with calves of a year ol Will the Lord be pleased with thousands of ram or with ten thousands of rivers of oil? Shall I gi my firstborn for my transgression, the fruit of m body for the sin of my soul?" How cruel and va the sacrifices, the penances, the self-inflicted tortu of superstition, and how simple and sublime t remedy of heavenly wisdom when the world by w dom knew not God! Well may the apostle as "Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is t disputer of this world? Hath not God made fooli the wisdom of the wise, for after that in the wisdo of God the world knew not God, it pleased him by t foolishness of preaching to save them that belie

Christ, the Wisdom of God

"The Jews require a sign, and the Greeks se after wisdom; but we preach Christ crucified, un the Jews a stumbling-block and to the Greek fo ishness; but unto them that are called, both Jews a Greeks, Christ the power of God and Christ the w dom of God." It will take all eternity to reveal t wisdom of God displayed in the plan of redemptio What obstacles had to be overcome, what proble had to be solved, what contradictions had to be ha monized! God's justice must be vindicated, a Christ's atonement has vindicated it as the sinne suffering through eternal ages could never ha done. The broken law had to be honored, a Christ's obedience and death have magnified the l and made it honorable. God's holiness had to recognized, and how it shines in the life and dea of Jesus Christ! Perfect obedience was demand from humanity, and Christ, the Head of humani has given an obedience that no other man could ev have rendered. God's threatenings against sin h to be fulfilled to the letter, and every one of th has been met and satisfied in the death of Jes Christ in the name of sinful men. An example sin had to be made before the universe, and whe can there ever be so fearful an example as the cr of Calvary? All this had to be made available f sinful men, and how perfectly this is done, first Christ's assuming our nature in the incarnati and secondly, by our resuming his nature in rege eration. The sinner had no strength to exercise, righteousness to give; and the Gospel required no but to take him as he is and save him by gra alone. The sinner had no power to repent and l lieve, but even this is provided by the grace of t Holy Spirit in his work of convicting and conve ing. So fallen was humanity that it was witho strength, and the very least attempt at righteo ness was beyond its power. But this wondrous pl of grace asks nothing of the sinner, but simply receive and believe, and this is an act within t power of the most helpless and lost, and even t God himself bestows. We ask the universe in va "Where shall wisdom be found" to solve the probl of deliverance from sin, and heaven answers, "Chr is the wisdom of God."

The Needs of the Race Supplied

But not only does heavenly wisdom provide our salvation, but for all the deeper needs of fallen race. It was not enough to turn away fr men the judgment of heaven and close the gates future punishment by the death of Jesus. But the wreck of humanity there was a fallen nature be restored and a soul to be transformed to puri happiness and glory. Here again all man's ex dients fail, all man's moralities are inadequa ow shall we make bad men good? Pu sh them, says the disciplinarian. Bu punishment can only destroy, it ca ot create. Give him good ex- am les, says the moralist. But good ex- mples can give no power to imitate wh t is beyond our reach. Give him go teaching and legislation, cries the legist. But all this can only reach the head, and it is the heart of humanity hat is wrong. All this the Gospe of Jesus Christ provides. It puts int the human heart a new nature, it giv s him the love of righteousness, it em owers him with the indwelling of the Holy Ghost and the very life of Je s Christ himself within, and it giv s to him the love of Christ and the ho e of eternal reward as the all-in piring sanctions and inspirations of a ly life. The ethics of the Gospel is much above all human moralities as s authority is above humanity itself "Where shall wisdom be found" to ake men holy? we ask again in va of the sages and ages, and again the answer comes, "Of him are ye in Ch st Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, even righteousness, and sa tification, and redemption."

. If divine wisdom has thus pla ned and wrought for human salva n, surely our highest wisdom is to espond to the call of heavenly wisdo and to receive that which at such tremendous cost God has had for the su reme end of fallen human nature. Therefore the Scriptures speak of being "wise unto salvation." Until we ha e thus become wise everything else in ur life is utter folly. This is the on thing that is indispensable, and the ma or woman who presumes to go th ugh life without making sure of th great salvation is indeed a fool. ut not only is heavenly wisdom Go s provision for our eternal future; it the secret of holy character and rig t living in this present world. Th re is a secret in everything, and th e is no secret more precious than th secret of the Lord, which enables us to conquer ourselves and to live ab ve the power of sin. How helpless th struggles of honest hearts to live up ven to their own highest ideals by m e self-effort! And how marvelous th secret which heavenly wisdom re- ves to the humble and believing he t, and which in a moment lifts us ab ve the law of sin and death and gi s us a charmed life through the in velling Christ, the power of the Ho y Ghost and that new law of gravita n which the apostle calls "the law of he spirit of life in Christ Jesus." H e we learned this secret and found th wisdom?

ot only so, there is a secret in every su essful life and every victorious Christian life. There is in the revelatio of Jesus Christ a divine provision fo all the practical needs even of our se lar life. There is guidance in perpl ity. There is efficiency for duty. Th re is that quickening of mind and m ory, that gift of wise utterance an that efficiency of mind and touch wh ch heavenly wisdom promises for th life that now is as well as that wh ch is to come. He that taught the wi -hearted men and women of ancie t Israel to design and build their be tiful tabernacle can teach us still al e need to know for even the most co monplace duties of life. Listen to wi t heavenly wisdom says of herself: , Wisdom, dwell with prudence, and fi out knowledge of witty inventions. Co nsel is mine and sound wisdom. I am understanding and have strength. By me kings reign and princes decree ju ice. I lead in the way of righteo sness, in the midst of the paths of ju gment."

[I. But the supreme business of w dom is not merely to claim its blessin s for ourselves, but to be workers to ther with God in bringing many to eceive it and saving them from sin

ST. VALENTINE AND LINCOLN

By Rev. J. M. FARRAR, D.D.*

SUNDAY, February 13, is a fortunate day. It is bounded on the west by Lincoln's birthday and on the east by St. Valentine's Day. Why did the early church call Valentine a saint? Because he had a great heart of love. An old Roman legend tells us that Valentine was arrested and thrown into prison because he became a Christian. Asterius, who was a very wise man, tried to win Valentine back to heathenism. This wise man had a beautiful daughter, who was blind. Valentine, in the name of Christ, opened her eyes. Her father, Asterius, then believed in Valentine's Christianity, and he and all his family were baptized. But loving all who were in sorrow did not save him from being murdered. The date of his death, February 14, is celebrated in memory of his love, and is known as St. Valentine's Day. If you watch your big brother and sister on February 14, you may see them sending valentines—love-letters hid in pictures.

WE celebrate February 12 as Lincoln's Day. He had a great heart of love. "He loved our nation." Ask father to tell you how much Lincoln loved our nation. Ask him the price Lincoln paid for his love of our nation. But like St. Valentine, Lincoln's great heart of love did not save him. On April 14, 1865, he, like St. Valentine, passed into the larger world of love.

HOW big was Lincoln? More than six feet in height. But that is not his full measure. He had a great brain. But you cannot find how big he was by measuring his brain. To know how big he was, how really great he was, you will have to get the measure of his heart. Last week I was talking to a man who writes and publishes books. He told me that the real greatness of a man was not found by the measure of his head, but by the measure of his heart.

THE time will come when we will not speak of how tall a junior is, or how much a junior weighs, but will ask the size of his or her heart. All juniors have big and good hearts. But sometimes, as the junior grows, the heart begins to shrink. There are many things that make the heart smaller and smaller as juniors grow larger and larger. When Lincoln was a boy, he avoided things that would have wrinkled his heart. His mother taught him never to swear, never to drink liquor, and never to lie. Do I hear you say, "I know how telling lies and swearing will shrink the heart. But I do not think that drinking liquor would make the heart any smaller." I am glad to hear you say that you "think." Your pastor wants you to think, and if he is wrong in what he thinks he wants you to set him right. Here are two questions for your "think": Would Lincoln's heart have grown if he had become a drunkard? Will strong drink take love out of the heart? I will leave you to think, and to decide on these two questions. Send to me this week your vote. Vote yes or no on each of the questions. As a reward for sending me your vote, I will tell you a story.

A MINISTER, who was my neighbor in the City of Brotherly Love, told the following story to a large congregation: "We had in the city of Philadelphia a man who was secretary and treasurer in one of our great institutions. I suppose there is scarcely a man in this city that would equal him as a financier. Certainly not one who could surpass him. He was a college graduate, and had all the fine instincts of a gentleman. But strong drink claimed him as its victim. He drank and drank until he had to move into a very humble home. When his baby died, they had no clothing to put on him to make ready for the grave. We furnished the clothes. Somebody said that, although the child's feet were hidden by the dress, they were bare, and that we should put shoes on the little feet. I got some white kid shoes and slipped them on the little icy feet. An old-time friend said, 'Get the father and bring him in. Maybe if he sees the baby, he will come back to himself.' We brought the father in. He stood beside the little casket for a moment, and looked down into the sweet face of his child. Then he began to shake with great emotion. The tears just ran down his cheeks. The friends said to us, 'Leave him alone,' and we went out and left him alone with his child. He ran his fingers over the folds of the little white dress and underneath, and took off from those icy feet the white kid shoes and crammed them in his pocket. When I took his baby to the grave the father was insensible from drink. He had pawned the little white kid shoes and had spent the money in a saloon. This man's heart had at one time been as large and as full of love as your father's heart." Please do not forget to send me your vote.

to righteousness and God. If the business of Christ was to teach men the fear of the Lord and help them to depart from evil, surely our supreme business is to bring our fellow-men into right relations with God and teach them the secret of life's greatest problem, salvation from the power of evil. Therefore we are told, "He that winneth souls is wise," and again, "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever." The last clause in this splendid passage is the interpretation of the first in the appearance of the Hebrew parallelism which constitutes the same utterance in different parallel sentences. The wise are they that turn many to righteousness.

For us, the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil, that is understanding. That is what many long to know, and we have the knowledge of that. All else is waste, and all else is lost.

But for this we need the same heavenly secret that we have already spoken of in all other departments of our life. There is a secret in soul-winning as well as in salvation, sanctification and right decision. And that secret is nothing less than the Christ himself. Thus he who so marvelously loved souls died to save our fallen race. He who knew so well how to draw the heart of the woman of Samaria to see her need, her sin and her Saviour, he still comes in us to draw the hearts of men to the revelation of their sin and the love of God. And only as his Spirit possesses and controls us shall we be wise to win souls to Christ. As Anna Shipton expresses it in her beautiful dream: she found herself swimming in a great sea toward the gates of glory, and drawing drowning men and women behind her by bleeding heartstrings of her own soul, which had become unloosed and fastened round them as cables of help and deliverance. So we can only bring men to Christ as we grapple them with our life and grip them with our heart, and draw them by the power of the Christ within us. Shall we go forth, then, to translate the splendid imagery of our text into living action and loving ministry? Shall we be among the wise, who shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and them that turn many to righteousness, who shall shine as the stars forever and ever?

Gospel Spreading in Bulgaria

MR. VULCO SHOPOFF, ex-Mayor of Philippopolis, Bulgaria, who was the Commissioner in charge of the Bulgarian exhibit at the World's Fair in Chicago, and who is president of the National Bulgarian Temperance Society of Men, writes of the First General Congress of all Evangelical Workers, of every name, throughout Bulgaria. Methodists and Baptists, as well as Congregationalists connected with the mission of the American Board, were present. Mr. Shopoff writes: "I was surprised to see the list of more than eighty-five places where evangelical services are maintained every Sabbath. The delegates numbered upward of one hundred, all men of firm Christian belief. The Congress had for its object to work out a general plan, or constitution, for all evangelical bodies in Bulgaria, by which their official standing in the kingdom will be regulated. The spirit of brotherly love pervaded all discussions, and all sessions were well attended. Upward of five hundred hearers were deeply interested in watching the doings of the Congress. There is a growing interest in the Gospel throughout the country."

THE RURAL HOMES OF ENGLAND

By Rev. WILBUR F. CRAFTS, Ph.D.

IT has been well said that "the real England is not London, but the rural homes." To see "real England" I have turned aside from the beaten paths of the tourist into Surrey and Kent, and other shires where English gentlemen have rural villas.

The typical rural home is separated from the high road by a six-foot hedge. There used to be a ten-foot fence or wall outside the hedge, and a miniature forest behind it, that together completely hid the house. But visitors objected to monotonous walks and rides between what seemed to be the fortified lines of suspicious enemies, and so many of the walls and fences have come down. The hedges and trees remain, suggesting exclusiveness, but my English friends say it is only "privacy." They cannot understand how the American passion for "publicity" should lead rich householders to remove even low skeleton fences along our avenues and give the public an unrestricted view of their beautiful grounds. Some of these English gentry wish the high walls were back to protect their gardens from the blighting dust of the automobiles, whose owners the world over, even amid beautiful scenery, seldom lose for a moment their mad passion for speed.

When we come to a break in the Englishman's hedge for gate and roadway, and anticipate a glimpse of the home itself, it eludes us again, for the house is around the bend of the roadway, which is bordered with high trees, that stand like tall guardsmen on both sides of the way. These often give the name to the place, for example, "The Beeches," "The Pines," for every house of high or low has a fancy name. There is no entrance except this carriage way, for it is assumed, even by families by no means rich, that nobody will come afoot. When you venture round the bend the real home is seen, not ponderous, but homelike, usually two and a half stories high, with a wealth of green lawn and brilliant flower beds that proclaim the Englishman's characteristic love of nature. Even behind the house, where an American would raise at least vegetables enough for the family, there are more lawns and flower gardens and tennis grounds, that will help to keep the household in "God's out of doors." All this is often seen where the house is on leasehold land, belonging to some mighty lord of the manor, who is literally monarch of all he surveys in every direction and can displace his tenant and take possession of his beautiful home and improvements by raising the rent to a prohibitive point whenever the lease expires.

Whenever one of these country gentlemen has been able to get freehold land for his house, then is he as happy as a king. At this country home, if he be a commuter, he is wont to stay for his "week end" from Friday to Tuesday.

The British love of nature crops out in the great cities, even in the poverty wards, where there are flowers in almost every little yard, and vines on many a house front, and boxes of rooted flowers even at the windows of the fire engine houses. It is due to this same national interest in nature that in cities and villages alike great areas of land are kept for parks, but these are mostly left wild, free from the disturbing sign "Keep Off the Grass."

A Group of New Cottages, Letchworth, England

The most surprising thing about the rural life of England is that so much land suitable for pasturage, if not for other farming uses, lies idle when England is so dependent on other lands for foodstuffs, of which her farmers might surely provide more than they do. The government's agricultural department is alert, but the farmers are slow in individual action, and particularly slow in such co-operative action as is required to make the most of their great market, close at hand. Whenever I have seen a farm-hand, with his team of heavy-footed horses, he and they have been all apparently attempting to beat the cyclist trick of seeing how slow one can go without stopping altogether.

With this exception, the impression of English country life is one of cultured repose and content and simple life. The people, who lack opulence in the American sense, but have a competence, see have generally adopted the motto, "Live and live."

English love of home, and pride in landed est will probably make it easier in England, than al anywhere else, to get the city crowds "back to land." The modern trend to the cities will, in case of England, be largely offset by the an honor of landholding.

It was a unique experience to visit Letchw known as "the Garden City," with its score of tories, surrounded by model homes for workmer

"The Garden City" has no flavor of antiquity is the most modern city in the land, a city del ately planned and built (not evolved like other t by gradual processes), to give fact and their work people a better pla perform their mutual task than cou found in the crowded cities. Quiet great stretch of farm land was bou at farm prices, by the agents of a company, organized to do philanthr work on a business basis, their p being limited to five per cent. on investment. Certain portions of new city were allotted for facto Not too near, not too far away, st were laid out and cottages built fo workmen's homes, every one wi flower garden in front, and with enough for a vegetable garden in rear. Two-thirds of an acre will nish vegetables for a year for a fa of five. The tradesmen's shops allotted a certain section of the and away from all these were st where only houses of considerable and of good quality could be ere The charter forbids more than t houses to the acre anywhere, as ag fifty to the acre often found in l cities. The city can never exceed 3 population, for around it has placed a strip of farming land that can neve used for anything else. Already there are residents in the new city working for a dozen f ries, large and small, to which as many more alr contracted for are to be added. The health rate measurements of the robust children both already how much better it is than the large for the rearing of families, each of which may a home of its own.

One well-known factory, that of the firm of W. H. Smith Company, the London booksellers, has its workers a thousand miles a day of expe travel by bringing them here from London, w nearly all had to ride twice daily. The govern in 1909 introduced a "Housing and City Plan Bill," by which more of such wholesome cities n be developed under State supervision.

Cleveland, O., went into the "strike" in a way which astonished the promoters of the plan in that city. On January 23, 35,000 people had signed the pledges, and by the next day there were 150,000 who were abstaining from meat, whether they signed the pledges or not. Pledges were placed in all of the big concerns for the employees to sign. A plan was also started in Cleveland to have a law passed that meat could not be kept in cold storage over thirty days, as it was naturally feared that as much meat as possible would be held over in the refrigerators and thus defeat in part the campaign of the "meat strikers."

Baltimore had about 100,000 people pledged to the cause, and vegetables and eggs were the main staples of life in the Monument City.

In Memphis, Tenn., about 10,000 people pledged themselves. In Pittsburg over 5,000 Westinghouse employees joined the boycott, and in many other great firms the meat abstainers formed a large proportion of the workers. Sixty butcher shops stopped business altogether, as they did not care to run in opposition to the meat strike.

In the States west of the Mississippi, where most of the cattle raising for market is done, there have not been such high prices as in the East and South, but nevertheless there has been sufficient upward trend to cause the people to take interest in the movement. In Des Moines, Ia., twenty men invested enough money to start a meat market. They plan to buy meat directly from the farmers, and sell it at a price which will pay all charges and six per cent. on the investment in the scheme. It is their intention to sell only to the working people of the city.

These are but a few instances of what is taking place in cities and large towns all over the country, and is already accomplishing in a measure the desired result. It has also brought down the prices of other foodstuffs, as the great milk and butter firms, ing the boycott might extend to and also the action of county g juries, voluntarily lowered their p In Detroit eggs went down, and b was five cents cheaper. A GREAT AMERICAN ARTIST'S WORK

By permission of Current Literature

"THE FAMILY REPAST," FROM THE PAINTING BY ELIZABETH NOURSE

MISS ELIZABETH NOURSE is a young American painter of rare talent, who has won high honors abroad. Her work is marked by fine spiritual qualities, and her representation of simple domestic scenes has won admiration from the ablest art critics of Europe. She is especially the interpreter of the poor and humble, and her pictures are types of human character. A critic writes of her paintings: "A sincere student of nature, of the real, the actual, she paints only what she sees, but hers is the vision of a noble soul, which pierces through the conventionalities to the poetry and beauty that underlie all life. She shows us not only the struggles of those who labor, but their participation in the great joys of life: motherhood; the pleasure of a man resting from toil in his humble home; the happiness of children in their play; the deep consolation which religion brings to those who suffer; such are the themes which appeal to her most strongly." Of "The Family Repast," which is one of her finest paintings (here reproduced), another authority writes: "Miss Nourse puts into these intimate little scenes the sentiments of goodness, of charity, of devotion and of thankfulness which she herself feels better than any one else, and she reproduces them with an emotion which is always true and which communicates itself perfectly naturally, for she makes appeal to the best in each of us."

Miss Nourse is a native of Cincinnati, O. Many of her canvases have been exhibited at public expositions and elsewhere on the Continent of Europe, and have won the highest praise. She has received many honor medals here and abroad and examples of her work are now found in many of the leading art collections.

A TRAVELING EVANGELIST'S LONG TOUR

W. B. MARYE, a "traveling evangelist," who several years ago set out to walk around the globe, preaching the Gospel as he went, arrived in New York City lately, having walked the entire distance from San Francisco across the continent. Mr. Marye, who was formerly a land surveyor in the government service, has been engaged in Gospel work for many years. He left San Francisco in 1903, traveling afoot except where it was necessary to avail himself of transportation by rail. The record of his adventures since that time would fill a good-sized volume. He had no money, but possessed abundant faith and good health. Wherever he found an opportunity, he preached the Gospel to the people en route, sometimes on the streets, at other times in halls, chapels or churches. On many occasions he has gone without supper and breakfast; he has slept in limekilns and barns, and sometimes beside a camp-fire in the open when he could find no one hospitable enough to take him in. In many towns and villages he was welcomed by ministers and people, and gave the gospel message from regular pulpits; but quite as often his platform was an improvised one outdoors, with the sky for a covering.

One day, in the Colorado mountains, he had a narrow escape from death from two grizzly bears, but this was merely one of many similar incidents in which his preservation was providential. He preached to trainmen, ranchmen and farmers, in the sage brush, in the valleys of the Sierras, and in the village settlements and towns. In Boisé City, Idaho, he gave the Gospel message in the saloons. In many places he received marks of kindness and generous treatment; at others he was treated as an unwelcome visitor and ordered away. In Utah he spoke to mixed audiences of Mormons and Gentiles, and in one place they opened the opera house for his services. He had many strange experiences during his arduous journey across the Rockies, and frequently he suffered from hunger and exposure. He passed through Utah, Kansas, Indian Territory, Arkansas, Missouri, Illinois, Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee and Virginia on his way to Washington. Thence he went to Wilmington, Del.; Philadelphia and Boston, preaching at every opportunity. In Philadelphia he was supplied with a new traveling equipment by a generous friend, and was kindly received by the Y. M. C. A. From the Quaker City he walked to Camden. On last Christmas Day he traveled all day long in a driving snow storm. He next preached at Trenton, in the public street. Thence to Princeton, Elizabeth and Newark, speaking as opportunity offered. At Rahway a photographer made a "snap" picture of the evangelist, which is reproduced on this page. On January 4, 1910, he reached New York, tired and footsore, but with the inward satisfaction of knowing that a long stage of his Gospel journey had been accomplished and that he had traveled through and preached in nineteen States, holding over 1,900 services.

Mr. Marye now proposes going to Europe to continue his round-the-globe itinerary. He hopes to be able to secure free transportation from some steamship company to England, whence he will go to the Continent. He is full of courage and resolute in his determination to carry the Gospel around the world. Any one interested in his unique work can address him to the care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

An International Misfortune

FRANCE for years seems to have been unusually favored by nature, and the only things which have disturbed the peace of mind of the people have been the rumor of international conflicts, which happily have not occurred. We usually think of it as a well cultivated, well ordered country, in which life moves in a defined groove and where the elements never break the customary bounds from one season to another. The present floods, which have turned a large part of the country into a lake and which have caused almost incalculable damage to the beautiful cities along the banks of the northern rivers, and, above all else, to Paris, "the international capital," have almost no parallel in recent French history. Lives have been lost, how many it is difficult at present to say with accuracy, great public improvements have been ruined, and it will take years before the damage can be completely repaired.

The damage done in Paris is a loss to all countries. It is one of the most cosmopolitan cities in the world. Its historic, literary and architectural monuments are known through pictures and books to reading people of every land. The size of the foreign colonies in Paris is astonishing. It is said that twenty thousand Americans make their homes there for longer or shorter periods. These include artists who feel they cannot paint unless they have studied there, and many students of architecture. Few are the architects of this country of any prominence who have not bent for a term over a draughting board in the Ecole des Beaux Arts. Then there are the innumerable young Americans who are cultivating the voice, or learning the language of the country to teach it in their home schools. In addition to all these there is a small army of cultured people, who go to Paris with the intention of remaining a year and stay several. As it is with Americans, so it is with the English, Germans and Russians. All of these will be equally involved, in proportion to their numbers, with the French people in any disaster which befalls Paris.

It is to be fervently hoped that the mortar of the old builders will hold together until the winter's floods subside and the storms vanish in the beautiful summer we always associate in our minds with La Belle France.

The Revolt Against Higher Prices

WITHIN a surprisingly short time the popular uprising against the high prices of meat and foodstuffs has swept from State to State, as was foreshadowed in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. This national protest is already producing very substantial results. Many of the leading cities report a general drop in the prices of meat, milk, eggs, flour, poultry and butter, and the outlook is favorable to a still further reduction. Meat combines, egg traders, and nearly all others concerned in keeping up prices are emulating Davy Crockett's famous 'coon, and coming down the tree.

It is not alone the popular boycott that is assisting in the solution of the problem of the cost of living. Other powerful agencies are at work. Federal authorities, State legislatures and courts and grand juries are taking up the subject in earnest. The labor unions, too, are lending their influence toward a solution. In twenty-five counties in Pennsylvania grand juries are investigating on general lines and planning the casting of a dragnet to catch the price-jugglers wholesale. It must be admitted that there is a general impression prevalent that the American people have been most unfairly treated on the food question. They have been cruelly exploited by those who control the food supplies of the country, at a time when these supplies are abundant for all normal demands. Redress has been unattainable, and ordinary forms of protest have only excited the derision of the food manipulators, who kept on forcing up meat and foodstuffs until the situation grew intolerable. Prices that would be justifiable only in a time of great scarcity or actual famine have prevailed, enabling the manipulators to make gigantic profits out of the necessities of their victims. It is surprising that the revolt did not come sooner.

Now that our State and national authorities have set the machinery of the law fairly at work we may hope to find out where the real responsibility lies, and whether an effective check cannot be applied to prevent such extortion and oppression in the future. Juggling with the public food supply should be made a severely punishable offense. The anti-meat movement has brought the whole question to a sharp focus, and if the investigations now under way in Washington and elsewhere do not result in some radical reform, which will save the public from the imposition of famine prices in times of plenty hereafter, it will be a great disappointment.

Mercifulness

"THE Lord requireth of thee to love mercy." It is a large term, comprehending all kindly sentiments and helpful actions toward our fellow-creatures in want or in distress. It may be a great thing, done grandly, or it may be—most frequently it is—a small thing, done very humbly.

Mercifulness, that is opposed to all hardness and selfishness and cruelty; mercifulness, that pities the unfortunate and runs to their relief; mercifulness, that deals tenderly with the erring, and does good even to the evil-doer and the unthankful; that is gentle to the undeserving, generous even to the tramp and the outcast, kind to those who have no claim on us save such as all have upon all men in right of a common Father and a common Saviour. Mercifulness, that will be compassionate in thought and judgment as well as in deeds; that when a tale of transgression is heard of one who did run well, but has been snared and has fallen, will not turn away with risings of disgust, of repulsion, of contempt—with a self-righteous thanking God for superior goodness—but rather will draw nigh, like Jesus, and put a brotherly arm around the weak and sinful one, speaking words of hope and cheer through the love of God. This, and nothing less, is the mercy that God requires of us.

A Forgetful Critic

MRS. NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS has lately spoken some rather stirring words concerning the American woman's responsibility for our numerous divorces. She considers our girls too luxurious in their tastes. They spur on their husbands to make money, until they either fall exhausted by the way, or else, in sheer self-defense, procure a divorce. "The American woman," she is quoted as saying, "has been set upon a pedestal, and raised upon a false conceit." Mrs. Hillis proceeds: "The German and English women are far better housekeepers than we are and the French are better business women. As for art, we have not yet produced an Angelica Kaufman, a Mme. Le Brun or a Rosa Bonheur. In literature, we have had no Mme. de Sévigné, no George Sand, no George Eliot, no Elizabeth Browning, Jane Austen, Charlotte Bronté, or even Mrs. Humphrey Ward. The cause of this Mrs. Hillis considers to be that our women do not devote themselves seriously to study, and she quotes with apparent approval the saying of a young Englishman, who says that American girls "do not know anything."

Criticism is wholesome, no doubt; but Mrs. Hillis seems to have forgotten that we have our Mary Cassatt, our Jessie Wilcox Smith and our Rhoda Nichols, to say nothing of other artists; and our Mrs. Stowe, Mrs. Wharton, Mary Johnston, Mary Wilkins, and a dozen others have produced powerful and beautiful literary work; while our housekeepers, in spite of the contrary comparisons so often made, will, we believe, measure up bravely beside those of other nations.

The Golden Egg

FEW people appreciate the importance of the egg as an article of commerce. An authority in the trade says that New York City alone eats $50,000,000 worth of eggs yearly, or 5,000,000 cases, aggregating 1,500,000,000 dozen. These are sold at $7 per case, or 23½ cents a dozen. To them all at one trip would take a train of 1 cars. In addition, there may be added $50,0(worth of poultry consumed every twelve mont the metropolis. Big dealers assert that the not and cannot be an egg trust, because the of the country is so widely scattered and in so different hands. Besides, the egg-producing f usually trades his eggs for groceries, and hen fixing of prices is largely a local affair, regu by the legitimate supply and demand. Pract everybody in our large cities eats storage eggs the "strictly fresh" article is purely mythica cept in rural districts. However we may vie the egg is the most valuable staple food pr in this country to-day, and the domestic hen greatest wealth producer, the annual "lay" ex ing in value that of the wheat, hay or cotton Besides, at the present time, the tariff is prohi in favor of the Western farmer, and the egg benefits accordingly. It is evident that the cu tion of the great American egg as a practical mercial pursuit offers greater inducements larger and quicker profits than almost any popular industry. It is no longer the goose, bu hen, that lays the golden egg.

GENERAL NOTES

—FOREIGNERS IN this country sent $71,295,004 to frien relatives in other lands during the year just closed, throu New York postoffice alone. Through the same channel orders were received from abroad for $9,207,599.

—THE OLDEST FIXED recorded date in human history B.C., which recent discoveries have deciphered on the Egyptian inscriptions, which refer to that far-off time six thousand years ago—as the actual date on which the tian astronomers first calculated their solar year. Civil is probably much older, but how much none can say, beyond is in the wide region of conjecture.

—PROFESSOR SHAILER MATHEWS, of Chicago Univer outspoken on the question of the church's social obligatio says: "The church will never succeed in being merely organ of social reform . . . to substitute sociologic cussion for the exposition of truth that stimulates and e the spiritual life; to substitute interest in society as a for interest in individual spiritual lives will be fatal church."

—A MAN IN Fort Worth, Tex. (according to a pre patch), has swapped 100,000 acres of land in two cour that State for 100,000 gallons of whisky, the latter bein an Ohio distillery. The land may have been poor a worth $1 per acre, but there never was a foot of ev poorest soil on earth that was not worth all the alcoholic that ever were brewed. Esau, when he sold his birt made a far better bargain than this Texan did. Evide must live in a "dry" section.

—GREAT BRITAIN'S parliamentary elections are pra over as this issue goes to press. The Unionists have 25 five seats more than the Liberals. The latter, howev pected to have the support of the Irish Nationalist number 76, and who now hold the balance of powe mier Asquith will probably continue as Prime Minist will have to have the support of the Nationalists a Laborites, who number 40. The Nationalists, by refusi port to his measures, could bring about such a situatio another election would have to be called within a year.

VIEW OF PARIS AND THE RIVER SEINE, WHERE FLOODS HAVE CAUSED LARGE LOSS OF LIFE AND $200,000,000 DAMAGE

Floods in Paris

HE River Seine has broken its banks and Paris, the most beautiful city in the world, is submerged. It has been 300 years since ıer has been such a disastrous flood there. The ıct·ies along the river bank have been flooded, nd twenty-five thousand workmen are locked ıt by the flood. Some idea of the flood is ɔnɣed by a telegram from Paris to one of the ew York dailies: "Picture to yourself that New o from the Battery to Bowling Green is under at, that West and South Streets are flooded, ıaɪn Harlem from High Bridge to Port Morris, ndn the Bronx from Classon Point to Westches- r illage, people have to get home as best they ın rough the water; that on the West Side, along iv side Drive to West End Avenue, many have ado leave their houses because of the floods, and ouhave a picture of the conditions in Paris to- ay. Many beautiful bridges are undermined, ndwith the water and débris, are threatened with ɔllpse. There are fears for the priceless treas- re in the Louvre, for the lower part of the great uiing is full of water. The cellars of the palace f e Legion of Honor and the President's palace f e Elysée are submerged.

Hlowing the appeal of the Premier, M. Bri- nd the Chamber of Deputies unanimously voted 40000 for the aid of the flood sufferers. At the m the money was voted the water had penetrated he basement of the Chamber of Deputies and to ed the electric light engines, and it was by oil ans that the members were enabled to continue he session and vote the needed relief. It was ea d that the Eiffel Tower, whose foundations were hr tened by the waters, would fall. Streets have al n in, sewers have burst, subways caved in, and om of the most beautiful historic buildings in the vo l, including Notre Dame, are partly submerged n kes and rushing streams. The foreign offices nc he residence of our American Ambassador have ee abandoned. Two hundred millions of dollars vo h of property has been destroyed, and one hun- re thousand people are homeless and hungry. A rint picture in the dark background of the calam- ty s the heroism of the officers, from the President f ıe republic down, and the charity of nations. nc ding our own, in sending instant relief. The no fortunate thing about the whole calamity is he small number of lives lost.

·most all great cities are situated on rivers. Th has always been so in the history of the vod. There were floods from the overflow of iv·s in the olden times, as there are now, indicat- ng that there is likely to be peril where there is ri lege. Floods in the Scripture are used as sym- bo of the direst calamities. The inhabitants of Pa s are uttering the prayer for physical relief vh h the prophet offered for salvation from spir- tu calamities, of which earthly floods are a type:

L not the water flood overflow me, neither let the deep w·ow me up, and let not the pit shut her mouth upon me. (Ps) : 15.)

W·ld's Speedy Conversion

ev. Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, the evangelist, who s nducting a series of religious meetings through- u the cities of Maine, has just returned to his native land after a series of world-wide revival campaigns. His strong faith and his recent experience with peoples of all lands leads him to the most splendid optimism, expressed in the following words: "If I live five years, and I hope to live that long, I'll see China a Christian nation, Japan under the control of the cross of Christ, Korea a most religious country, and America in the midst of a great revival. It will be just as easy to inaugurate a world-wide campaign as to run a local revival in Boston or New York." His prophecy as to the time it will take to convert the world may be over-enthusiastic, but he has only caught the spirit of the missionaries in the field, pastors over their flocks, and the laymen in their pews, who seem bent on carrying out at once the command of our Lord to evangelize the world and who believe that in some way it can and must be done within the present generation; and the indications of Providence are that the faith and the wise and diligent efforts put forth for the accomplishment of the work, under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, will bring the success so much desired. It is a glorious thing to live in the world at a time when the ears of God's children are so wide open to Christ's command:

Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature. (Mark 16 : 15.)

Honors Father's Memory

J. Pierpont Morgan, the millionaire, gave to the city of Hartford the Morgan Memorial Art Museum in honor of his father. The dedicatory exercises were held the other day. Mr. Morgan made an appropriate speech, and then surprised the people of Hartford by announcing a gift of $250,000 for the maintenance of the institution he had given. The building is one of the finest in architecture and in furnishings between New York and Boston. On the floor of the main entrance is inlaid in rolled brass, "This building has been erected in loving remembrance of Julius Spencer Morgan, a native of Massachusetts, a merchant of Hartford, and a merchant of London." This act of Mr. Morgan's is only one of the numerous substantial memorials founded by dutiful children in honor of their parents. There is an added eloquence to these institutions of education, beneficence and piety in the thought of the loyal love of children for parents which they contain, fulfilling one of the ten commandments.

Honor thy father and thy mother. (Ex. 20 : 12.)

A Magical Laugh

A singular incident occurred at the United Mine Workers' Convention, held at Indianapolis recently. Two factions were fighting bitterly for the ascendancy. One wing of the convention was led by Thomas L. Lewis, the president. Mr. Francis Feehan was speaking, and was declared out of order by the president. There was excitement, followed by something of a riot. In this moment of terrific excitement one of the delegates burst out into a hearty laugh, which could be heard distinctly above the tumult of the crowd. Others caught the contagion, and the boisterous, angry convention was turned into a meeting of infinite good humor. The angry leaders dropped into their seats, and joined in the laugh with the rest. What a funereal world this would be without laughter, and how important in the development of character as well as the contentment of the soul is a hearty laugh! Our susceptibility to mirth is a divine endowment. The laughs of the world, like those at the convention at Indianapolis, are an emanation of divine joy, which is so powerful in overcoming hate. This joy was manifested by the Lord's children in their restoration from captivity, and described in the words of the psalmist:

Then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing. (Ps. 126 : 2.)

The Stone Face

As excavations were going on at South Bethlehem, Pa., in the formation of a new park, the other day there was discovered in the solid stone a statue of George Washington. Nature had used the chisel so delicately as to make Washington's face so plain that a school-child would instantly recognize it. This curious freak of nature calls to mind Hawthorne's great stone face, which his imagination caused to be cut out of the side of the mountain, and the beautiful moral lesson which he teaches from it. There was a legend among the Indians that the one who most resembled that face from the mountain was to be the greatest man in the nation. An humble farmer in the valley grew to look exactly like the stone face, so all his neighbors said, and Hawthorne held his wisdom and rustic virtue to be the chief essentials of American greatness. The reason why the farmer's features grew like those of the face from the mountain was that every day, as he began his work, as he continued it in the field and at its close at night, he looked steadily upon the stone face, and loved it. And Hawthorne says that, while he looked and loved, invisible hands fashioned the features of the farmer like those of the face of the mountain. The face of Washington, cut by nature in the stone, reminds us of the fact that the eyes of the generations have been upon Washington to love him, and that American manhood has reached its highest ideal as it has copied him. Lincoln, when he began to read, made Washington his ideal and copied him in his moral qualities as nearly as he could all his life; and the people of the nation ascend in the scale of wisdom and virtue as they look upon and love Washington, Lincoln, and such, and are transfigured into the likeness of their features. There is One who is greater than Washington, Lincoln, or any other man, more lovely than all the sons of men, and we by looking upon and loving him may be changed into his image. This process is beautifully described by the apostle as he writes:

But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord. (II. Cor. 3 : 18.)

Killed by Wolves

Baron Otto Von Orban, a wealthy landowner, while traveling through the forest in Transylvania, Austria, was pursued by a pack of wolves. His frightened horse threw him, and the wolves tore him to pieces and devoured him. There are enemies without and within, fierce as this pack of wolves. The prophet makes this reference to them: They are

Swifter than the leopards, and are more fierce than the evening wolves. (Hab. 1 : 8.)

The First Trial of the Monorail in the United States

A MONORAIL car of the Schorl type (which has attracted much attention in Europe) was an objeet of much interest in Brooklyn, N. Y., a few days ago, where it received its first public Ameriean test in the Clermont Rink. The car carries twenty passengers. It is eighteen feet long, four feet wide and weighs two and one-half tons. Two gyroscopes are mounted in the car and revolve in different directions at the rate of 8,000 revolutions a minute, preserving a perfect equilibrium. It was explained by the demonstrators that even if the motor becamc deranged or stopped, the gyroscopes would have sufficient momentum to continue working and would preserve the balance of the car for three-quarters of an hour at least. Both gyroscopes are operated in a vncuum. It is claimed that the car can run 100 miles an hour and even 120 under specially favorable conditions. Small rails, not much larger than heavy trolley wires, were laid upon the floor of the rink and the car ran with astonishing speed and smoothness, carrying twenty passengers. In the monorail there is a notable absence of the jarring sensation which is common to railway ears that run on the usual two-railed track.

TEMPERANCE AND PATRIOTISM

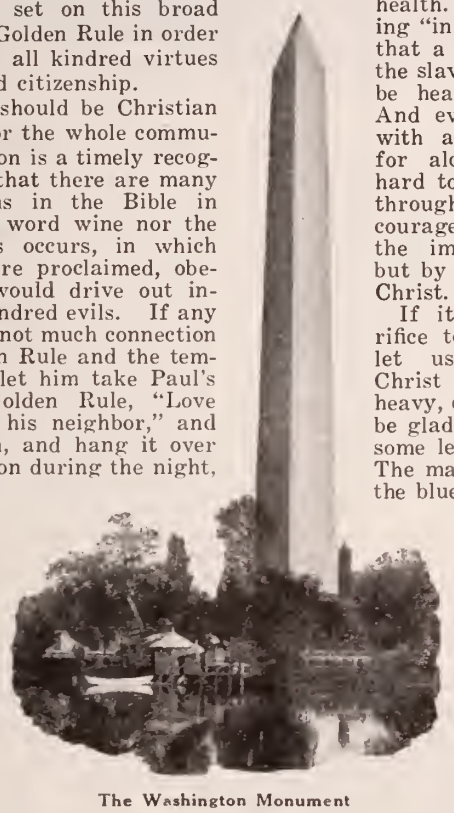
Quarterly Temperance Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

WHAT does it mean that the International Lesson Committee have assigned the Golden Rule as a quarterly temperance lesson for February 20? The alert patriot will read between the lines that this date is selected because Washington's Birthday is at hand, and that the temperance lesson is set on this broad foundation of the Golden Rule in order to make it include all kindred virtues that make for good citizenship.

The whole day should be Christian Citizenship Day for the whole community. This selection is a timely recognition of the fact that there are many temperance lessons in the Bible in which neither the word wine nor the word drunkenness occurs, in which great principles are proclaimed, obedience to which would drive out intemperance and kindred evils. If any one thinks there is not much connection between the Golden Rule and the temperance question, let him take Paul's version of the Golden Rule, "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor," and paint it on a sign, and hang it over the doors of a saloon during the night, and see whether the people of the community will not in derision laughter recognize that there is some connection.

I said to a preacher of a large denomination in a certain section of our country, in which very much discussion is devoted to the Sabbath question, but which is very backward on the temperance question: "Your people seem to be more interested in the Sabbath than in temperance." "Oh, yes," he said, "the Sabbath is in the commandments." But put Paul's summary of the second table of the law over the door of a saloon, as I have suggested, or paste the words on a beer bottle, or write them across brewery stock, and we shall at once recognize that alcohol breaks not one commandment, but all.

The second great commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself"; and the Golden Rule, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them, for this is the law and the prophets"; and Paul's words, "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor, for love is the fulfilling of the law," are all but varied expressions of the same truth.



The Washington Monument

Two Great Commandments

And now let us divide our lesson on the two great temperance commandments:

Abstain for Christ's sake.

Abstain for our country's sake.

In the Bowery Mission of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and in other New York missions, and among the children of some Sunday Schools, and even in the buttonholes of a number of millionaires, may be seen a blue button with the white cross, the badge of the Christian Abstainers' Union, better known as the Blue Button Army. The wearing of the button does not involve any dues, or any attendance at meetings; it means simply "total abstinence for Christ's sake and in Christ's strength." This is the best kind of a badge, because it calls for courage, makes us show our colors and gives a "silent and constant testimony" in behalf of practical Christianity wherever we go. Blue is the symbol of heaven, and recalls the "ribband of blue" worn by Hebrew teachers, and so by Jesus Christ. It was this ribband of blue that the sick woman touched, through which a flood of healing power entered her sick body and quickly restored her to health. It is only by keeping "in touch" with Christ that a man who is under the slavery of appetite can be healed and delivered. And even boys and girls with as yet no appetite for alcohol will find it hard to keep their pledge through life without the courage that comes, not by the imitation of Christ, but by the impartation of Christ.

If it means some sacrifice to wear the badge, let us remember that Christ bore for us the heavy, crushing cross, and be glad that we may bear some lesser cross for him. The man or boy who puts the blue button in his coat will find it like a shield when he is tempted to enter a saloon. He will not dare to enter with this badge of its foe upon his coat, and if he attempts to work it out of his buttonhole his manhood, if he has any, will rise at once in revolt at hiding his colors and breaking his word of honor. The button was invented by Mr. John S. Huyler and Colonel Hadley, in order that heroic Christian men might know each other on the road just as soldiers know each other by the bronze button. It is an interesting fact that in Europe, independently, for similar reasons, the white button with the blue cross has been adopted as the badge of the abstaining Christian.

Temperance workers in the United States are beginning to realize that they have been depending too much on law, and have been neglecting pledge-signing, especially among the young. If we had as many pledged children organized, in proportion, as they have in England, there would be eight million boys and girls enrolled in such societies as the Blue Button Army and the Loyal Temperance Legion, the latter the very best organization for boys and girls, for its members meet and study all the questions of Christian citizenship. Those who desire fuller information in regard to these two organizations should write to Rev. George D. Hadley, Jersey City, N. J., in regard to the Blue Button Army, and to Miss Wintringer, Evanston, Ill., in regard to the Loyal Temperance Legion. In any case, let every Sunday School have pledges in its class-books, or on the wall, in which its members may enrol themselves as life abstainers, and if blue buttons cannot be had in time the boys and girls should don the blue ribbon until the blue buttons can be secured.

The Washington House With the Tablet, in England

Total Abstinence for Our Country's Sake

In our own country every pupil in the schools that is under a faithful teacher has learned from scientific temperance lessons that even the smallest glass of beer diminishes a man's power to work and a child's power to study, so much so that one ounce of alcohol will cut down a man's work as a typesetter one-tenth; and it is known by the testimony of judges and prison wardens and others that drink causes more than eighty per cent. of the crime and more than half of the poverty and insanity and idiocy, all of which diminish a nation's wealth and happiness.

Washington fully recognized, as a statesman, that good morals are the foundation of national prosperity, and these words from his Farewell Address should be memorized by all patriotic young Americans:

"Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths, which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

"It is substantially true that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule, indeed, extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric? Can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue?"

The Lesson of the Monument

The Washington Monument will furnish us a good illustration of temperance principles. The original cornerstone of the Washington Monument was laid July 4, 1848, as a part of the celebration of Independence Day. When only one-third of the monument had been built it was discovered that the foundation was not strong enough to hold any more, and so for a third of a century the monument stood incomplete. But in 1880 a man of great ability, General Casey, was put in charge, and he was able to take out the old foundation, piece by piece, and substitute a new and stronger foundation. And then two-thirds more of brighter stone was put upon the monument, and the shining capstone was laid with rejoicing, crying, "Grace, grace unto it!"

For many years the monument could be seen to the best advantage from the President's office, while it was in the White House. Day after day, one President after another, as he came to his desk, before he took his seat, would behold, framed in the open window behind his chair, the picture of what the first great President was, of what every true President ought to be, a monument like him it celebrates, simple and lofty and strong. And as the visible monument pictures the great qualities of Christian statesmanship and Christian citizenship which should be cultivated, so the story of its foundations forcibly illustrates the secret of character building.

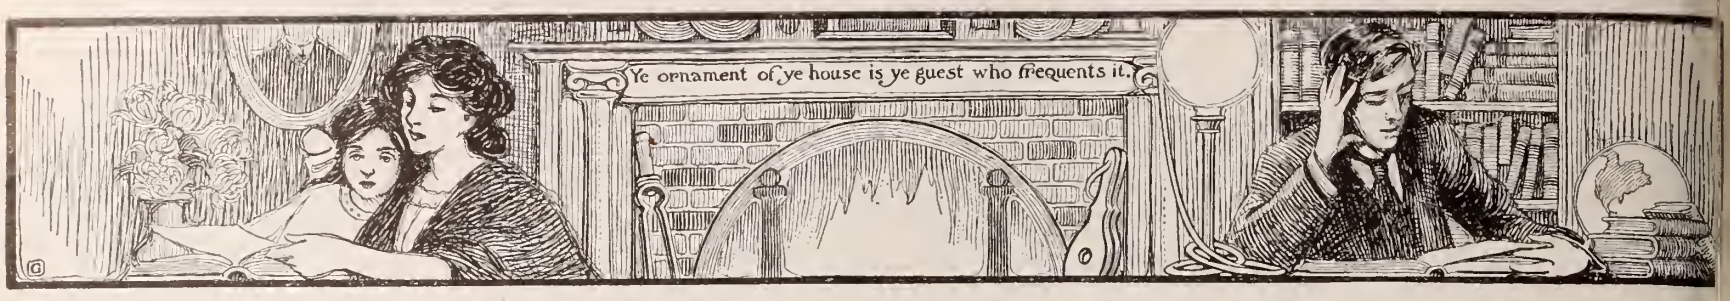
The words of Washington, translated into their meaning for the temperance reform, certainly proclaim nothing less than prohibition, the prohibition of the sale of that which is harmful to the individual, to the family and to the nation. It is no business of ours whether the standard we raise can be fully realized or not. The standard of character presented in Christ is not fully realized by Christians. The standard set by any law is seldom fully realized, but law should always be an expression of right that it may teach the people; for "law," as the Bible says, "is our schoolmaster."

A Providence in Washington's Ancestral History

The deep religiousness of Washington, which was a large element in the success of his life and in the development of the country of which he was the first great leader, was inherited from deeply religious ancestors, as one of the teachers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S million Bible class learned last summer in visiting the home of the Washington family at Northampton, England. This family belonged to the "gentry," and an earlier member of it was Lord Mayor of Northampton, very highly esteemed. During a period of financial misfortune a great-grandfather of Washington found it necessary to curtail his former style of living and went to live in a cottage on the estate of Lord Spencer, with whom the Washington family was connected. It was in marked contrast to the elegance of his ancestral estates; but instead of murmuring at his lot, he put into a white slab over the door, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." Shortly after, fortune once more came, and in the New World they had abundant means for those times. Returning prosperity did not mar the spirit of devotion that had been so strikingly displayed, and which comes to its full blossom in the emphasis which Washington puts in the Farewell Address upon religion and morality as the secrets of national prosperity, as he had found them also the secrets of individual success.

The International Sunday School Lesson for February 20, 1910. The Golden Rule. Matt. 7:1-12. GOLDEN TEXT: "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets" Matt. 7:12.

AROUND THE HOME HEARTH



Yesterday in the Schoolroom

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

THERE drifted into my hands the other day, all the way from California, a book with the title Grace and Glory. I imagined the book, from its title, to be purely devotional; but on investigation discovered that it was not only that, but something far better—the life-story, beautifully told, of Abbie Mills, a woman eighty-one years old, with an outlook on the present over which streams a radiance from a beautiful and consecrated past. One of these days I shall tell my readers something of the brave struggle made by Abbie Mills, when she was a young girl, to gain the best education offered in her day. As every one does who valiantly strives, she won out, and there must be both in heaven and on earth many who can testify to the good they owe her.

To-day I wish to call your attention to something else. In Mrs. Roger A. Pryor's fascinating story of her life there is a bit of description worth repeating because of its contrast to present educational methods. We all know how we feel when we first take a little girl by the hand and lead her to school. If we are up-to-date we start our little maid in the kindergarten, and she slips by easy stages, after a while, into the primary school and thence to the grammar grades, and ever by a gently ascending scale finds herself at last, in the dawn of womanhood, a student in college. Mrs. Pryor is a beautiful woman of eighty, and she has lived through a wonderful day. In Virginia, seventy years ago, little girls were frequently educated at home, and seldom entered upon school life until their tenth year. At this period little Sara Rice became a pupil in a seminary for girls. Here is what she says about the books placed in her childish hands. The setting of the scene may be imagined. "There was a large room, with rows of desks, at which sat girls of all sizes intent on study; the principal, a clergyman, sat at a desk upon an elevated platform. These were the books deemed suitable for my age: Abercrombie's Intellectual Philosophy, Watts on the Improvement of the Mind, Goldsmith's History of Greece, and somebody's Natural Philosophy. I worked hard on these subjects, with the result that, as I could not understand them, I learned by rote a few words in answer to the questions. A bright, amiable little scrap of a girl, who always knew her lessons, volunteered to assist me. If any collector of old books should happen to find a volume of Watts on The Mind, much thumbed and blotted here and there with tears, and should see within the early pages penciled brackets enclosing the briefest possible answers to the questions, that book, those tears, were mine; and the brackets are the loving marks made by Margaret Wolfe, whose memory I ever cherish.

" 'What is logic?' questions the teacher's guide at the bottom of the pages. 'Logic,' answers Dr. Watts (in conspicuous penciled brackets), 'is the art of investigating and communicating truth.' "

The residuum that remained to the weary child, when she was wisely removed from the school after a few months of strenuous toil, was this condensed epitome of logic.

Convalescence

After a severe illness, when the trained nurse is dismissed and the doctor stops coming every day, and the strain of continual anxiety is relaxed, the period of convalescence is pleasant for the invalid and the caretakers. It is often tedious to those who have had little experience of the slow return of strength after fever or any other great drain upon vitality. There are times in convalescence when improvement, although steady, is very gradual. For a while it is marked rather by the week than by the day. Great care should be taken during convalescence that there are no indiscretions as to diet. A relapse may be caused by imprudence while the stomach is still too weak to assimilate food in quantities. In the matter, too, of receiving friends, listening to and talking with them, an invalid is in peril of growing too tired, and every time this occurs there is a little falling back or at least a little failure to go forward.

In convalescence as much care should be taken not to overdo, so far as the patient is concerned, as was taken to conserve every remnant of strength when the disease was at its height. The caretakers, too, should be replaced to a certain extent by others, who are fresher and less jaded than those who bore the fatigues of watching and nursing at the critical hour.

HER PETS

Some girls prefer a cat or bird,
But I think rabbits far more dear.
They know my very softest word,
And never run when I appear.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—"WHAT course should a young man take who is troubled deeply on account of the refusal of a father to give his child in a matrimonial engagement, just because the man is not 'well off'?" Aunt Prudence advises the young man not to be discouraged, but to go to work at once, save all he can, and show the girl's father that he has the ability to support a wife. Until a young man has something saved he would better not enter upon the responsibilities of marriage. It is not necessary to have a fortune, but a small sum in the savings bank is a proof of the young man's steadiness of purpose and ability to earn a living. If the girl he loves cares for him she will wait till he can claim her, notwithstanding her father's opposition.

Mothers and Education

HOW are we to decide what is best and sa for our girls? There is an Order of Mot hood in this country and a National Cong of Mothers, that meets at stated intervals, everywhere there are little maternal groups study child-culture and strive to do what they toward the symmetrical development of both da ters and sons. International Marriages

Undoubtedly there are successful and happy m riages in which the husband is an Old-World a tocrat, with a family tree losing itself in antiq while the wife is a lass with a full purse and a v derful dower of American beauty and viva There is no absolute obstacle to congenial wed life in the fact that a man is the scion of a d house in Europe and the woman the daughter Western mine owner or a New York millionaire. It is notable, though, that we seldom hear of im erished young women forming alliances princely suitors of great wealth in these inte tional marriages. Generally it is the other There are exceptions, of course, but they are so as to point the moral.

Why are there not men enough, good and t honorable and attractive, to meet the wishes win the hearts of girls here in America? Amer men and American women should form ideal c rades in the race of life. Many international m riages become international shipwrecks.

Anonymous communications cannot receive attention in "Our Mail-Bag."

S., Marietta, Ky. Is it incorrect to designate eating, drinking, breathing, etc., as habits? Broadly speaking, may these physical processes be considered bodily habits? Is there anything involved in the definition or meaning of the word which would forbid such an application?

No; these are natural functions, common and necessary to all. A habit is some custom an individual acquires, either through his own inclination or the result of his environment, or because it was forced upon him at an early age, before his own powers of discrimination had developed.

Mr. F. L., Shelburne Falls, Mass. Was there ever a time when the word "mystery" was used in the Catholic religion?

There were "mystery plays," so-called, in the early days of the Catholic Church, representing, in rude dramatic form, scenes and events described in the Scriptures and the Apocrypha. These are still continued in some Catholic countries. The early Christian fathers (Cysostom and others) applied the word "mystery" to the Lord's Supper. In the Roman Church, the Eucharist was the last and highest point of the secret discipline, and to some extent the early Christian Church generally attached much secrecy to the observance of the sacrament. The word "mystery" is frequently used in Scripture, but more in the sig. of explanation or contrast than for any other purpose. (See I. Cor. 13:2; II. Thes. 2:7; I. Cor. 15:51; Eph. 3:9, and other passages.)

M. L., Charleston, Tenn. When, where and by whom was the first silver dollar coined?

The word dollar comes from the German word thaler. In the sixteenth century the word dollar began to be applied to Spanish pieces of eight parts, equal in value to the German thaler. In 1792 this government coined its first silver dollars, modeled on the Spanish dollar. The minting at that time was done in Philadelphia, the mint having just been established, through the efforts of Robert Morris.

M. A. McD., Des Moines, Ia. Is a preacher justified in the assertion that Jesus, while traveling and ministering with his disciples, ever sang a hymn?

While there is no record of such a thing in Scripture, or anywhere else, it does not seem improbable. See the passage in Matt. 26:30 and Mark 14:26. The closing hymn here referred to was probably the chant called by the Jews "the great Hallel," and which consists of parts of Psalms 115, 116, 117 and 118, the parts being sung at the close of the Passover. "It is hardly conceivable," writes one commentator, "that the eleven disciples should have been singing to cheer their sorrowing hearts and that their Lord should have stood silent beside them."

Mr. M. E. R., Friendship, N. Y. Could you tell me something of the persecution in the reign of Domitian?

The Roman Emperor Domitian came to the throne A.D. 81. In 95 A.D. there was a persecution against the Christians, but it seems to have fallen much more severely on the Jews, with whom the Romans at that time classed the Christians. Eusebius says: "Domitian was the second that raised a persecution against us and established himself as a successor to Nero in his hatred and hostility to God." It is said Domitian summoned the grandchildren of Jude, the apostle, to him, but when they said the kingdom of Christ was a spiritual kingdom he dismissed them. He, however, persecuted his own relatives, killing all who were probably Christians.

J. S., Lancaster, Pa. Does Brazil allow Christian missionaries to preach, or are they persecuted?

Brazil, like most of the South American States, is strongly Catholic. Protestantism is discouraged there; but it is not now forbidden by law, as formerly, and its ministers are not openly persecuted.

F. E., Twin Falls, Idaho. 1. What evidence is there that the prayers of human beings are answered, aside from the assurance of the Scriptures? 2. Is physical death the result of sin? 3. What is the cause of the "second death"?

The evidence of individual experience, which is so abundant and so well attested as to be unquestionable. There are, however, many who, not being spiritual minded and not believing the Gospel, cannot understand or accept what, to a mind spiritually open, is palpable and conclusive. Belief in prayer is the result of faith, and unless we have faith our prayers remain unanswered. 2. Yes, see Rom. 6:23; Rom. 8:2; James 1:15, and other passages. 3. The "second death," mentioned in Rev. 20:14, is held by commentators to mean a form of punishment, which consists of "everlasting exclusion from the presence of the Lord." Weiss says: "The second death is not a bodily death, but a condition in which men are eternally overcome by the fire of divine wrath"—a fixed condition from which there is no change forever.

A. N. G., Rochester, Pa. In your beautiful premium picture, "The Daughters of Dorcas," does the group stand for any particular society or individuals?

It is simply a typical party of sweet-faced young women, who, while one of their number reads aloud, sew on "coats and garments" for the poor, like the saintly Dorcas of old (Acts 9:36, 39).

Miss Dell Haight, of Shaniko, Ore., sends this interesting incident: "One dark night lately a half-drunk man, with a face marred by sin and suffering, staggered into a lonely road-house, and sat by the fire to warm himself. One of your "Dreamland" calendars hung above the place where he sat. He gazed at it in silence for a few moments, then turning, said in a low voice, 'I wish I was innocent as that babe.' Surely the longing in his voice may lead him to better his wretched condition; and if so, there may be another star in your crown some day."

L. L. G., Poughkeepsie, N. Y. 1. Are there any Catholics on the Supreme Bench of the United States? 2. What is the correct pronunciation of hydropathy, allopathy, telepathy?

1. There is one Roman Catholic on the Supreme Bench, Justice McKenna. 2. The words are pronounced hi-dro-path-ee, al-lo-path-ee, tel-ep-ath-y; accent on italic syllables.

J. W. D., Greer, S. C. Where did the River Jordan empty its waters before there was any Dead Sea—before the destruction of the cities of the plain?

Raised beaches have been found by explorers in various parts of the Ghor, or Valley of the Jordan. The conclusion is that the valley, which was probably formed by a depression early in the tertiary period, was once filled by a chain of lakes. Some great physical change was produced in the valley by the convulsion which destroyed the cities. One result was the lowering of the bed of the Dead Sea. It was anciently believed that the great volume of water poured into the Dead Sea by the river found its way to the Mediterranean by subterranean canals, but later science declares that evaporation alone is sufficient to account for the maintenance of the usual height in the lake.

I. D. D., Marion, Wis. What is the width of the Panama Canal?

The surface width of the Panama Canal varies from 200 feet at the Culebra cut to 1,000 feet in the stretch from the Gatun locks to San Pablo. We are unable to answer the other questions sent. They are a matter of personal viewpoint only.

A. H. B., Muskegon, Mich. 1. What is the origin of the Welsh people? 2. I read of relics found in Peru as being 7,000 years old. Are those relics better evidence than the Bible narrative, which gives the age of the human race as being about 6,000 years?

1. The Welsh are descended from the Cymri, or Combrages, a name adopted by the native tribes which held out longest against the English. Probably the earliest inhabitants of Wales known to history were the Celts of Belgic Gaul, who introduced Celtic civilization and art into Britain. 2. The Bible nowhere says the world, or the human race, is 6,000 years old. It simply says, "In the beginning," which may mean countless ages. The chronological data in the margins of the Bible are the work of a learned divine, Archbishop Ussher, who lived 300 years ago and whose calculations—mere estimates—have long since been rejected. They are in no sense a part of the Bible itself, and never were.

C. R., Fryeburg, Me. We have often had reason to question the wisdom of certain public confessions of wickedness, especially where these have gone into details that were neither edifying nor helpful. There are confessions that should be made to God alone. If we have wronged any one, it is our duty to confess the wrong to the injured one. Confession of repentance, of faith, of acceptance of Christ as Saviour, should be made publicly before man; but the details of a wicked life, if told to any human being, should be told to a few only, and not poured out before a promiscuous assembly, as is sometimes done.

E. G. B., North Thetford, Vt. Can you tell me to what the expression "Send a message to Garcia" refers?

The expression is, "A message to Garcia." Garcia was in command of some of the Cuban insurgents during the late war with Spain. An American commander wished to communicate with him, and, calling an officer, said, "Here is a message for Carcia." The officer had no knowledge of where the insurgent was, but he did not stop to ask questions, set out on his dangerous quest, and found him. It has become famcus as showing a fine type of man who does things without asking questions, but finds the way for himself.

E. W. K., Egypt, Pa. Is it necessary for a criminal, in order to be right with God, to confess his guilt before execution, if he has not confessed before?

If guilty, and if he truly repents of his crime, it will ease his conscience to confess it, and may prevent unjust suspicion of others. Confession of one's sins is an essential if we wish to obtain forgiveness. Such a confession is usually made, either in writing, or orally, to a pastor, before witnesses, but not necessarily to a public audience.

M. G. T., Albany, N. Y. What is a clipping bureau?

A clipping bureau clips accounts dealing with topics in which its subscribers are interested from papers all over the country. For instance, if a person is interested in the woolen industry, the bureau, on receiving the order, clips out every notice it can find dealing with the topic. We are unable to answer the other questions sent.

H. S., Tacoma, Wash. Would it be right to teach a class of university students in German in Sunday School?

It would be altogether out of place to do so. Sunday School is for spiritual, not secular, instruction.

London's Open-air Schools for Child Consumptives

LONDON has for some time carried on outdoor schoolroom work in the Cator Street London County Council School for children of tuberculous tendencies. Classes study under the care of an instructor who has made a study of outdoor education. The usual studies of the primary school are carried and the opportunities for the practical application of such studies are much more evident than in a schoolroom. Contour maps of the surrounding country are made use of, the children are given regular gymnastic drills, and classes in natural history for the study of plant and animal life are part of the system.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

FOR the benefit of our new subscribers we give a brief synopsis of the preceding chapters of Mrs. Amelia E. Barr's most interesting story: The scene is laid in New York, at the time of the Stamp Act, in 1765. Captain Jansen Van Vroom was a rich, retired sea captain, and lives with his wife Katrina in a fine Dutch house, by the North River. They have a daughter, Virginia, whom they wish to marry to a young sea captain, Batavius De Vries, for whom she has little liking. She is really in love with Joris Artaveldt, a dashing young officer. Virginia's dearest friend is Lady Rose Harley. Captain Van Vroom is bitter against the enforcement of the Stamp Act. Joris and the two girls dine at the captain's house, after which the two men leave. Arent Van Vroom, the son of the house, appears and is introduced to Lady Rose. The next morning Van Vroom describes the condition of New York to his son, and the things which were leading to the breaking point. The Lady Rose becomes interested in Arent when he describes his voyages. Joris declares his love for Virginia, and she returns his affection. Arent, her brother, falls in love with Lady Rose, who gives Virginia a handkerchief embroidered with strawberries. She herself has one like it. Virginia gives Joris the handkerchief. Politically, things grow worse. The people determine to resist the oppression of the British government, and wear only home-made things. Batavius De Vries suddenly returns, expecting to marry Virginia. He is a coarse, bombastic person, and Lady Rose is disgusted with the idea of Virginia marrying him. Joris tells his father of his love for Virginia and he offers no objection. Lady Rose plans to get Batavius drafted into the naval service. Virginia protests to her father against marrying Batavius.

"I DO not wish to marry him," said Virginia." "He called me 'his Virginia.' He spoke as if I had promised to be his wife. I have not promised Batavius. I will not marry him. Father, tell him what I say."

"Not that," said Jan. "I would cut out my tongue first. I promised him thou should be his wife. For many years I have made him this promise. Not even for thee will I forswear myself. Thou must marry him. It is a happy fortune for thee. He is a good man, and——"

"Do not tell me again that he is moral, and respectable, and rich, and knows how to make money. I care for none of these things. I will never marry him."

Then Van Vroom stood up, and looked down upon the shrinking, sobbing girl with anger.

"Thou shalt surely marry Batavius," he said. "I will have the banns published in the kirk, and give thy betrothal feast before the members of the great Assembly go back to their homes. Few of them have ever seen a Dutch festival, or been inside a Dutch home; and we will show them! Yes, indeed!"

"The banns, father! That is too cruel. How could I sit in the congregation and hear myself named with—that man! I could not. I should shriek and faint."

"Thou would not. I would see to that. I on one side of thee, Batavius on the other, we should carry thee out very quickly. And tell me, what would the women say? That thou did it for a scene—to show thyself off—to be specially noticed—such, and such like, would be the least of their kind speeches."

"Oh, I know! I know! But, father—banns are now old-fashioned. Why not a license from the Governor?"

"That is the truth. I will get a license, if it pleases thee better. Then thy wedding must come before the first of November, for, sure as I live, I will have no stamped-paper wedding in my family. Fix the day in this month—any day that pleases thee—and I will get a license."

"And sure as I live, I will not be married until Saint Nicholas Day."

He smiled at the quoting of his own words, and laid his hand gently on Virginia's head. "Very well," he answered, "then it is the banns! for after November the first, no marriage without the stamped paper."

"Then how can the banns make marriage legal on the feast of Saint Nicholas?"

"In the kirk thou will be married by the law of God. There is no three-penny stamp on His service, yet—whatever there may be later."

"Joris put his hand on his sword"

"Fader! Fader dear! Pity thy Virginia! She does not wish to marry any one. Let her stay with thee."

"Some day I shall go away from my Virginia—away forever. Then, if before that day I have married thee to a good husband, I shall go with an easy heart. See now, it is my love for thee, only my love for thee."

"Choose some other good man, father. I hate Batavius."

"Peace! I will choose no other than Batavius."

"I will not marry him. I will not. That, I promise thee."

"Nothing care I for a mouthful of woman's words. Nothing at all. I will go away from thee now. A cruel daughter thou art; but so, even against thy will, I must still be kind to thee. When four years old, thou came near to death, a great sickness was on thee, and thy medicine, no one could make thee take it. Then I opened thy mouth, and held tight thy nostrils, and made thee swallow it; and so thy life was saved. Now, it is 'I will not take Batavius,' but he is for thy life's welfare, and I shall find means to make thee take Batavius."

"Not till the world ends."

"On, or before, the feast of Saint Nicholas."

Then Virginia burst into hysterical laughter, and the Captain was so distressed and annoyed that he went out to the stables, and in his haste to escape forgot both his outer coat and the beaver cap for his head. Madame heard the heavy door clash, and as soon as she noticed her husband's absence she noticed also that he had gone into the night air without protection from its cold, damp wind. She looked reproachfully at Virginia, sent the coat and hat to her husband, and then said in a hard, tense voice:

"I am ashamed of thee. Everything that a reasonable woman could desire is at thy feet; but because of a lanky boy, with a sword at his side, t would kick thy own happiness to Back of Beyond. A selfish daugh I have nursed at my breast."

"Mother, you married the man loved. Only the same right I wa

"About my love, and my marria nothing is known to thee, nor ever thy father. Learn this, every he has a closed room, and always ther some tragedy of love locked up in Thy father is planning for the ha ness of thy whole life, and, for part, I do not wish to see all his ho destroyed by a lovesick boy, like J Artaveldt."

"Mother, I am sick and tired. Rose, when she returns, I have g to bed."

"That is well. Thy father can c then to his warm fireside. A sad th it is for a good father to be dri from it by an ungrateful, unlov daughter."

So Virginia, with an unacce good night on her lips, went to room, and in an hour's time R joined her there. She found her fri in a more angry and determined m than she believed possible to Virgi but the girl had been slowly nurs her anger into a passionate sense resentment against her father's ty ny and her mother's sympathy wit

"Already, Rose," she said, "t have risen difficulties that neither us thought of," and she slowly plained the subject of the marri banns and the betrothal feast.

Rose put both difficulties contem ously aside. "Virginia," she answe "all you have to do is to stubbo stick to your assertion, that you not marry any one—not even the ha some George, Prince of Wales, or still handsomer George, heir of A veldt—until Christmas. Betrotha not marriage; it is only a prom As for the Dominie calling your na together in the kirk, he will only doing what all your friends and quaintances have already done, wh ever it so pleased them. Let th bann and betroth you as much as t like; but while the world stands, you are in it, or on it, let no one ma you until I return."

"You would have me go to the k and sitting beside Batavius, hear marriage with him announced to whole congregation? How coul bear it, Rose?"

"It will not kill you."

"Very nearly it will kill me."

"No, you are made of better st You will smile a scornful negative, tell your heart not to hurry, or wo itself; that every word is a lie. Th is another thing—your father ca publish your banns until you are trothed; so then the betrothal f must come before the kirk affair."

"Mother told me to-night that tice Artaveldt is to be married s Joris will have a step-mother," Virginia, after a pause.

"Good for him! If his step-mot pitches him into the world, she wil him a kindness."

"He has been in the world, Rose-n two wars."

"My dear, do you call Canada world? It is a wilderness, with li settlements of French peasants Scotch gentlemen—the latter ex because they could fight, but could conquer, for Prince Charlie. A vrld, Virginia! A poor world! Joris rist go to England—or to India."

'This evening he did not call."

'How unreasonable you are to exrpt it. I am reminded now of another tal you may have to meet. I think yur father will forbid him to call at a. In Captain Jan's place, I should."

(n fact, this was exactly the position tken by the Captain, and Rose had hrdly started on her journey when t opportunity for such an order cne. He was standing at his garden gte, and saw the young man appaching him. In a moment he realid what he believed to be his duty, ad he did not hesitate in its perfmance.

Joris came pleasantly forward, and ofered his hand with a smiling "Good mrning, Captain."

'Good morning, Joris. Come into n garden one ten minutes. I want to tk with thee." Then without preliminry, or conventional platitudes, he sd bluntly, "I do not wish thee, Joris, tcome to my house again—not for a lile time—not until Virginia is marrd."

'Sir, I love Virginia as my own soul. Icannot keep away from her."

'It is must, not can, or cannot, in ts case. My mind is made up to mrry my daughter to Captain De Vies."

'No! no, sir! That is impossible."

'See here, now—talk with some good sse, or go away. Virginia is to be t wife of De Vries before Saint Nicholas' feast. Now, then, treat her ipended husband as thou would like I Vries to treat thee, if in his place."

'His place! No, it is my place. Vrginia has promised to marry me, ad only me. I trust her promise. I vl not give it up."

'And who gave a girl of eighteen t power to make such a promise? Ad why, when it was made, did thou rt come to me, and speak out at once? Iwill tell thee—because an underhand, bckguardly thing thou wert doing."

'Sir, I am at least a gentleman."

'A poor kind, I think. Thou had no rht in my house, wooing my daught without my permission. So much tou knew. A great fault thou hast l her into, for since ever she was six yars old, Virginia has known she was tbe the wife of Captain De Vries."

'A child's promise is nothing. I hd her woman-love vow. She will kp it—in spite of all extremities."

'She will not. She shall not. If ureasonably thou wilt talk, then I am fced to talk roughly. Go thine own vy, and come not into my daughter's vy. I forbid thee to speak to her in r house, or out of my house."

'I shall see Virginia, somewhere, s. I will speak to her wherever I s her."

'All that I wish to say to thee is sd," and he civilly touched his beaver co with his right hand, and went into t house, shutting the door very decedly behind him, though Joris was anost on the threshold.

Almost blind with grief and passion, t young man stumbled through the gteway. His nature bled in every se of it. He felt that he had been btally assailed, and there was even ameasure of astonishment in his grief. Iery hope seemed to have so suddenly fled him, and about the sorrows of yuth there is a terrible finality—the el of life is not more tragic than the el of love. For a few minutes he had snething of the awful experience of a ost soul; he knew not which way to trn for comfort or help.

Then he remembered Lady Rose. Se would certainly be on his side, so h went home and wrote her a letter; bt as he did not know that Rose had gne to Boston, he sent it to the fort. Tere it remained some days before t Governor forwarded it; and naturally he waited in vain for an answer. He watched the Van Vroom house, wandering in all the city streets Virginia had been accustomed to visit, but for nearly a week all his efforts ended in despairing disappointment.

Then suddenly one afternoon little Katherine Van Heemskirk came to his aid. He met her going up Broadway with a letter in her hand, and instantly hope's encouraging whisper thrilled his heart.

"Katherine," he said, "you are going my way. May I walk with you?"

"To see Madame Van Vroom I am going," she answered, "and with me thou may walk, Lieutenant."

"Listen to me, Katherine. I am in trouble. Do you know Virginia Van Vroom? Will you see her this afternoon?"

"My friend Virginia? Very likely I shall see her."

"I love her so much, Katherine. My heart is breaking to speak to her. Can you imagine how I suffer?"

She looked sadly into his face, and gently nodded her head, but she did not speak.

"I want to see her once more—if it be only to bid her farewell forever. You understand, Katherine?"

Again she answered with a nod, but she also lifted to Joris beautiful eyes, full of warm, intelligent sympathy.

"Virginia loves me, Katherine, just as I love her, but Captain Van Vroom is going to force her to marry Batavius De Vries."

"Him! A very disagreeable man he is. To my sister Joanna he makes love; bear him, I cannot."

"I have a letter, Katherine. I have been watching many days to find some one who will give it to Virginia. Can you?"

Without a word she held out her hand for the letter, and then slipped it beneath her bodice.

"Let no one else see it, Katherine."

"Virginia only."

"She may give you a letter. I will wait for you, for if I go further I might be seen from the Van Vroom house."

In about half an hour he saw Katherine returning. Batavius, carrying a small parcel of wool, walked ostentatiously at her side, and when they overtook Joris, Batavius, with an offensive leer, said, "Good day to you, sir. I have forgotten your name, though it is not my way to forget names, if they are of any importance."

Joris gave him a point blank angry stare, but answered him not in words.

"Sir, you have not any good manners, I think."

"If the young lady was not with you, I would—" and Joris put his hand on his sword, with a motion more significant than words.

"Oh! Oh! You would fight me. Good! Come to The Arms of Stuyvesant and on her deck I will lend you a cutlass."

"Captain De Vries," said Katherine angrily, "give to me my wool;" and having taken it from him, she stepped to the side of Joris and said:

"Lieutenant, kindly see me safe to my home."

A Meal in a Minute

There's many a time when you want a meal ready-cooked.

You are tired or hurried, or unexpected guests come in.

Think then what it means to have the pantry shelf laden with Van Camp's Pork and Beans.

You can serve them cold in a minute. Or put the can in hot water and serve them hot—as fresh and savory as when they came from our ovens.

Not a common meal, but the best dish of its kind that any chef ever created.

Plump Michigan beans that are baked in steam ovens—nut-like, mealy and whole.

Tender, corn-fed pork.

Tomato sauce made from whole, luscious tomatoes, ripened on the vines.

And all baked together—an inviting blend of pork, tomato sauce and beans.

It would take 16 hours of soaking, boiling and baking to prepare such a dish at home.

Then the beans would be broken, because you bake in dry heat.

They would not be digestible—would ferment and form gas—for lack of sufficient heat.

And the tomato sauce which we bake in would be added on the top.

Telephone now for a dozen cans, then watch the pantry shelf. For you'll find it hard to keep Van Camp's on hand.

When your folks once wake to how good beans can be they'll eat more than you think. It is well to have it so, for beans don't cost a third as much as meat. And they are 84 per cent. nutriment

BUNNIES AND BOYS

The Story of a California Rabbit Drive

By Rev. ERVIN S. CHAPMAN, D.D.
Author of "The Stainless Flag"

[The article entitled "Bunnies and Boys" is published in this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, for the benefit of those who were formerly readers of THE HOME HERALD, in which publication the earlier chapters of the same series of articles appeared.]

PART IV.

THEY cannot now escape by breaking through the walls of the corral, nor through the fences, which are so constructed as to keep them in. The one remaining method of escape is to break through the serried column of the advancing men. But now that gives but little promise of success. The cordon now must move over the fan-shaped space between the fences, and as it moves toward the open gate of the corral it constantly diminishes the space on which the rabbits are, while the converging fences force the shortening of the cordon which makes more compact and harder to break through that seemingly invincible wall of living men.

And now the rabbits realize their peril, and wildly seek a passage to the freedom they have lost.

No writer's studied words, nor stroke of skilful painter's brush can fittingly portray the consternation that prevails among the imprisoned bunnies when the strong and compact walls of the corral and fences rudely turn them back, and in vain they dash against the solid ranks of strong, determined men. The merry twinkle of their eyes is gone and in its stead a glassy brilliancy of fear is seen. They rush from side to side of the enclosure and yielding to the pressure of the advancing human wall they crowd more nearly to the open door of the corral. In vain they leap and bound and dash against each other and against the enclosing walls. Their efforts everywhere are unsuccessful. They are strong and agile and marvelously fleet of foot, but vain are all their efforts to escape.

They are like the victim of the boy drive who when he comes to realize his bondage is powerless to escape. When first he promises to put away his cups he thinks he has an easy task, but soon the raging thirst returns and his will, made feeble by his long indulgence, yields with scarce the semblance of a struggle, and he finds himself again in the clutches of his cruel enemy. It is not always, nor most frequently, that men who thus become the slaves of rum are by nature weak or lacking in the traits of noble manhood. The boy drive gathers in its strong enclosure some of the brightest gems of human kind. Men of highest type, with native, rugged strength of character, brainy, brave, magnetic, have, at the zenith of their years, reached that station in the boy drive at which they cannot break away from their degrading bondage to alcoholic drinks. Millions of such men, like bunnies in the drive, when near the gaping prison gate, have vainly fought like heroes to escape and sadly fallen back, only to renew the unsuccessful struggle.

Giant Victims of the Boy Drive

During my years of public life, especially when serving as a clerk in Congress, I know many princely men filling exalted stations in the nation, but utterly unable to control their appetite for drink. They were brave when in the fiercest battle and never yielded to the foe. But the amber liquor, when it came, instantly transformed them into craven cowards and caused them ignominiously to strike their colors. They were not drunkards. They were only regular partakers of intoxicating beverages, but had come to realize that convivial habits had woven around them fetters which they could not break nor cast aside. They were not like the rabbits in the strong-walled prison with the door made fast. They had not yet quite reached that point in the barbaric boy drive. They were like the bunnies out in the field, but near the termination of the drive, and realizing with alarm the bondage they were in.

One of Many Mighty Victims

I am thinking now of one rare man who came into my life at Washington during those eventful years. He had been a general of distinction in the Union Army and those who knew him on the field declared "He was a model soldier." At the time of which I speak he was in charge of a vast business enterprise which he was pushing with tremendous force. During our acquaintance I had come to hold him in very high esteem, and it was with very great delight that one morning I was able to place within his hands a paper duly signed which he had asked me to secure for him, if possible, and which he said would be of priceless value to him in his work.

He seized my hands with grateful joy, and said, "Young man, you have done me a great service and I am more than thankful for your kindness. Sometime I hope to do as much for you. Come and take a drink with me." I gripped his hand with vigor, and replied, "General, I thank you for the spirit of your invitation, and if there were a living man with whom I would drink, you would be that man, but such a man does not exist nor ever did."

"What," he said, "you do not mean to say you never drink!" "Never," was my reply, "and God helping me I never will." And as the tears came to his eyes and ran down his bronzed and furrowed cheeks he clasped my hand so vigorously that I could feel the quiver of his stalwart frame as with sobs and sighs he said, "Come, my dear young friend, and live with me. Be my confidant and assistant. I will give you a royal salary and keep you with me day and night. This drinking habit is rushing me to ruin. Every morning I resolve that not a drop shall pass my lips that day, and then as I walk down the street, the friends I meet will ask me in to drink and when I politely ask to be excused they urge their invitation and take me by the arm, and before I realize what is being done the morning pledge is broken and the evening finds me far the worse for liquor. If I had with me a man who never did indulge, and who cannot be induced to break his pledge, he could aid me to become a man again."

What a scene was that! A great and mighty man, brainy and battle-scarred, with intellect and will and strength of personality to lead an army of one hundred thousand men in battle, or successfully to control millions of capital in business enterprises—such a man clinging to a man of less than thirty summers and weeping like a child as he entreats that youngster to become his strength in battle with the foe that holds him in a galling bondage.

That man was in the boy drive and by the harmful influences of private life, and of the army, he had been iven from a model boyhood to the llpless feebleness his words so graphitly described when with a normal owth he would have been at the very ime of life. That man was not a unkard. Those who knew him well d not regard him as in serious dangr of ever sinking into helpless and graceful inebriety. They did not low the struggle he was making to eak through the cordon which vicious ifluences had cast about him. He d long been in the boy drive, and as olish rabbits yield to the cordon that ives them into bondage when they ght have dashed bravely through the en gaps to freedom, he had when ung and strong and amply able to sist the tempter, gone tippling onrd to the fixed, unyielding habit hich now enthralls him. He had just gun to realize his danger and when I sought to lead a sober life he was azed and terrified to find himself so ak and his fetters so unyielding. I uld not help him as he asked me to, t I have been informed that he found liverance, and I now think of him as e among the millions of our brightd, bravest men led into bondage by noble influences and kept there by ir friends.

Effort to Break the Cordon

During those years in Washington I low officially and by personal acaintance many rare and gifted men o were in the barbarous boy drive d were far along, some near the te of the corral and some within t strong enclosure. Senators and ngressmen were daily in their seats t fit for duty and sometimes maudlin unk within the halls of legislation d upon the streets. With the fond pe of snatching from the ranks of t fast moving boy drive some of se public men, a congressional to- abstinence movement was inaugurd with Hon. Henry Wilson, Senor from Massachusetts and later ce-President, a man of God as well a great statesman, at its head.

No words can ever half disclose the relations of that effort to induce our tion's legislators to pledge their hono to a life of manly, firm sobriety. I was like the lifting of a hazy cloud t veiled from view the field on ich the rabbits in a drive, when ar their prison door, first realized ir danger and fiercely struggled to ape. Men in whose veins there wed the blood of noble ancestors; n of imperial gifts and thorough ining; men endowed by nature with t power of leadership and with ong wills that ruled the counsels ere mighty men conferred respectin law and statecraft; men of heroic ture and majestic mien—such men these were of the number who only b the most heroic efforts gained their edom. Against the habits of a lifee they contended and against the ong, unyielding cordon of evil influees that had brought them to their akness and enthralment.

And many failed like the procrastining bunnies, not from the lack of ong endeavor, but because their efts were too late. Those great temprance rallies held in the House of presentatives that memorable win caused those distinguished men to lize their danger and stimulated ir purpose and endeavor to reform. t one of all their number ever amed how far advanced he was ng the road to ruin, nor how determed were the forces that had urged n on and were holding him in their yielding grasp. I could tell of ny who at those public meetings d the thrilling story of their strugs to escape the drunkard's doom and ir rapturous joy at their deliverce. It is not quite impossible, though y difficult, for bunnies by furious, severing efforts to escape when near gate of the corral, and it is not quite impossible, though very difficult and rare, for men to turn and lead a sober life after they have almost reached the drunkard's realm of utter helplessness.

Escape Now Impossible

But escape is quite impossible after the gate of the corral is tightly closed and all the bunnies are within its strong enclosure. Those terror-stricken bunnies may dash for freedom, but they will not find it. They cannot scale the wall nor burrow beneath it to the boundless liberty from which they have been driven.

And that rabbit drive corral, that prison pen from which escape is utterly impossible, in this analogy represents the realm of utterly helpless inebriety. And as no rabbit can escape from the corral after its gate is closed, so when a man becomes a drunkard his fate is sealed. No human effort or human help can restore him to sobriety and manliness. He may make heroic efforts to escape and faithful friends may by their sympathy, encouragement and help lift him to a higher plane, but the strong walls of the dismal prison into which he came are all around him, and no human ministration can so supplement his own endeavor as to restore him to his lost estate. The rabbit drivers are not more certain of the bunnies they have driven into the corral than are the evil forces certain of the one whom they have driven to habitual inebriety.

A Hercules in Chains

Among the mighty men who were awakened at the nation's capital, of whom I have already spoken, I heard one tell the thrilling story of the desperate struggle by which he brought himself to sign the pledge of total abstinence. It was a story such as having heard, one never could forget. He was one of the nation's greatest rulers, yet that night he told with pathos that could not be surpassed the story of his years of helpless slavery to drink, and then with rapturous ecstasy he thrilled the vast assembly when he announced that, having signed the pledge, he was forever free. He had no lack of human help and he made as brave a fight as ever marked the history of man. But he lost the battle, went back to the enticing cup, and soon was at his journey's end. He lost the battle long before I heard him make that eloquent address. Great and mighty as he was, with large and fertile brain and love as boundless as is human need, that model ruler and far-seeing statesman was lost when vicious customs and pernicious agencies forced him into the corral and closed and barred the door. For years he lived in that imprisonment of bondage to his appetite and still was loved, as few are loved, for his rare and noble qualities, and he was honored for his great service to his State and nation, but in the boy drive he had reached the point where, as with ancient Israel, "There was no remedy."

"Mighty to Save"

I am not forgetting nor doubting the ability of One who "is able to save to the uttermost them that draw nigh unto God through him." But I am speaking now of human possibilities when one has reached the realm of slavery to drink. And all the way along the track of the accursed boy drive that noble-hearted lad, that soulful, generous, magnificent young man, that brave and brainy leader, had been forced by vicious customs until the evening of his life was full of tragic struggle, fears and futile efforts, and at last he fell.

BUNNIES AND BOYS

heart's blood boiling hot with quenchless thirst for rum. He fell as weak as infancy and at a time when his great sinews should have had the strength of Hercules. He fell just at the prime of life, not when the flower gave promise of a plenteous fruitage, but when the rich, ripe fruit of great attainments hung in gorgeous clusters on his vine. Not when the evening shadows pointed eastward did his light go out, but when the noonday sun had just moved slightly toward the west; when at his best he should have been, and grappled with and solved the problems which his master mind by long and thorough training, and by years of faithful public service should have found but simple tasks. He fell when he was sorely needed in the movement for a broad and liberal reconstruction of a nation riven and torn by war's relentless strife. He fell most bitterly lamented by a people who realized their need of his wise and skilful leadership. Tears of joy leaped to the eyes of millions when the good tidings of his reformation flashed over all the nation, but down the cheek of sorrow swiftly flowed, as rivers flow, the scalding tears of grief when, after such a brief and tragic struggle, the great victim fell. He fell surrounded by a million men who like himself had come to be helpless victims of their cups, under the influence of the most iniquitous conditions, customs and collaborations that ever cursed the human race. And when he fell the bloody boy drive bastile in which he fell was full to overflowing of those who came there much as he had come and whose departure thence was like his own. And since that day when he went down, each year, a hundred thousand victims have been driven into that enclosure and sacrificed as he was sacrificed by the resourceful agencies that brought him there.

Bunnies Weep Like Babies

To each successful rabbit drive there is a tragic termination. The wild and terrifying tumult of the moving cordon ceases when the rabbits are all housed in the corral, and the gate is closed by sturdy men crowding thickly into that narrow entrance. But when the men leap into the corral and with clubs savagely begin the work of beating them to death the helpless bunnies, like ten thousand weeping babies, cry and rend the air with wails of anguish until sometimes the most inveterate rabbit hater turns deadly pale and trembling quits the field. Only men of iron nerve can prosecute this cruel slaughter and even such will sometimes, when the work is done, turn instantly and in silence hasten to their homes. Few who attend a rabbit drive desire ever to witness one again. Necessity may compel them more than once to join in such a movement, but few, if any, will for sport, aid or attend a rabbit drive after once hearing the heart-piercing shrieks of the terrorized and helpless bunnies, and the sickening sound of the death-dealing blows during the progress of the savage slaughter. A gentlemen of my acquaintance, when recently relating his attendance at a rabbit drive, solemnly and with much emphasis declared that he would end his own life rather than to witness such a scene again.

At no point is the analogy between the rabbit drive and the ruin of our manhood by the ravages of rum more accurate than at the tragic close. And as I write this story of the bunnies' child-like weeping a poignant pain is at my heart, my eyes are filled with tears, and in my thoughts I see the reader shudder, and I hear the angry verdict that the rabbit drive is too basely brutal for this age of tender human love and sympathy.

That may be true, but, reader, if all the cries of fear and suffering of the victims of a rabbit drive were multiplied by millions they would not equal the volume of sad remorse and conscious shame, of crushing disappointment and discouragement, of the groans and moans and smothering sighs, and pleas of penitence and prayer to God for help, which in a single hour ascend to heaven from the victims of the boy drive who have reached the bastile of imprisonment. What a very hell of agony must burn within the soul of one well born and bred, conscious of superior natural gifts, with native pride and high ambitions, who spends the evening of his day of life in such a place and plight and there with fear and trembling closes his eyes in death.

Closing Words

Some things there are respecting which there cannot be a doubt. We know that every rabbit that is slain within the rabbit drive corral was driven there for the sole purpose of being slain. We know that he reached that dismal destiny by yielding to the men who drove him to that slaughter. We know that every degraded drunkard was once an innocent child, free from all the consequences of a personal use of liquors. We know that each one of those degraded drunkards, of whom we have at least one million now within our land, was brought from that innocent childhood to his present sad condition by the influences I have named. We know that family, social, festive, saloon and official liquor drinking are as effective in bringing innocent boys to the condition of helpless inebriety as are the rabbit drivers efficient in their work of driving the timid bunnies into the corral. We know that if total abstinence from all intoxicants prevailed in the lives of our American boys not one of them would ever reach the drunkard's sad estate. We honor the boy who, like the escaping bunnie that will not drive, will not be coaxed nor flattered nor in any way induced to use intoxicating drink.

The existence of the beverage liquor traffic under the sanction of government and law is an infamy as black as can be found in the infernal regions.

We are familiar with the story of the ravages of rum, but we do not bring ourselves to realize its unspeakable iniquity. Knowing that this greedy monster gulps his millions at his meals and that our tender children are the diet on which he most delights to feed, we, by the law, enlarge his mouth and maw, and when we see his ravenous jaws close on the precious morsels we have helped to bring to his repast, we do not recognize their blood upon our hands, nor the deeper and indelible crimson on our souls. But painful though it be, permit this story of the rabbit drive to turn its revealing light upon your inmost being. See in the eyes of your imagination twenty thousand bunnies being driven to the corral for slaughter. Now close your eyes of thought and open them again upon the same scene and for bunnies substitute bright, buoyant boys, your own bright boys, now being driven to ignominious death. Close your eyes again and open them upon the rabbit drive corral when the bunnies are piercing the atmosphere with shrieks of fear and suffering as they are being clubbed to death. Now substitute boys for bunnies and you will have a picture of the truth I am by this story seeking to aid you to realize, that you may wash your hands and garments from the blood of those whom rum destroys, and may aid to drive the boy drive from our land and from the world.

CHRONOLOGY OF THE BIBLE

PROBABLY the best known of those who devoted their time and study to Bible chronology in the past was Archbishop Usher. After profound investigation, he came to the conclusion that man was created 4,004 years before the Christian era, and this theory was widely received. The dates given by Usher were inserted in the margins of the Authorized Version of the English Bible. Usher, however, has been superseded. The data on which he based his calculations have been discredited by modern scholars. Of these there are many in the field, the latest and one of the most helpful being Mr. W. S. Auchinloss, whose Chronology has recently been issued from the press of the Van Nostrand Company, New York, with an approving introduction by Professor A. H. Sayce, of Queen's College, Oxford, well known as an Egyptologist and Assyriologist. Mr. Auchinloss is of the opinion that the Bible presents no serious difficulties in the way of chronology, giving an unbroken span of fifty-three centuries. He gives an exhaustive account of the chronological data of the Old Testament. He does not depend upon one book or set of writings, but from a comparison of many deduces his conclusions. For instance: from Acts, Judges and Samuel he is able to determine the length of Samuel's reign over Israel. By a similar collation of extracts from different sources, he endeavors to prove his contentions throughout the work.

He places the creation of Adam at 5,500 B.C., and makes this the basis for his deductive dates, though he acknowledges that the chronology from Adam to Terah, father of Abraham, is only approximate. Of course, when chronology connects with modern history all is plain sailing.

The great fathers of the first three centuries, men like Origen, Eusebius and Clement of Alexandria, dwelling upon the Septuagint Version, placed the creation at 6,000 years before Christ, but later thinkers were inclined to a shorter period. Much controversy and bitterness arose over the long and short chronology. Most Jewish scholars, among them Maimonides, inclined to the shorter period. Melanchthon fixed the creation of man at 3963 B.C. Luther wrote, "We know on the authority of Moses that not longer ago than 6,000 years the world did not exist." The Roman Church, under Urban VIII., declared that the creation of man took place 5,199 years before Christ.

The same adhesion to the Hebrew Scriptures which influenced Usher brought many other celebrated controversialists to a like view. Lightfoot and Jansen, Salmeron and Scaliger, Petavius and Kepler, inquisitors and reformers, Jesuits and Jansenists, priests and rabbis united in the belief that man's creation lay between the years 3900 and 4004 before Christ, the majority, like Usher, inclining to the latter date. But coming down to the last century, the study of the Egyptian monuments revealed new evidence, overwhelmingly in favor of a vastly longer existence for man in the valley of the Nile than any which the theologians had given him. It is the discovery of these monuments that has revolutionized chronology, and altered the clock of Biblical time. Manetho professed to carry the origins of Egypt 30,000 years anterior to Alexander. There can be little question that Egypt had a high form of civilization at least 5,000 years before the birth of Christ, and this view is held by such eminent authorities as Sayce and Flinders Petrie. Such civilization presupposes a long period of development; but as to the beginning of this period we can scarcely even conjecture. It is wholly hidden in the night of time. At any rate the Egyptian proofs are utterly antagonistic to the accepted chronological system. And the discoveries in Egypt are confirmed by later researches in Assyria and Babylonia.

The "Inness" Comet, as Viewed from New York

In the middle of January, Professor Inness, of Johannesburg, South Africa, announced by cable the discovery of a new celestial visitor—a brilliant comet—in the southwestern skies. Astronomers in different parts of the globe immediately focussed their lenses, and several kept seeing the newcomer, which has been named the Inness comet. It was caught photographically a few evenings ago. The students of Columbia University, New York, made a detailed study of it. Professor Hagy says: "There is nothing remarkable about it save its brilliancy and its proximity to the sun. It is now diminishing rapidly and will soon disappear."

Here is what Professor Sayce has to say touching this subject: "On the shelves of the British Museum you may see huge sun-dried bricks, on which are stamped the names and titles of kings who erected or repaired the temples where they have been found. . . . They must have reigned before the time when, according to the margins of our Bibles, the Flood of Noah was covering the earth, and reducing such bricks as these to their primeval slime." Inscriptions, also recovered from the valley of the Tigris and Euphrates, show that a powerful civilization had grown up much earlier than can be made consistent with the earlier accepted chronology.

The supposed chronology of the period between the Flood and Abraham shows many elements of uncertainty. In the three versions of the Old Testament, the numbers widely differ. According to the Hebrew Bible, the sum total of the years between the Flood and Abraham was 427; the Samaritan gives 1,002 and the Septuagint 1,132. Therefore, supposing the "call" to have taken place in 1945 B.C., as above stated, the Hebrew date for the Deluge would be 2372 B.C., the Samaritan 2947 B.C., and the Septuagint 3077 B.C. These figures surely point to some corruption in all three versions.

The following table of the four approximate events in Bible chronology, showing the long and short systems according to Usher and Hales, two of the leading exponents of each division, can be compared with the modern tabulation of Auchinloss:

	SHORT SYSTEM USHER B.C.	LONG SYSTEM HALES B.C.	AUCHINLOSS B.C.
Creation . . .	4,004	5,411	5,300
Flood	2,349	3,155	3,045
Call of Abraham	1,921	2,078	1,907
Exodus	1,491	1,648	1,477

The Howard Watch

The great Railroads of the country have spent millions of dollars for automatic signal systems to safeguard life and property.

The signal-man by means of automatic levers works all the switches in the yard and prepares for the arrival and departure of every train.

Time is a factor in all traffic matters, and the signal system, perfect as it may be, depends after all upon the man who works the levers and the trainmen who observe the signals.

Back of the signal system is the time inspection service to insure the accuracy of employees' watches.

The time inspectors of 180 leading Railroads of America have officially approved the HOWARD watch for Railroad service.

A HOWARD is always worth what you pay for it. The price of each watch—from the 17-jewel in a Boss or Crescent gold-filled case at $35.00, to the 23-jewel in a 14k. solid-gold case at $150.00—is fixed at the factory—and a printed ticket attached.

Not every jeweler can sell you a HOWARD Watch. Find the HOWARD Jeweler in your town and talk to him. He is a good man to know. Drop us a postal card, Dept. W, and we will send you a HOWARD book of value to the watch buyer.

TEMPERANCE AT HOME AND ABROAD

—NEW YORK STATE, with its population of 8,067,308, has one license to every 295 persons.

—A RECENT convention of teachers in Indiana adopted resolutions favoring a course of education concerning the baneful effects of alcoholism.

—DURING THE last two years there has been a decrease of fifty per cent. in the number of men treated for alcoholism in the United States Navy.

—THE GOSHEN (Ind.) News-Times says it cost the county $1,567 to feed its prisoners the last twelve months. The previous year it cost $2,630. Cause: the suppression of the saloon.

—PROHIBITION PROHIBITS in Mississippi. In addition to the closing of the saloons, gambling is disappearing, pool halls are shut up and the Sunday law is being enforced in many counties.

—IN THE WHOLE country there was a decrease in the consumption of beer, amounting to 2,444,185 barrels, in the last twelve months. At the same time there was an increase in population of something like a million.

—THIRTY COUNTIES in Michigan are "dry," and every branch of business shows the good effects of the saloon's suppression. Manufacturers say their men give better service, and merchants report an increase in business.

—IN THOSE counties in Ohio which have abolished the saloon there has been a remarkable increase in savings bank deposits. Over fifty banks united in reporting an increase, which is definitely traceable to the spread of temperance.

—THE DANISH government has practically recognized local option for the rural districts, and a government parliamentary commission has recommended its introduction and also a limitation of the number of the saloons in the cities.

—GRANT COUNTY, Ind., is "dry," and its people are more prosperous than at any time heretofore. The general stores do better business, report prompter payments, and there is a general improvement of home life throughout the county.

—BATTLE CREEK, Mich., is under local option. A local paper reports 142 less arrests than last year and a saving of $6,362 to the county. Business everywhere is improved and, notwithstanding the loss from licenses, the State taxes are not increased.

—JAMES J. HILL, the famous railroad magnate, sent this order to the heads of all the branches in the vast railroad system which he controls: "Do not employ drinking men. If the men who are working under you drink, tell them they must stop or make way for men who will not drink." This order is the result of the investigation of a number of accidents on the railroads, almost all of which were caused by employees indulging in drink.

—THE Beverage Trade News, of Philadelphia, one of the leading organs of the saloon business, in reviewing the anti-liquor crusade of the last twelve months says: "Not in half a century has the trade been subjected to attacks so strenuous, or passed through a period so crucial. Never in any period has public thought been so directed to the relations the trade bears to society and government. . . . We have need of all of our resources and the wisest generalship if we are to turn back the tide that has threatened to overwhelm us."

—A NUMBER OF farmers, who were known to be drinking men, voted for "no license" at a recent election in Davenport, N. Y. When asked why they did so, they replied, "We are farmers, and we find that, when we go to town, we cannot resist the temptation to drink at the hotel bars. Often we take too many drinks, and we do not get back home in time to do our work; we spend a great deal of money which we cannot afford, and our farm business and homes are the sufferers. If there were no bars, we could go to town and vote and go home all right, and never think of drinking." The moral is: remove the temptation and the people will be sober.

—HERE ARE a few figures which should greatly encourage those who are fighting the battle for sobriety and good citizenship. They are from The American Issue:

Year	Population in U. S.	Living in "dry" territory
1870.....	3,500,000.....	9 per cent
1880.....	7,000,000.....	14 "
1890.....	11,000,000.....	18 "
1900.....	18,000,000.....	25 "
1910.....	40,000,000.....	50 "

It will be observed that the ratio has been steadily increasing in forty years, without any setback. It does not require much calculation to figure out what the next two or three decades may accomplish, if the friends of temperance fight shoulder to shoulder.

—GOVERNOR STUBBS of Kansas was in New York recently, on his way home from the Conference of Governors in Washington. Speaking of his State, the Governor told many interesting things. "There is not in Kansas an open saloon or a gambling house," he said, "and the problem of social evil does not exist there. In more than one hundred counties the prohibition law is thoroughly enforced. Nearly half the jails are empty, and frequently half the poor-houses and poor-farms are unoccupied. We have less illiteracy there than in any other State, with a few exceptions; fine schools, universities, colleges, and the people are of high moral character. We have more money per capita than any other State. Mortgages are well cleared up, and the farmers own eighty per cent. of the $200,000,000 of Kansas bank deposits. The sale of merchandise in "dry" towns has increased twenty-five per cent.; debts are promptly paid; the women and children have better clothes, and the cost of police administration has decreased."

—MAYOR D. L. LOVE, of Lincoln, Neb. (population 65,000), has this to say of the results of "no license" in that city: "The liquor laws are oftener broken when saloons are running than when prohibition is in force. There was more liquor sold in drug stores, dives and rooming houses when this town was open than since prohibition has come into force. It is a false assumption that there is less liquor sold illegally under license than under prohibition. The farmers report better conditions since the saloons were closed in Lincoln. Now they do not have trouble with their hired men getting drunk when they come to town. There is no doubt that Lincoln is cleaner in every way without the open saloons." The chief of police of Lincoln also adds his testimony regarding "no license" in a few significant words: "It cuts down the number of poverty cases we have to deal with. It also cuts down the amount of fighting and assaults, as is shown by the records. It cleans up the town, to a great degree, of sots and loafers and saloon hangers-on."

Sins of the Body*

A GREAT writer has said that the measure of a man's worth is his "capacity to do without."

The tendency of civilization is to create wants—wants of the body and wants of the mind. In this place, the wants of the civilized body only must be considered.

Some of these are legitimate, and are in the line of a higher and nobler development. Some of them are degrading and deadly. Even many of the best of them must be disregarded by the explorer and the huntsman. No elaboration of the art of living for them. Even the cardinal virtue of cleanliness gets scant observance at their hands. Plain food, hard beds, rough clothing suffice for them—and generally they are the better in health for their deprivations.

It is claimed by many students and philosophers that most of our bodily sins are the result of sheer, crass ignorance. In Dr. Reeder's interesting book, How Two Hundred Children Live and Learn, numerous cases are adduced in proof of this.

For instance, "an undersized boy of fourteen, when asked why he was so small for his age, said that he could not account for it unless it was due to smoking cigarettes, from about seven years of age. He did not know the habit would injure him. He is a good boy, and would no doubt never have formed the habit had he been properly instructed.

"M——, now fourteen years of age, brought with her when she entered the school four years ago a vulgar song, which she immediately proceeded to teach to the other little girls. The child showed little knowledge of the meaning of the song when questioned about it, and is now one of the most refined girls in the school.

"Just as school nurses and settlement workers find, in thousands of homes, deplorable ignorance concerning dietary and sanitation, so many teachers find distressing ignorance among school children concerning personal habits, purity, temperance, righteous living, and so on; resulting every year in a record of juvenile delinquency, vice and crime. In such cases direct instruction, if properly given, will go a long way toward prevention."

Jacob Riis says that ignorance is at the root of the political corruption in New York City, and probably in all of our cities. Men see no harm in selling their votes to the highest bidder; nor in raising the price of a piece of ground which they may have privately discovered to be desired by the city; and in a dozen other common crimes. They have never been instructed; and moral instruction is far more necessary than mental, especially in a republic. It is character, more than shrewdness, which makes the good citizen.

There is one form of wickedness, common in our cities, to which too little attention has been paid. Men throng to the theatres (not merely the low-class ones, but the best), among them many professing Christians, to gaze upon girl actors, who wear costumes and appear in parts which those men would never allow their own daughters to assume. If their daughters would be disgraced, those other daughters are disgraced by so appearing; and what right has any man to demand that, for his amusement, such disgrace should be foisted upon his fellow-being?

But the great abuse of the body at the present time lies in drunkenness. To most of us, the moderate drinker seems a potent aid to the drunkard. "Touch not, taste not, handle not," should be the motto of the Christian Endeavorer.

* Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, February 20. TEXT: Rom. 8: 1-14.

How to Pray*

THE directions regarding prayer in the New Testament are sometimes considered to be conflicting. Christ says, "Enter into thy closet." There we are to shut the door, and pray to our Father "which seeth in secret."

The apostle tells us, on the other hand, to "pray without ceasing." The old monks tried to reconcile these two injunctions by departing from the world, shutting themselves up in monasteries, and spending literally almost all of their time in active prayer and worship.

We know better now; and it is to one of the church fathers of the early days that we are indebted largely for our knowledge. He coined the great phrase, "To labor is to pray." So that we are led to infer that if we withdraw to our closets at certain times during the day, and if during the rest of the time we do good, faithful work for the promotion of high objects, we are fulfilling both commands. But neither one of these departments can be slighted without detriment to character.

Much more is said these days concerning the honest labor than concerning the private petition. It is to be feared that the latter is dangerously neglected by many Christians, yet it is a source of undreamed-of power.

One young Christian was accused by her sister, who roomed with her, of failing in her prayers.

"You used to kneel down and pray, and you don't now," she said.

"But I pray just the same," the sister protested. "It isn't necessary to kneel down to pray."

This is very true. God doubtless accepts our petitions, whether we offer them on the swiftly moving trains, or amid the press on the streets, or as we sail the sea; still, it is appropriate that at our morning and evening devotions we adopt a special attitude.

One result of this is a concentration of mind which is not likely to accompany any other posture. Your mind will probably wander, or you will drop away in sleep ere you are aware, if you depend upon saying your prayer in bed. Protect yourself from cold. Avoid undue parade before strangers; but, if possible, kneel before your Lord in a seemly and befitting way every day, retiring to the utmost privacy attainable. Then, in the best language you can frame, pray to your Father in heaven.

A shrewd observer once remarked that he could tell in a moment those in the prayer meeting who were in the habit of offering prayers at home. Their superior language and reverence, as if they had learned from long and intimate experience, betrayed their secret vigils before God's altar.

This judgment is not always just. A natural aptitude may sometimes cover all defects; while one who is timid or untaught may never be able, however faithful he may be in private prayer, to deliver himself in public; but no doubt the general conclusion is valid.

"Even desires turned toward God are prayers," says Dr. J. R. Miller. "Many of the most real prayers are never voiced in words. They are only breathings of the soul, longings of the heart. The true spiritual life is full of longings, and

> The thing we long for, that we are,
> For one transcendent moment."

It has been nobly said that the whole existence of some saintly soul is a prayer, and one heard of all men. "Thrice blest are those," says our great poet,

> Whose lives are faithful prayers,
> What souls possess themselves so pure,
> Or is there blessedness like theirs?

Farm Land the Basis of Value

In making investments the first consideration should always be the character of the security. Every investor to whom income is important should learn the facts about Irrigation bonds. They form, in our estimation, the safest way to earn 6 per cent.

Secured by a Thousand Farms

Irrigation bonds are secured by first liens on good farm land—sometimes a thousand farms. The farms are worth usually at least four times the loan.

The farms are exceedingly fertile, and are not subject to crop failures. Any one season's earnings are generally sufficient to repay the whole loan.

The bonds are additionally secured by a first mortgage on an irrigation system, in which the investment is often twice the bond issue.

Some Irrigation bonds are municipal securities, which form—as do School bonds—a tax lien on the district. Some are issued under the "Carey Act," where the State supervises the project.

They are issued in denominations of $100, $500 and $1,000, so one may invest either little or much. All are serial bonds, part of which are paid annually, so one may make long-time or short-time investments.

78 Issues Sold

In the past 16 years we have sold 78 separate issues of Reclamation bonds, all based on farm liens. Not a dollar of loss has resulted to any investor.

Our dominant place now gives us the pick of these projects. They are passed on by our own engineers and attorneys. And an officer of our Company constantly resides in the irrigated sections, watching the projects we finance.

We have issued a book based on all this experience—a book which every investor should read. Please cut out this coupon as a reminder to send for it. (16)

CLEAR-HEADED

Head Bookkeeper Must Be Reliable.

The chief bookkeeper in a large business house in one of our great Western cities speaks of the harm coffee did for him:

"My wife and I drank our first cup of Postum a little over two years ago, and we have used it ever since, to the entire exclusion of tea and coffee. It happened in this way:

"About three and a half years ago I had an attack of pneumonia, which left a memento in the shape of dyspepsia, or rather, to speak more correctly, neuralgia of the stomach. My 'cup of cheer' had always been coffee or tea, but I became convinced, after a time, that they aggravated my stomach trouble. I happened to mention the matter to my grocer one day, and he suggested that I give Postum a trial.

"Next day it came, but the cook made the mistake of not boiling it sufficiently, and we did not like it much. This was, however, soon remedied, and now we like it so much that we will never change back. Postum, being a food beverage instead of a drug, has been the means of curing my stomach trouble, I verily believe, for I am a well man to-day and have used no other remedy.

"My work as chief bookkeeper in our Co.'s branch house here is of a very confining nature. During my coffee-drinking days I was subject to nervousness and 'the blues' in addition to my sick spells. These have left me since I began using Postum and I can conscientiously recommend it to those whose work confines them to long hours of severe mental exertion."

"There's a Reason."

Look in pkgs. for the little book, "The Road to Wellville."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

KINDNESS

LET us be kind;
Around the world the tears of time are falling,
And for the loved and lost these human hearts are calling—
Let us be kind.
To age and youth let gracious words be spoken,
Upon the wheel of pain so many weary lives are broken,
We live in vain who give no tender token—
Let us be kind:

Let us be kind.
The sunset tints will soon be in the west,
Too late the flowers are laid then on the quiet breast—
Let us be kind.
And when the angel guides have sought and found us,
Their hands shall link the broken ties of earth that bound us,
And heaven and home shall brighten all around us—
Let us be kind.

Among the Workers

—SULLIVAN STREET MISSION, Elmira, N. Y., reports during the past year: total attendance, 8,683; professed conversions, 175. The mission is growing, and the prospects are most encouraging.

—MISSIONARY ROBERT H. BENDER, San Salvador, writes: "Through the gifts of CHRISTIAN HERALD friends I have been able to place a native to do evangelistic colporteur work for five months, at $10 (gold) a month."

—REV. L. M. COPLEY, Louisa, Ky., is a minister and missionary in the eastern part of that State, among a very needy mountain people. He would appreciate any contributions of good books, Bibles, Testaments and magazines for use in his work.

—MRS. GERTRUDE A. WILLIAMS, of the Christian Home for Women, Bridgeport, Conn., reports a growing and hopeful work. Twelve to eighteen persons are fed and cared for daily at the Home. The work has been in existence six years.

—ALL ARRANGEMENTS are now complete for the World Missionary Conference, in Edinburgh, Scotland, June 14 to 24 next. Meetings will be held in three halls. The approximate number of missionaries falling to the share of the American Executive Committee is seventy.

—THE UNION MISSION, Herkimer, N. Y.—a mission for the neglected children of that rural section—has conducted a regular Sunday School for these children for the last six years. The mission is only slenderly supported. Mr. D. A. Silliman, superintendent, will answer any inquiries concerning this work.

—ON SUNDAY, December 12, Hon. W. Jennings Bryan filled the pulpit of the First Presbyterian Church in Austin, Tex., his theme being "Missions." At 3:30 o'clock, at the University Auditorium, he spoke upon the theme "The Price of a Soul." He had large and attentive audiences at both services.

—THE BELLA COOKE MISSION, 239 East Twenty-seventh Street, New York, thanks those friends who have contributed to the mission through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD gifts of money or clothing. Superintendent Shaw reports that the mission did excellent work among the East Side poor during the holiday season, helping many deserving cases.

—REV. GEORGE W. TRUETT, who has been called "one of the most wonderful preachers since Moody," a Southerner and a remarkable pulpit and platform orator, has been preaching lately to great audiences at the Greene Avenue Baptist Church, Brooklyn, N. Y. His evangelistic meetings are among the most successful in the history of that church.

—THE "FAMILY ALTAR" movement has taken remarkable hold of the churches and the Christian public. Requests have already come in for more than 50,000 covenant cards. The Advisory Board is composed of well-known ministers and leaders in Christian work. The headquarters of the League are 602 Lakeside Building, Chicago, Ill.

—MISSIONARY ELIZABETH JANSEN writes from Cebu, P. I.: "The good work here is going forward encouragingly. We are passing through a fierce outbreak of cholera here. While at its height, the spiritual peace and trust in God among the Christians was wonderful. Among them all who had drunk from the cholera-infected wells only one died of sympahetic cholera, brought on by fear. Not one of the congregation of Christians was attacked by cholera. It is good to trust in the Lord!"

—EVANGELIST H. W. BROMLEY writes: "As a result of our union tabernacle meetings at Onawa, Ia., the city, which has had saloons for sixteen years, went 'dry' by vote of the city council January 4. The Mayor was among the converts, and joined the temperance crowd. In addition to our serics of men's meetings, we gave three separate services on the liquor situation. We thank God, and take courage. We begin tabernacle meetings with seven churches at Beresford, S. Dak., January 18."

—MR. F. B. WATERMAN, of the National Florence Crittenton Mission, New York, writes: "This morning I received a clipping from the New Haven Register, which refers to the 'Ycar's Splendid Benefactions,' and which states that Mr. Crittenton gave to charities $2,000,000. This is incorrect, for the reason that Mr. Crittenton gave nearly all his money to charity before he died; in other words, he was largely his own executor. The executor of his estate is unable to say as yet what the total value of his estate is; but I assure you it will be very far below the amount of $1,000,000. If you will kindly make this announcement in your next issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD you will greatly oblige."

Pastor Bartoli's Visit

THE Rev. Giorgio Bartoli, D.D., formerly a leading Jesuit, whose conversion to the Evangelical faith and reception into the Waldensian Church of Italy created a profound sensation in the religious world last year, is now on a visit to this country, with Rev. Dr. Muston, president of the Board of Evangelization of the Waldensian Church of Italy. Dr. Bartoli is one of the most learned and distinguished men who have left the Church of Rome within the last thirty years. His conception of Christianity is sound, his preaching clear, and he is full of sympathy for his brethren who are still entangled in the errors of Rome.

Rev. Giorgio Bartoli, D.D.

In his last great work, published by Hodder & Stoughton, London and New York, The Primitive Church, he explains why he left the Church of Rome and the order of which he had been a prominent member for twenty-seven years. He says in the preface of this book: "Had I listened to the world, or to the voice of the flesh, I should not have left the Society of Jesus, much less the church. I had nothing to gain, but everything to lose, by the change; although Italy is the happy land of compromises and peace at all costs. But I could not trifle with my conscience. I could not preach doctrines I did not believe; or teach, as divinely revealed, dogmas which I knew to be human inventions; nor could I defend customs, rites and usages which I held to be superstitious. My duty was clear. At one stroke I broke the chains of slavery."

Dr. Bartoli has united with the Waldensian Church, which has a continuous history of over one thousand years of evangelical doctrine. This Dr. Bartoli perceived during his study of religious conditions in Italy. The object of this visit to America is to give information about the splendid opportunities for Christian work that now exist in Italy, where the entire population of some villages, especially in the south, have joined the Waldenses. Drs. Muston and Bartoli also hope to interest the American people actively in the cause of Italian evangelization. An American Waldensian Aid Society has been organized in New York, and incorporated May, 1906, Bishop David H. Greer, of the diocese of New York, being president, and such prominent persons as Rev. D. Stuart Dodge, Rev. Henry Evertson Cobb, Rev. Henry A. Stimson, Mr. Gilbert Colgate, Miss E. Ogden Butler and Mr. Richard S. Barnes being on the board.

Mrs. Gilbert Colgate, 306 West Seventy-sixth Street, New York City, is the assistant treasurer since the death of Mr. Spencer Trask. Contributions for the Waldensian work may be sent to her at the address given above. Free literature containing valuable information about the Waldenses will be sent on application to Mrs. R. A. Dorman, 28 West 69th Street, New York.

Questions and Answers

S. E. P. R. G., Newark, N. J. Will you please give us information whether the ship Republic, which was sunk in midocean by a collision about eight months ago, was or is being raised?

Shortly after the Republic sank it was stated that efforts would be made to raise the vessel, or at least to recover the bodies of those who were killed in the collision. So far as we can ascertain, nothing has yet been done. The ship was not sunk in midoccan. It went down a short distance off the Atlantic Coast.

R. R., Bridgeport, Conn. Are there more than three classical orders of architecture? I saw it stated recently that there were more.

There are three main classic orders of architecture, all known by the style of their capitals and columns: the Doric, the Ionic and Corinthian. There are variations, known as the Roman Doric, the Roman Ionic and Roman Corinthian, but the classification in three styles is really correct.

J. A., Albany, N. Y. Can it be stated definitely and authoritatively that Lincoln ever at any time made profession of religion?

Various statements have been made on the subject, but probably the most reliable is that of the late Rev. Dr. James F. Jacquess, a Methodist pastor of Springfield, Ill., who was colonel of a Union regiment during the Civil War. Dr. Jacquess left a remarkable account of Lincoln's religious experience. He wrote that after a certain sermon, which he preached in Springfield and which Lincoln attended, the latter called upon him. "I invited him in, and my wife and I talked and prayed with him for hours. Now, I have seen many persons converted; I have seen hundreds brought to Christ, and if ever a person was converted Abraham Lincoln was converted that night in my house. His wife was a Presbyterian. He never joined my church, but I will always believe that since that night Abraham Lincoln lived and died a Christian gentleman."

Mrs. G. J. B. Why did not Christ commence his public ministry sooner than at the age of thirty? Was there any law among the Jews concerning the age for beginning public work?

We have referred this question to Rev. Leopold Cohn (an ex-rabbi), superintendent of the Williamsburg and Brownsville Missions to the Jews, Brooklyn, N. Y., who gives this explanation: "A Talmudical maxim, which existed for centuries before Christ and was accepted by all the Jews, is found in Pirkay Aboth, Perek V, Section 21, and reads as follows: 'At 5 years, a son must begin to study the Pentateuch; at 10, the Mishna; at 13, he is a son of the law; at 15, the Talmud; at 18, he must marry; at 20, he must pursue good works; at 30, he is in his full strength.' In accordance with that usage the Lord Jesus came, at the age of 30, to offer his full strength, and in this way to fulfil Isa. 49:4, 'I have spent my strength for naught, and in vain.' Neither before 30, nor after 30, would it have been so fitting as at 30 years of age."

B. C., Gretna, Neb. 1. Is Korea an absolute or limited monarchy? 2. What is the meaning of the proverb, "Calamity is the touchstone of a brave heart"? 3. While it is Sunday on one side of the "international date line," why is it Monday on the other? 4. Has the Cherry (Ill.) mine ever been opened since it was sealed the last time? 5. Has Turkey any control over Egypt?

1. Korea was formerly an absolute monarchy. In the last few years she has become a subject nation of Japan, and her ruler acts under Japanese direction. An official sent by Japan is now the real ruler. 2. A touchstone is a piece of fine-grained jasper, usually, and is employed to test the fineness of gold, consequently the expression means that calamity tests the human heart and shows whether it possesses true courage. 3. This can be answered by an explanation of the date line. This is an imaginary line fixed as the point where the reckoning of the calendar day changes. It runs through Behring Strait, and then down through the Pacific Ocean. East of this line the day is dated one day earlier than west of it. 4. Yes. 5. Egypt is a semi-independent State, practically under the control of Great Britain. In theory, the Sultan of Turkey is over-lord of Egypt, and the latter is a kind of vassal State.

Mrs. A. D., Carmen, Okla. 1. Is it possible for any person not believing in Christ to be saved? 2. How can one profess Christianity and deny Christ? 3. Explain Titus 3:10, 11.

1. We are not to judge any man; judgment belongs to God alone. 2. To confess Christianity and deny Christ is incongruous and a contradiction of terms, as Christianity, without Christ, would have no existence. 3. Heresy, in the meaning of the epistle, was the causing of schisms, or division, through self-will; doing and teaching what one might choose independently of the church, and not always necessarily as to fundamental errors of doctrine: The heretics in Crete, of whom Paul wrote, were men bent on having their own way, immoral in practice and unsound in principles. Such, after repeated admonitions, were to be shunned (not excommunicated), because of their evil influence upon others.

W. W. J., Gregory, Tex. 1. Please explain Luke 16:8; the last part of the verse. 2. Did Christ set up his church on earth?

1. The "lord" here mentioned is the steward's master, or employer, who, speaking in a worldly, unspiritual sense, commended his shrewdness, saying, "Men will praise thee when thou doest well to thyself" (or, as the modern phrase would say, "When you take care of Number One"). That is the world's wisdom, and Jesus remarks that "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light," because they excel them in the energy and shrewdness with which they prosecute their business. He meant, doubtless, that the "children of light" might do well to emulate their zeal and sagacity, applying it, however, to spiritual things. 2. Jesus organized no church, in the ordinary acceptation of the word; but he set up his kingdom in the hearts of men. The church, which assumed organic form in apostolic days, is the visible, outward expression of that kingdom. In this sense, it has its foundation in Christ and his finished work.

J. C., Barboursville, W. Va. Please tell me how to pronounce "De Luxe."

It is pronounced "De Loo-x."

A. E. R., Stockton, Calif. What are we to understand by the baptism of fire?

It has been variously interpreted to mean: (1) the baptism of the Holy Spirit, (2) the fires of purgatory, and (3) the everlasting fires of hell. Modern theologians take the view that the baptism of fire and that of the Holy Ghost are the same, and that it may be rendered "baptized with the Holy Ghost through the outward symbol of fire," or "as with the cloven tongues of fire," referring to the Pentecostal baptism.

S. U. E., East Schodack, N. Y. Why is John Mark regarded as nephew to Barnabas by some writers and as cousin by others?

He was a near relative of Barnabas (see Col. 4:10). The word "anepsios" is capable of being interpreted as near relative, cousin, nephew, or grandchild.

R. A. G., Central Butte, Saskatchewan, Canada. Why did Christ go into the wilderness for forty days to be tempted? Had he not the temptations of everyday life, as we have?

He was led of the Spirit (Matt. 4:1), a leading to which he gave voluntary assent. To interpret the mind of Christ, or the purpose of this sojourn which he was to undergo, has been the effort of many distinguished commentators, the general conclusion apparently being that he went voluntarily, in order that he might become familiar through experience with the devices of the tempter and thus be prepared for the work before him. It was to be a demonstration of the divine over the Satanic power, rather than a test of the for It is true that Jesus knew he would hav meet the ordinary temptations of everyday but this was to be a supreme test, in whic was purposed to draw out to the utmost li the powers of the evil one and to defeat t

A Remarkable View of the Great Flying Contest at Los Angeles, Calif.

SOME famous feats in aviation have been accomplished at Los Angeles. Among the contestants were Glenn H. Curtiss, Louis Paulhan, Lieutenant Beck, Charles M. Hamilton, and a number of others of less prominence. Great crowds witnessed the aerial flights and tremendous enthusiasm was aroused by the daring of Paulhan, who several times took up passengers with him, and on one occasion directed his aeroplane's course far out above the Pacific Ocean, covering a distance of twenty-two miles before he alighted near the point of starting. The composite photograph above is a clever combination showing all the leading contestants in one picture.

Bridge de La Concorde and Chamber of Deputies Before the Flood Water Covering One of the Squares

HOW PARIS FOUGHT THE FLOOD

AFTER inundating the most important sections of the city of Paris, besides covering hundreds of square miles of the country, and causing mage which in money is estimated at hundreds millions, the flood has begun to subside, having llen four feet as this issue goes to press. Strucres in the city itself, which it was feared would k with the falling streets or topple into the flood, ll remain in an upright position, but the ground neath them in many places has been honeycombed the rush of the underground torrents which rmed such an unusual feature of the disaster, and r a number of years to come it seems likely that ndation walls will crumble, cessitating a more or less mplete reconstruction.

It is a modern miracle that, th Paris turned into a sec- d Venice, with her streets r canals and her beautiful blic squares, such as the ace de la Concorde, turned to lagoons, with the water veral feet deep, so few lives re lost.

The death roll will probly reach one hundred, with e fate of quite a number in ubt. Some lost their lives trying to wade from their mes to places of business or escape from a building ich they knew was being dermined. These, while lking in water which would rhaps reach to the knee, uld suddenly find themves drawn through some eat hole into the sewers or bways beneath, disappearg as if snatched by an unen hand. To understand e strange condition of affirs where there was a flood ove ground and also one neath the city, one must reze that for centuries, for e purpose or another, Paris s burrowed, like a rabbit, underneath its streets d buildings. It has one of the most remarkable wer systems of the world, started centuries ago at ime when, according to our modern and erroneous ea, no one was supposed to pay any attention to unicipal improvements and the hygiene of munioal life.

There are over five hundred miles of these subranean sewers, and some of the larger ones are om fourteen to eighteen feet high. It is possible ride around part of this vast system of subterinean rivers in a small steam launch. The ride is en taken by tourists in search of a novel experience, but one trip is generally enough. Those who have read Victor Hugo's powerful but unpleasant story of Les Miserables will recall the wanderings of Jean Valjean in the gloomy depths of the city, far below the streets. Under ordinary conditions the water from the system flows into the river Seine. The mouths of these great sewers can be seen in any short walk along the quays. During the flood this was reversed, and the Seine, moved by the great mass of water coming down from the upper country, poured into the openings until the sewers were filled to the top, causing such a pressure that in hundreds of places it blew great holes in the roadways and the water burst through from below to flood the streets above, even in quarters which had managed up to that time to escape the overflow from the banks of the river.

A View of the Seine as the River Was Rising

In addition to its sewer system Paris has been rapidly completing an extensive system of subways, similar to those of Greater New York. These were flooded and the walls caved in, and now the work, costing many millions, must be done over again. As the American tourist wanders about Paris these days, after wishing for "seven-league rubbers" instead of the famous "seven-league boots," the impression is forced home that a good part of the beautiful city "must be done over again." The hopeful Parisians do not feel this way, but streets sag, there are great holes everywhere, and it seems probable that the foundations of many buildings are resting on mud, and that for months they will be gradually settling, a danger both to the passerby and the dwellers within.

The most ancient buildings, for which the greatest alarm was felt, seem to have stood the water test better than some of modern build. Stone and mortar in the passing years seem to have become amalgamated until the buildings are monolithic, and the surging currents gnawed in vain upon the ancient walls. The flood was at its height on January 28, and pumps were being worked all over the city in a frantic endeavor to keep the cellars clear, but it seemed a losing fight. Paris was as a city besieged. Trains were stalled in distant suburbs, and none were allowed to leave, as it was feared the tracks would give way beneath the weight of the cars. The surface trams had ceased to plow their way through water which reached almost to the firebox, and the telegraph and telephone systems were out of commission. The great electric light plants were flooded, and large parts of the city were in total darkness. The roughs of Paris, the Apaches as they are called, took advantage of this to go about in boats and commit depredations. Troops pursued them in rowboats, and in the fights which followed several of the robbers were killed. The French soldiers worked like beavers, rescuing people from their houses, protecting abandoned property and checking the attempts of looters to make a harvest in the flooded districts. The patrols were everywhere, wading through the water to the thigh or going in detachments to build dams or relieve people isolated in some building by the rising flood. Forty thousand soldiers of all arms, comprising the regular garrison of the city, were all in active duty. Sailors were also brought from the coast to help with the boats.

The water was flowing into the lower floor of the Louvre for several days. It did not reach, however, the art collections, the largest in the world, on the

What Jesus Can Do For a Human Life

TEXT—John 21 : 20

"The disciple whom Jesus loved"

FIVE times this clause occurs in the fourth Gospel. It is, as we are all aware, John's reticent way of referring to himself, and brings to the fore his two most striking characteristics: his extreme modesty, which would not let him so much as write his own name, and his exceeding lovableness, which drew to him the heart of the Christ and made him of all the twelve the Master's favorite.

But this is the John whom history introduces to us. It was quite another John that nature first introduced to Jesus. The man whom Jesus called away from his nets on Gennesaret and the man whom, three years after, he sent forth to help found his church were absolute opposites. And how do we know this? From certain incidental records that have come down to us. Who was it that, with his brother, asked the first place in the coming kingdom? John; and when the personal request failed they induced their mother to prefer it in their behalf. Nothing particularly modest or retiring in that, is there? But a forwardness and self-assertiveness that gets the condemnation of even this self-seeking age. To me this incident was typical, stamping John as by nature an ambitious, selfish and egotistic soul.

What Softened the "Son of Thunder"

Then there was that happening down in Samaria. Jesus, to reach Jerusalem, had determined to go through Samaria, and had sent the disciples to arrange for a friendly passage through that country. The Samaritans, because of their religious prejudice, refused it, and when the refusal came it so angered John and his brother James—they were both alike—that their instinct (mind you, I use the word "instinct," by which I mean their natural impulse) was to despatch these people on the spot. "Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven and consume them, even as Elias did?" What was that but an irascibility, a severity and vindictiveness which are the very opposite of the winsome and lovable?

Of a piece with these two instances was his word to Jesus in reporting their work: "Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and we forbade him, because he followeth not with us." What narrowness and bigotry! Is there any wonder Jesus rebukes them?

If we had no other data, the name which Jesus himself gave John would be sufficient to determine the question. Boanerges he surnames James and John—sons of thunder. Without doubt the name was descriptive, just as Didymus, Thomas' other name, Zelotes and Cephas, the surnames of the Simons, were, and indicate that John was originally of a vehement, fiery, impetuous temperament, the very antipodes of the John we know and love.

If this was all so, then what wrought so great a change? What so humbled this high-minded egotist as to make him hesitant about giving his own name? What so softened this stern son of thunder that he became at length the grand old man of Ephesus, as gentle as a dove, as kindly as a woman, and as benevolent as an angel?

The Two Wonderful Friends

It is related that at one time Mrs. Browning, when sitting next to Charles Kingsley, ventured to ask him the secret of his character—a character which all who knew him enthusiastically admired and praised. His answer was, "I had a friend." That is the answer John would give us. He had a wonderful friend. It was the young man from Nazareth. The two were young men together—Jesus and John. Jesus was only thirty when he met John, and John nothing but a lad, eighteen or nineteen at the oldest. Three years they spent in the closest and holiest relationship, Jesus giving John the place nearest him, and John yielding Jesus the secretmost place in his heart and life. And with this result: that Jesus found in John his first favorite, his chief confidant and his best representative; while John found in Jesus the sweetener of his spirit, the transformer of his character and the Saviour of his soul.

Three things that friendship did for John.

I. First of all, it eliminated the bad that was in him. This came about through a threefold process: training, the highest kind of training; tempering and trepanning—the cutting out of the evil. It was a severe handling which Jesus gave John—discipline, heart-searching, hardship, self-abasement—but when John completed the course he was given the highest diploma. The irascibility, the stern and selfish nature was gone, burned up, put away, and he stood out before the early church a calm, gentle, steadfast soul, a fountain of sweetness and light, the proto-saint of Christianity, and the finest illustration of what Jesus Christ was able to do for a human life.

II. If Jesus eliminated what was bad in John's nature, he also evoked all that was good within him, calling it into full exercise and giving it a degree of development that would never otherwise have been possible. In other words, John found himself, his truer, larger, better self, when he found Jesus Christ. How else account for that philosophic fourth Gospel, that poetic, profound last book of the Bible, or those three exquisite letters that are as chaste in spirit as they are choice in style—all written by whom? A humble Galilean fisherman, with not only no literary antecedents, but no educational preparation. How else explain the genius of leadership afterward shown by this man in the closing days of the first century? To what other cause refer his lofty self-control, his calm, strong serenity in the midst of the bitter persecutions that were afterward visited upon him? As the repeated kiss of the springtime sun will call what has long lain cold and dormant within the earth into life and bloom and fruitage, so the chrism of Christ's Spirit awoke within this man his deepest, fullest capabilities, and gave these the largest fulfilment.

III. If Jesus' influence eliminated the bad and evoked the good in John's nature, it also endowed and equipped him with what he did not before possess and could not have had from any other source. What did he thus get from Jesus?

How Jesus Influenced John's Life

(a) A new outlook into life Jesus gave him. Everything seemed different to him at the close of those years. God was different, more attractive, more beautiful, more lovable; the world about him had changed, he was not himself the same.

(b) A new purpose in life. Up to this time he had lived for himself; thenceforth the service of others was his passion and his pursuit. Jesus implanted within him a fountain of love, which flowed out into his own nature, fertilizing and enriching it, and overflowed in health-giving streams into other lives about him. Tune a harp to concert pitch, and every other string within sound of it will begin to vibrate with the same note. John's heart came so near to the heart of Jesus those years that it absorbed its warmth and learned its beat and rhythm.

(c) A new power for life. Jesus seemed to instal a kind of spiritual dynamo in John's soul, capable of unlimited energy and enabling him to translate his ideals into fact, to live his life after Christ's pattern, and to work mightily the works of God on the earth. Out from this threefold process of elimination, evocation and endowment, John came forth a high, strong, well-balanced, noble soul, proving a joy to his Master and a staff and inspiration to his fellows. He leaped at once into the place of leadership, was more and more respected, believed in, deferred to and depended upon, and when the time arrived for the kingdom to pass into the hands of a generation who should know Christ, not after the flesh, as the twelve had done, but after the Spirit, John became the bridge over which the royal procession passed. Outliving all the other disciples, he came down well-nigh to the close of the first century, placing upon his pupils the stamp with which Christ had sealed him and thus setting the pace for the church's life and work in the second century and in all the centuries since. So that to-day John's name is like the ancient vase that still retains the scent of the spikenard.

Men and women of like natural passions with John of Galilee, I am here to remind you that Jesus Christ still lives, is more alive indeed than when he trod the roads of Palestine; I am here to bid you remember that, since his triumphant death and glorious resurrection, since his ascent into glory and his resumption of his throne there, Jesus exercises greater power than when he was incarnate among us. I am here to declare to you what Paul emp- sized for the Christians at Corinth, that they know Jesus Christ in the Spirit may come neare him and enjoy a more vital and intimate rela with him than those who once knew him in the fl And because of all this I speak the words of sol ness and truth when I assure you that what Je did for John he can do, he stands ready to do, you. Enter into a like friendship with him, wl is far easier for you than it was for any of th first disciples, and the same results will follow.

The Tyranny of Sin

I. What is untoward and evil in your nat and mine Jesus is thus able to extract, as he di John's case. And to whom does not such an as- ance come like a stream discovered in the des What one of us does not feel the need of such e ination? It is the very process we have been s ing for years, but without success. You have evil bent of nature, which you despise, but car get the best of. You are a slave to circumsta or associations, and, try as you may, you are able to break away from their tyranny. A h has slowly grown upon you until you now feel y self to be its victim. Oh, struggling men women, fighting the odds and long since weary the encounter and routed thus far in it, believe m I speak the truth as it is in Jesus—a living, sonal, intimate friendship with the Christ of to- will correct all this. Not a loose, remote, indiffe touch, not a make-believe, abstract relation, bu actual, vital union of your heart and his heart, y spirit and his Spirit, that binds your will to his in the closest bonds—such a friendship will ext the evil from your nature as effectively as it for John.

II. Come under this sacred spell, and the g within us never hitherto awakened and unguesse yet he will likewise evoke. Two things are true me every day I live, namely, that every man is be than he seems. All of us have resources and cap- ties undiscovered by our friends and unrealize ourselves that need calling into expression and e- cise. And this also, that no one finds his dee larger, higher self until he finds Jesus Ch Great as were Socrates and Plato and Seneca, much greater they would have been if Jesus touched their lives! Was it not the touch of Ch which made Lincoln and Bright, and Gladstone McKinley, what they were? Get this touch, friends, and its effect upon you will be like ma There is a legend of a mysterious musical ins- ment once found in the garret of a baronial ca The musicians of the court brought it out and t to play upon it, but could get nothing but the r discordant notes. One day a great foreign ar visited the castle and was shown the strange seemingly useless instrument, only to rub off rust, straighten and tune the strings, and mak give out tones that sounded scarcely less than c tial. He was the maker of the instrument, an course knew how to repair and manipulate it. men, what you need is the hand of the Master u the keys of your lives, and then they will vib with the loudest and sweetest tones; then, and until then, will you be and do your best and f the highest end of your being.

What Jesus Can Do for Us

III. And the third effect will also follow in case, the bestowment of the largest possible en ment and equipment for life. Jesus will give us same elevated outlook into life, the same high pose in life, the same unfailing power for our and we too shall stand forth before the world proof and illustration of what Jesus can do f man when once he gets a full chance. Do you v these things? Of course you do. With your hearts you long and pray for such a change. member, it hinges upon one only condition—l living, constant, unfolding fellowship with Christ of to-day. When that is yours, John's tory will be repeated in you and for you.

To be made with Thee one spirit
Is the boon I longingly ask.
To have no bars 'twixt my soul and Thine,
My will to echo the will divine,
Myself Thy servant for any task.
Life, life I may enter through Thee, the door,
Saved and strengthened forevermore.

H Means to Die Penniless

"(H, yes, I've given away five or six millions," laughed Dr. D. K. Pe sons, the Chicago millionaire philan ropist, the other day, "but I'm me ly my own executor. I've acted as ne executor of estates, and I find it not a satisfactory plan. When a an desires to restore to the public the fortune he has accumulated let hir do it himself.

'I intend to die penniless," he continued; "if there are any other millionaires who want to have a lot of rea enjoyment, let them follow my example. I am going to live ten years oner, and during that time I expect to nothing but give away money."

This remarkable man is now on the verge of ninety. Beginning life as a doctor, he saved every cent he could, and he married a wife who helped him. She found that he had a talent for buying and selling, so she advised him to quit the practice of medicine and go into money-making.

"Why did she wish you to make money?" was asked him by a representative of the New York Tribune.

"To give it away," laughed the good doctor.

"How did you make your first dollar?"

"Shoveling snow in the Vermont mountains."

"How did you make your first big money?"

"I put my savings into Michigan timber land."

Mr. Pearsons never gives to beggars. He says: "I am no dispenser of charity. I have invested my money in four-seven colleges, in twenty-four States, but I made every one of them pay it. They had to raise three dollars to every one I gave."

Mr. Pearsons was born in dire poverty in the Green Mountain State, of Scotch-Irish parents. He rented an attic room, chopped wood to pay his rent and cooked his own potatoes and johnny-cakes, in order to get a college education. Unable to complete his college course, he taught school and studied medicine. Then he married a good wife. For fifty-seven years she was his boon companion, and her death three years ago was the severest blow of his life. Dr. Pearsons is tall, dark, strong-featured, and wonderfully vigorous for his years.

"I live on the plainest of food," he said, "and haven't tasted meat for four years. I sleep twelve hours out of the twenty-four, from seven to seven. People laughed at me when I sold my horses and carriages the other day. I would rid of them on purpose, so that I'd have to walk to keep my old legs under me. I'm going to walk five miles every day pretty soon."

The Best Paper in the World

Dear Dr. Klopsch: Received the book Hero Tales, also the calendar and picture, "The Daughters of Dorcas." I am more than pleased with all the premiums, as they are all far better than I expected to find them, although I have received from you no less than fifty-five books as premiums with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and ought to be repaid for a good thing, but this is way ahead of what I expected to get. You called for subscriptions to help pay the expenses of the Christmas dinner for the poor of the city; but I don't see how you can have much left to pay the bills after sending such books and pictures as you do for only $2. I have been a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for quite a number of years, and could hardly get along without it, and shall not do so as long as I can get the money to pay for it; for I think it is the best paper in the world, not only as a paper, but in the good work the proprietor is carrying on in every part of the world. Wishing you success in the future, and may God bless you, as you richly deserve, I am, etc.,

THE FATHER OF OUR COUNTRY

By Rev. J. M. FARRAR, D.D.*

GEORGE WASHINGTON did not have a little boy or a little girl to call him father. He was lonesome, and adopted all the people in this country as his children. We are glad he adopted us, as he certainly was a good father. We will call each State in our country a room in Father Washington's home, and each person in our country a member of his family. In 1776 how many rooms were in his home? That is right, thirteen. You do not know how many people were in his family? This you should know. There were 3,929,214. He loved every one; they were all his children. Why should we honor the "Father of our Country"? One reason is because of the troubles he had with and for the children. He had many trials, and, when fighting those great battles, he had more defeats than victories. Some one has counted forty times in his life when it did not seem possible for him to succeed.

DO you know the secret of his final success? Here is what a student of history says: "Washington was great in his courage and sticking qualities. He would stick until he succeeded." This was one secret of his success, but there must be some secret greater than this one. He met difficulties that could not have been overcome by merely sticking at his work. Listen, and I will give you what I believe was the secret of his success. Mr. Potts owned the house at Valley Forge in which Washington made his headquarters. One day Mr. Potts was walking along the creek, near the house, and heard a deep voice. Then he noticed a horse tied to a sapling. On looking further, he found General Washington on his knees praying. Washington believed God would hear and answer his prayer. Read his history and see if this was not the great secret of his success.

WE should honor Father Washington also for the way he trained those 3,929,214 children. After his death, the family did not quarrel. In each of the thirteen rooms they remembered what he told them, and kept on working together and adding more rooms to the house. How many rooms are now in the George Washington house? Forty-six is the correct answer. I am glad you know your history. I am sure you know that there are five rooms not yet built under the one roof. We call them territories: Hawaii, New Mexico, Arizona, District of Columbia and Alaska. Forty-six, plus five, fifty-one rooms! In these rooms are 87,971,000 George Washington children. There are also children in a far-away land, in a house we call the Philippines. If we call each island in the Philippines an ocean cubby, we have in this far-away home 3,139 cubbies, or small rooms. In them are 8,159,502 George Washington grandchildren. The father of our country could have been a king or an emperor, but he chose to be just a father, and to work for his children.

WILL a story help you to remember this? Then I will tell you a story. It is about a discontented stonecutter. He had a family, bright boys and girls, but he loved himself better than he loved his children. One day he said, "Would that I were rich, and could lie on a couch with silk curtains." An angel said, "Your wish is granted." But he soon tired of his soft couch and silk curtains and said, "Would that I were king." The angel crowned him and made him a king. As king it was his duty one day to review a very long procession of soldiers. The sun shone down with fierce rays through the silken sunshade that was held over him. This made him discontented, and he cried out, "I want to be the sun, for the sun is stronger than a king." The angel picked him up and threw him into the air. Before he had time to think, he was the sun shining in the sky. While he was rejoicing, a storm arose and hid his power. Again he became discontented and wished that he could be the cloud that was more powerful than the sun. The angel was very patient, and changed him into a big black thunder cloud. But there was a mountain that he could not move. He could cover it with the thunder cloud and the lightning would flash and the thunder roar, but the mountain did not move. Therefore he was very unhappy. "I wish I were a mountain of stone, stronger and more powerful than the stormcloud." In a moment he was a great mountain like Gibraltar, and boasted of his strength. The next day a man came with a chisel and hammer, and began to cut stones out of his side. "What is this?" he cried out in despair; "a man has power over me and cuts stones out of my body. Would that I were a stonecutter, for a stonecutter is stronger than a mountain, and a mountain is stronger than a stormcloud, and a stormcloud is stronger than the sun, and the sun is stronger than a king, and a king is stronger than a rich man on a silk couch." "It shall be as you desire," said the angel. In a few minutes he found himself a stonecutter, again at his old work. But he had lost the best years of his life.

THE "Father of Our Country," whose birthday we celebrate, was content to work without asking for honor and more power. Now we all honor him, and his name is power. At our national capital a George Washington Memorial Hall is to be erected. It will cost two million and a half dollars. Fifty thousand children are to give a dime each toward the cost. We love to honor this father.

"Remember the Maine"

THE Maine Monument Association, of Washington, D. C., with Rear-Admiral Charles D. Sigsbee as president, has now perfected its organization and has established headquarters at 910 Evans Building, Washington. The Maine's dead are buried in Arlington National Cemetery, at the national capital, and there the association aims to erect a monument to commemorate the Maine and to serve as an inspiration to patriotism for future generations.

Starting with the idea of making subscriptions truly popular and national, a plan of subscription is offered that should meet with spontaneous and broadcast favor. By simply sending one dollar ($1) to the Maine Monument Association, at the above address, together with name and mail address of the subscriber, the latter becomes a member of this patriotic association and receives by mail a certificate of membership and the badge-premium of the association. The badge is a black taffeta, navy-style, cap ribbon, bearing the title "Member, Maine M. A." in gold embroidered letters. The ribbon is thirty-six inches long and one and a half inches wide, and is made from the exact specifications of the navy cap ribbon. It is worn on the arm, hat, waist, hair, around the shoulders or muff, or in various decorative ways in the home. Mrs. John Hay subscribed one hundred dollars to help start the monument; others have subscribed liberally. The private schools of Washington are showing enthusiastic interest and are subscribing on a scale that promises great success for the M. M. A. The dead of the Maine represented all sections, creeds and parties of the country, so we find the advisory board of the M. M. A. equally broad in scope—North, South, East, West, Union, Confederate and Spanish War Veterans. Residents of New York City may send subscriptions to the New York representative, N. G. Gunther, 504 West 143d Street, New York City, and all will receive prompt acknowledgment.

AN INDUSTRIAL BROTHERHOOD VISIT

A BROTHERHOOD NOON-HOUR SERVICE IN A BRONZE FOUNDRY

*By JOHN R. VORIS

ONE year ago last May twenty-five workmen, representatives of their fellows in eight factories of the lower West Side, Manhattan, met at the home of one of the employers to discuss the needs of shopmen and to devise some means for reaching these needs. The result was the formation of the Industrial Brotherhood, which to-day has ten councils, or branches, and a membership of over five hundred. While the organization has been aided by the Twenty-third Street branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, with which it is affiliated, yet to a great degree it has been self-governing, independent and democratic.

The underlying principle of the fraternity is set forth in the constitution, drafted by a committee of the shopmen, as being "to elevate ourselves and our fellow-workmen to a higher physical, intellectual, moral and religious plane; our ideal being Jesus Christ." The means to be employed include religious and educational gatherings, right living, reverence for sacred things, liberty of conscience and worship, sick and death benefit societies, libraries, etc.

I shall regard it a privilege to take the reader in imagination to a factory to see what the Industrial Brotherhood is trying to do. We shall go at noon, from 12 to 12:30. Dozens of men are rushing out as we enter. They hastily ring up at the time clock. They need to hurry, for there are no decent restaurants in the neighborhoods, and most of them go three blocks away to a delicatessen, or to a lunch counter, where they eat a plate of soup and a sandwich, and ring in again before 12:30, or be docked a quarter of an hour's pay next Saturday. "Back for the meeting!" several shout.

This is a model factory building, perfectly lighted, roomy, fitted with lockers for the men, and washbasins with running water and plenty of soap. Legal requirements are more than lived up to. As you go back and forth along the lines of benches, from one floor to the other, you chat with some of the men as they sit on stool or bench, black with grease and filings, or luxuriously curl up in the sunny windows, eating their lunches, which most of them have warmed by the gas flame, and sipping their hot coffee.

"What is the Industrial Brotherhood?" repeated the first man you put the query to, an Armenian, with intelligent face and keen eyes; "why, it's the organization that puts the music here on Tuesday noons, and sends the speakers. Do I go? Yes, once in a while. Good thing. You learn to speak English from these fine speakers."

"It used to be what some of the boys called Sunday School," said the next informant, a good-natured German, "but they don't say sarcastic things about it like that any more. The Friday lectures on "Law and Citizenship" changed their tone. It's them—the educational talks—I care about. We workmen need more education."

"I learned how to split my ballot," the next one says, "and I attend the business meetings, and vote for the laws; but I don't know as much about it as Shorty, yonder; he's the librarian and the committeeman on our floor. Ask him."

"You ask the undersized man, smooth faced, with firm lips, clear eyes. He is a sub-foreman, with several men and machines in his charge. He speaks thoughtfully. "Well, the Brotherhood means a different thing to nearly every man. Maybe that is its strongest feature; it meets our needs and better desires. Now, I've nerer called myself a Christian, but thought I was an agnostic. But the meetings interested me. The talks were practical, and the men who came seemed to be straight and square. I began to think there might be something in this religion, if practised rightly. After the Brotherhood was formed, and the men had a voice in the work, I became more interested and was willing to be librarian. Want to see the library?" He threw open the doors of the well-made closet, with five shelves, built for the purpose by the firm. "The books are covered with brown paper at our suggestion. Too bad to get them soiled, and, as you see, we do have black hands. Fiction is used most, then mechanics, then history. About forty men a month use books. That's about thirty-eight more than read before the library was placed so handy to them that they could hardly get around thinking about books. Something is needed to make the men read solid books. I think the Brotherhood has struck the solution."

"Most of the men," said another worker, "believe the Brotherhood is a coming movement—even some who oppose it. I certainly should not be opposed to it, for I got my job through it. It is needed. It does not take the place of the church, or the lodge, or the union. It unites us all, and it doesn't cost much. We pay a dollar a year toward the music in the shop."

A younger man answers: "Oh, yes, I believe in the Brotherhood. It stands for clean athletics. No, I'm not a church member. Only one Protestant church member among the fifty on this floor that I know of, and we just about know who are active Christians."

"The Brotherhood," says a Hungarian, speaking with painful effort, "oh, yes; the Y. M. C. A., you mean. A member? No, my wages too small. I'm a helper. My wife seeck. She in hospital now. Brotherhood sent her. My boy, he went up the country last summer, through the Brotherhood and the Christian paper, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD—two whole weeks. All right, it is. We be brothers here. I'm going to join the class in English for foreigners, and the industrial secretary he going to take me to the naturalization office."

You move toward the meeting place. What a striking picture of a religious service! The men—a hundred of them—are grouped about the speaker, sitting or standing in easy attitude, as convenient. A typical factory group, in overalls and aprons; strong faces, listening intently and intelligently. The speaker—a young minister, representing the men's club of a neighboring church—has used most of his six minutes. He understands how to speak to this audience. He is simple, straightforward, democratic in spirit.

"You men know more about it than I do," he is saying, "and perhaps I am mistaken, but it seems to me that workingmen treat Christianity, or at any rate the churches, with almost as much suspicion as the Pharisees treated Jesus. Now, I don't mean to say that you are Pharisees. They w the professional religious people—made relig their business. You go to the other extreme in p tending to be less religious than you really are, l you pin your faith more to Christ. You seem be afraid. Now, why not listen to his voice to-d speaking to you through your conscience, your mi calling you to Christian leadership, to clean thi ing? Men, the Christ saves us from our wo selves."

There is a moment of silence. The man was dead earnest, and the words sink home. Seldom a church audience so attentive. Then there is plause, coming from the heart; as good is t handclapping as the old-fashioned "Amen," for t is what it is.

The chairman of the shop committee comes f ward—a man of vigorous movement; a clean-fac clear-cut Scotchman, foreman over seventy m a man of purpose and ability. He has much to in his two minutes.

"Men, I want to stop in time for the singer give us another number, so I'll talk fast. I h a large number will be present at the Brotherh meeting next Monday night. You will then le what is being done in other factories. You will f more of a solidarity with the other men from rest of the factories. Meantime, let's get as ma members as we can. Push the organization. ought not to try to extend it to other factories u it is strong at home. The speaker next Friday talk of 'Health and Morality.' He is a physici Every man ought to hear him. Let's get out of rut we're in. Attend the entertainment, stand the bowling league. I have a lot more to say, we want another song."

The singer gets through the first verse of "Glory Song," the men humming or whistling chorus, when the shrill whistle blows, and all ha break into applause, drowning the last note of soprano. One man—the treasurer—takes time say, in answer to your remark that the Broth hood seems to have possibilities, "The best thi about it, according to my notion, is that it gi the Christian men opportunity to take leadersh and puts them on their mettle to do it, when he tofore the downward pull has been too strong."

The chairman says, as he takes you to the ele tor, "Yes, the Brotherhood has come to stay think. The field is a needy one; it is unoccup by any Christian organization. The beauty of i that the men themselves run the organization. is developing quite a good deal of talent in the sh which we did not realize existed. The execut secretary, here, he visits the homes of the m organizes new councils; and the Y. M. C. A. hel pushes, directs, encourages, but the organization our own. Yes, we'll be glad to have your aid extending it. You will find that workingmen respond to it more than you dream of."

Thus the Industrial Brotherhood is an organi tion intended to bring into the lives of workm and into the factory environment where they wo life—the fulness of life—which comes from H who is the light and the life.

A DAY WITH MINISTER CHANG

OUR NEW CHINESE AMBASSADOR AND HIS DELIGHTFUL HOME CIRCLE IN WASHINGTON

The Chinese Minister's Wife

By ABBY GUNN BAKER

THE Chinese Legation at Washington during the past few years has been a striking example of the progress which is making such marvelous strides in the Flowery Kingdom. Not many years ago it was unthought of for the Chinese envoys to this country to be accompanied by their wives at our national capital, and when, during the second Cleveland administration, Minister Yang brought his wife to Washington and she appeared with him at the White House receptions she was the sensation of the day. When Mrs. John W. Foster—whose husband was then representing the Chinese government in several pending international questions—gave the first reception in Madame Yang's honor only women were invited, and every man-servant of the household was banished from the receiving rooms in order that the madame's Chinese sense of propriety should not be shocked.

Now, however, the necessity for anything of that kind has entirely passed away. Madame Wu Ting-fang, the wife of China's former popular, erratic envoy, went everywhere, with or without her liege lord, and her receptions for both sexes were among the largest given in Washington. The social régime of the wife of the new minister, Madame Chang Yin-tang, promises to be even more brilliant than that of her predecessor.

Minister Chang Yin-tang, with his suite, arrived in Washington toward the end of December. His coming was heralded as soon as he reached San Francisco, as he had brought with him a large number of young men and several young women, to be placed in American colleges. Immediately upon his arrival at our national capital he quartered his secretarial force at the legation on Nineteenth Street, but for himself and his immediate family he leased Colonel Colton's fine residence in the fashionable heart of Connecticut Avenue. This house, with its classic pillared entrance, long has been one of Washington's show places, and is charmingly adapted for generous entertaining. The wide stairway, leading from the reception hall of the ground floor to the main floor, is strikingly attractive. It is built of English oak, and the flight is broken midway by a spacious landing facing on an exquisite stained-glass window. The long drawing-room, which Minister Chang is using as his office, is finished in white, with touches of gold in the decorations, and with its long windows and comfortable window-seats makes a most inviting apartment.

When THE CHRISTIAN HERALD representative called at the legation the Minister's son, Mr. Henry Chang, did the honors for his father, as the latter was entertaining the Secretary of State and the Assistant Secretary, Mr. Adee, who chanced just then to be returning His Excellency's first call of ceremony.

"My father received Dr. Klopsch's letter," said young Mr. Chang, who speaks English perfectly, "and it will give him much pleasure to tell you anything about our great country which will be of interest to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. He is quite familiar with the philanthropy of that wonderful paper, and, like his predecessors, he has the most profound appreciation for what its readers did for China in time of flood and famine. It was philanthropy which placed our country under lasting obligations to the generous people who contributed to it. My father would like to say this to you himself; but, unfortunately, he has been away from America for so long, and has been so engrossed in other countries with the cares of state, that he has forgotten much of his English."

To one who is familiar with the Minister's active life, and the events of his career, it is not surprising that he should have forgotten his English. He was born in Kuantung province, Cantonese district, about forty-nine years ago and spent his boyhood there. Like all young Chinese of his rank, he received his elementary education under private tutors and then entered the list of competitors for classic honors under the rigid civil service regulations which prevailed for a thousand years in China, and which were in force until they were recently swept away in the educational reforms that are progressing in the Chinese empire now. He received the "Bachelor" degress in Chinese literature at the age of twenty and the "Master" degree at twenty-three.

For the next few years he was associated with his uncle, one of China's most astute statesmen, who was then commander-in-chief of the military forces in Chikiang province. After serving from 1890 to 1897 as Under Secretary of the Grand Secretariate in Peking, he was given the post of Secretary of the Legation in Washington, where he remained for a little more than a year. Then he was transfered to San Francisco as consul-general, a post he held for another year. During this period he acquired the English language, and spoke it with some fluency; but in 1899 he was appointed Chargé d'Affaires to Spain, and for the next ten years he did not return to the United States, nor had he any occasion to use our language, and naturally it slipped from his memory.

After representing his government in Madrid for two years he was sent as Chief Secretary of the special embassy which the Emperor of China sent to Tibet and India. He acquitted himself so well on this mission that the following year he was created special ambassador, with plenary power, to negotiate the Anglo-Tibetan treaty. This led to his appointment as Imperial Minister Resident at the capital of Tibet, a position which he held for two years. During this time affairs between China, India and Tibet became strained and demanded adjustment. An Imperial High Commission was appointed to look into the matter, and Minister Chang was named as chief of the commission. He succeeded in bringing about a most satisfactory settlement and in recognition of this service his government made him senior councilor of the Wei-wu-pu, a branch of the Chinese government which corresponds to our Department of State.

Minister Chang Yin-tang's next promotion of importance was his appointment as Chinese Minister Plenipotentiary at Washington, and in naming him for this the Emperor bestowed upon him one of the highest decorations in the gift of the crown, the Order of the Double Dragon.

His great activity in public affairs has, of course, made Minister Chang an important factor in the progressive party, which has inaugurated many reforms in the Chinese empire. Nearly ten years ago he endorsed the progressive movement by sending his son to be educated in the United States. This son, now his private secretary, has traveled extensively while pursuing his studies, and has received a much broader education than usually falls to the lot of so young a man. He was only twenty-one when he was graduated from the law school of the University of Pennsylvania last June. Largely through his son Minister Chang has become greatly interested in the material results of our Western civilization. He looks with favor upon the project of introducing railways, manufactures, telegraphs and electrical appliances in China. Further, he heartily endorses Western education for young men, and as has been said he brought two of his own daughters and some other young women from China in order that they might be educated here. Both Minister Chang and his son have a wide acquaintance among Christian missionaries in China and speak highly of their work.

Quite apart from politics and diplomacy Minister Chang has always been an earnest student, and is a man of unusual culture and attainments. For many years he has made a specialty of ceramics, and in coming to Washington he has brought a most interesting collection, although it is only a small part of a much larger collection which he has in his Peking home. The massive pieces of silver which grace the dining table in his Washington residence all bear the familiar Chinese dragon and are a part of his family plate.

Controlling the Food Supply

APPARENTLY in defiance of public opinion, the Western packers have advanced the price of beef, and the meat sellers of Chicago and other Western cities have seconded the advance by a proportionate rise in prices. Meanwhile, the meat strike, which began in disorganization, promises to assume definite shape. A National Anti-Food-Trust League has come into existence, and is said to be rapidly attaining a large membership, especially in the West. Legal and legislative forces are getting into line for the serious work of investigation.

It must be conceded, however, that the real trouble cannot be permanently overcome by the boycott. The remedy must be sought for in a different direction. We may have to come gradually to a more economical standard of living; but there should be, and soon or late there will be, laws that rigidly prohibit corners and gambling in the necessaries of life. This can only be reached by legislation. To permit any combination of men to seize upon a large percentage of the visible food supply, and put it away in cold storage, to be held until big profits are assured, thus making the supply scanty and prices high all the year around, is simply an intolerable situation. We have a practical illustration of this sort of corner in the discovery made by a New Jersey grand jury, that one concern alone had placed 36,000,000 eggs in cold storage in Jersey City, to be thrown on the New York market when the prices had reached the highest point. If this method of cooping up the egg supply and artificially creating a shortage be not a conspiracy "in restraint of trade," as defined by law, it is difficult to determine what it is. Obviously, if such practices were general, it would soon become impossible to prevent any of the necessaries of life from coming under the absolute control of powerful and unscrupulous men. Gigantic capitalistic combinations would ultimately have the whole of the country's food supply at their mercy, and the result would be a condition of affairs that can be better imagined than described. We once had a tea revolt that led to great changes; who knows to what a food revolt might not lead? Fortunately, the present experience has revealed the peril and has also shown us that the remedy lies in Federal legislative action, supported by vigorous State co-operation. If there are no adequate laws in existence to meet the situation, then the sooner we have them the better.

The Folly of Extravagance

THERE was never a truer proverb than that which calls the making of money an easy matter compared with the keeping of it. But the man who makes the money is usually better fitted to manage it than if he had inherited it. In order to amass a fortune one must possess a certain amount of business ability, while the veriest fool can inherit it.

This truth has been freshly illustrated lately in one of our large cities, where the widow of a wealthy man has just entered a petition in bankruptcy, unable to pay even the small fees required for that legal service. Her husband's fortune was mainly invested in land. It is estimated by careful financiers that, though this property was unimproved and somewhat mortgaged, it might, by economy and wise management, have been made profitable. But this unfortunate woman was caught in the swirl of the social whirlpool, and left her inheritance largely in the hands of hirelings. The results are exactly what might have been anticipated. The large income derived from the available part of the property has gone for mortgagee's fees, and similar charges; and fine clothing, lavish entertaining and elegant travel have eaten up the rest of it.

Our women may well take warning from this striking and tragic example. Look well after such property as may fall into your hands. If you find it heavily encumbered, stifle your vanity and restrain your social ambition until your heritage is rendered free and profitable. Study the list of this woman's debts: Wearing apparel, dressmaking, and bills contracted through luxurious entertaining form the chief items, after the charges upon her property. By her silly mismanagement of her resources, though she may have meant no harm, she has brought trouble upon scores of her friends and has belittled the business ability of all of her sex in the eyes of the world.

A Voice From Beyond the Tomb

TWENTY great sermons by the late evangelist, Dwight L. Moody, never before published, will appear in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at regular intervals during the current year. These sermons, the authenticity of which is vouched for by Mr. W. R. Moody, the son of the evangelist, constitute a priceless Gospel find! They deal with the most vital religious topics of the present day, and are as fresh, as powerful, and as original in treatment as though they had been written but yesterday. They are the voice of Moody, an utterance from beyond the grave to the American people. "He being dead, yet speaketh." The first of these great sermons, which is entitled, "When Jesus Comes," will appear in the next issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. We confidently believe that every one of these wonderfully eloquent discourses, replete as they are with spirituality, will be welcomed by Christian men and women everywhere with genuine pleasure and read with appreciation, as though they were indeed "messages from the great beyond." Never did Moody put such tremendous energy and conviction into any of his efforts in past years as he did in those last discourses. His rock-bound faith in God, his assurance of salvation through a risen Christ, and his clear convictions of the life hereafter, are all set forth in language such as probably no other modern evangelist has ever used. So strong, so realistic, so conclusive, is the message of these sermons, that we urge all of our readers to give them the widest possible circulation.

The Postal Rate Controversy

ON a recent occasion President Taft, speaking on the second-class postal rate controversy, made a good-natured plea for co-operation by the publishers and the Congressional Committee, "in order that all the evidence of the case might be ascertained and examined in a fair and judicial manner." We cordially endorse the President's suggestion, and all the more readily because we believe that, if the committee gets down to bed-rock facts, it will be soundly converted to the publishers' view, which will be found to be sustained by the evidence, by national precedent, and by a broad, patriotic sense of justice, which revolts at depriving the people of the benefits they have thus far enjoyed in the wide circulation of educational and entertaining literature.

There is one important aspect of the postal question that does not appear to have been considered fully by the committee. In the course of a long personal investigation, Mr. John Brisben Walker, the well-known publisher, has acquired a vast amount of accurate information, showing the condition of the postal service in our and other countries. He points out that the establishment of a parcel post would greatly simplify matters and add largely to the revenue of the department, completely wiping out any deficit. In Germany, the postoffice carries packages for one-third of a cent per pound to any point in the empire. Austria-Hungary is practically doing the same thing; yet our own government, though receiving one cent a pound for periodicals, finds the business a loss. Lest it should be objected that there is no good basis for comparison between the countries just named and ourselves, we turn to Canada, where the territory is as wide as our own. Canada has found it so profitable to carry her periodicals at one-half cent a pound that she voluntarily cut the rate in half, making the charge a quarter cent per pound. This rate, just a fourth of what our postoffice department charges, Canada seems to have found very profitable, for at the end of the postal year, in March last, 1909, her postoffice department reported a surplus of $809,237.53.

How is such a remarkable contrast to be explained? Mr. Walker proceeds to show that our government has omitted to take advantage of a large and assured source of revenue in its postal department, by neglecting to establish a parcel post, which, in other countries, has proved one of the most remunerative branches of the service. Express companies and similar concerns, by carrying parcel present rates, make vast profits. Why should our postoffice secure for itself this revenue, as o countries are now doing? Our railroads are to ship freight for one-fifth of a cent per ton mile—a lower charge than that of any Euro railroad. This rate forms the basis for all kinc freight carriage. The average express haul to is less than thirty-eight miles. If the governr carried parcels at even one cent per pound, it w get a large share of the hundreds of million packages now sent out by the great dry g houses. With our sixty thousand postoffices, their organized army of managers and clerks, handling of parcels would not add materially tc expense at a majority of the stations. From facts adduced, it is clear that our governmer neglecting a rich source of revenue, and leavir to public and private express companies. Mr. V amaker, when he was Postmaster-General, said nificantly: "The insuperable obstacles in the of a parcel post system are the four leading exp companies." If these obstacles are the real re of our postal service being handicapped, so tha cannot become self-sustaining, why blame periodicals?

From all the facts at hand, Mr. Walker feels ji fied in claiming that even the cent a pound rate periodicals is exorbitant. He points out that American News Company, which ships magaz and newspapers all over the country, sends r than seventy per cent. of its total carriage cheaper rate than the government pound rate. sends half a million pounds' weight of periodi monthly from New York to Boston at a cost of $ which, at the cent a pound rate, would cost r than $4,000 in excess of that amount. Even the g newspapers find the cent a pound rate excessive, the metropolitan dailies largely patronize the press companies, which give a half a cent rate a five hundred mile radius.

These are matters which every Congressn should know, especially the members of the c mittee. They point the way to a policy which w result in three desirable things, viz., the wiping of the present postal deficit; the establishmen an assured revenue, permanent and growing, would bring an annual surplus to the departm and the securing to the people the facilities ne for the dissemination of popular educational lit ture at a popular rate.

If the Congressional Committee—which may for several weeks to come—should widen the s of its inquiry on the lines indicated, we believ would presently see a new light on this whole q tion. In such an inquiry the committee would surely find the publishers ready to co-operat cordially as President Taft, or any other offi could desire.

Ice-Breaking Ships

UNTIL a generation ago our great lakes of the North were closed with the ice, which stopped all navigation until the thaw of the spring ear. Now there are iceboats, made of steel with ow'rful engines, that not only cut paths for themsel's and the heavy freight which they carry, but als make a path for less powerful craft. They ould their way through the ice fields, and thus na all-the-year-round navigation possible. The or of northern Europe used to be locked with ce ntil these great ice-breaking ships were brought nt use. There is nothing short of an iceberg wh they cannot overcome. Our lakes do not have ers, of course, and hence these great ice-cutting hi have a marvelous mastery over the obstacles. Wer, fire, electricity, the wind, as man's masters ar terrible; as his servants, they are beneficent. No and then a river submerges a capital; a volar buries a village; a conflagration sweeps a city, ma storm sinks a ship. But usually the rivers, nontains, fires and winds are tamed and obedient to an's command. The mastery of the ice fields by he hardy men and powerful ships of the North s nother illustration of human genius and sovereignty. The psalmist giv a graphic description of man's mastery over na re:

Th madest him to have dominion over the works of thy han: thou hast put all things und his feet: all sheep and oxen, yea and the beasts of the field; he wl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth throgh the paths of the seas. (Ps : 6-8).

Robers' Violent Death

The bodies of two unidentified men were blown to pieces by dynamite on the bank of the Arkansas River, at Tulsa, Okla. There had been a series of bank robberies, including that of the State Bank at Paoli, the day before, and as there was a large amount of money in the bank at Tulsa it is believed that these two men were on their way to break open and rob that bank, and were destroyed by the explosives which they were carrying to blow open the safe. There is peril in crimes of all kinds; more in some than in others. The night robber, with his mask and dark lantern, is looking into the eye of vengeance which threatens, and of death which confronts him. Nature and society are against the villain. The print of a shoe, the initial on a handkerchief, the button torn from a coat, the cap left in hurried escape, the stain of blood on the sleeve, the awakened sleeper, the loaded revolver and the treacherous explosive, all conspire to convict or destroy the villainous burglar. These two thieves and murderers as well were killed by the instrument which they had provided for the hurt of others. Human society, in its best condition, is organized with a law of righteousness and of vengeance, and agencies employed by men meant for the harm of others are often those that injure and destroy themselves. The burglar and murderer is likely to live in poverty or die a violent death. Reference is made to this law of justice in the Pentateuch:

Mine belongeth vengeance and recompense. Their foot shall slide in due time: for the day of their calamity is at hand, and the things that shall come upon them make haste. (Deut. 32 : 35.)

Edison's Latest Invention

Thomas A. Edison, the wizard, has invented a storage battery, which many think will supplant the overhead trolley and underground wires of the streetcar systems of the country. Mr. Edison had been experimenting with his new car on five hundred feet of track in his factory yards at West Orange, and then he took his experimental car, holding twenty passengers, on the streetcar track toward Newark. A number of electrical engineers and traffic men witnessed the test. Mr. Edison was entirely satisfied with the experiment, and says he can run a car from New York to Philadelphia on the electricity which he can put in storage at the start. Mr. Edison claims that his invention is the more important because during rush hours the overhead and underground-wire systems are inadequate to furnish all the power necessary. Men like Mr. Edison have been endowed by the Almighty with singular creative faculties, which have been improved diligently and have ministered strangely to the physical well-being, intellectual development and moral improvement of their fellow-men. Their enterprise and diligence are a splendid example to those who are engaged in the spiritual activities of the Master's kingdom. The spirit of Edison's tireless industry in his investigations and experiments, copied by the workers in the Christian church, is accomplishing wonders in the spiritual progress of mankind.

It is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing. (Col. 4 : 18.)

Died of Grief

Mr. Hamilton McK. Twombly, the millionaire and railway magnate, who passed away recently, filled an important place in the business and social world. He married a daughter of William H. Vanderbilt, and was active in the ownership and management of parts of the New York Central Railroad system.

A Freighter on Lake Superior Breaking Through the Midwinter Ice

He had beautiful homes in New York City and Newport, but his favorite residence was the magnificent one at Florham Park, near Madison, N. J., where he spent much of his time. The Florham Park estate has six hundred acres, with palatial buildings, exquisite grounds, and everything that could minister to the highest taste or comfort. In the summer of 1906 his young son, H. McK. Twombly, Jr., was helping to entertain some poor boys on their summer vacation; and while swimming in Square Lake, New Hampshire, he was seized with cramps and was drowned. The boy was talented, upright, religious, and gave promise of a beautiful manhood. He was the idol of his father's heart, and at his death his father's health began to fail, and no medication, or travel, or nursing could check that decline; the man's spirit was broken, and his body gave way and sank to the tomb. If the sorrow had come to him earlier in life, it is possible he would have been able to bear it, but he was over sixty and his physical energies the more readily gave way. The pathetic love which this millionaire business and society man had for his boy is possessed by the parents of poor families as well, and is one of the sweet, divine things our Father has left with his children here. The effect of sorrow at the death of a son, upon the health of the body, is mentioned by Jacob in his answer to Reuben, with reference to Benjamin:

If mischief befall him by the way in the which ye go, then shall ye bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave. (Gen. 42: 38.)

The King and Prohibition

The Althing, or Legislature, of Iceland passed a law recently prohibiting the manufacture of all intoxicating drinks, and another law, which will go into effect the first day of January, 1912, forbidding the importation of spirituous and fermented liquors, except for medicinal and industrial purposes, into the island of Iceland. There was a vigorous protest against this last measure by a number of the nations of Europe, who besieged the royal authorities of Denmark with petitions to withhold their sanction, but Frederik, King of Denmark. had a deaf ear to these petitions, and cheerfully signed the bill, saying that it gave him great delight to have the privilege of being the first European King that signed such a prohibition law, and he said to a temperance deputation, who came to congratulate him on his friendly official action, that whenever the Danish Rigsdag should adopt a prohibitory bill for Denmark he would be glad to sign it. The action of King Frederik in signing this bill for Iceland is in marked contrast to that of the Czar of Russia, who vetoed the national prohibition bill passed by both houses of the Parliament of Finland, and fastened upon the people of that country their vicious license system. The common people of the world are being inspired with the larger liberty for body and mind, and the wise ruler will befriend those healthful measures of reform that will minister to the happiness and welfare of the whole people. Moses at the command of the Almighty ordered Pharaoh to let the children of Israel go from the slavery that oppressed them, and the king disobeyed the command, suffering the penalties that followed. King Frederik of Denmark, unlike Pharaoh, led by the divine Voice within, released his people of Iceland from the intolerable slavery of the liquor traffic and granted them the freedom their hearts so much desired.

Thus saith the Lord, Let my people go. (Ex. 8 : 1.)

Downtown Church Problem

The widow of Mr. D. Willis James gave $180,000 to complete a fund of $300,000 of endowment for the First Presbyterian Church in New York City, of which the Rev. Dr. Howard Duffield is pastor. The church lacks five years of being two hundred years old. The original church was situated on Wall Street near Broadway. It moved with the people uptown. The church parish house and parsonage now occupy a whole block front on lower Fifth Avenue. Most of the old members have died or moved away, and it was necessary to endow or sell the church and follow the people uptown; and the endowment has been wisely provided. The problem of the First Presbyterian Church is that of the downtown churches in almost all the cities; some are maintained by members who come long distances and pass many other churches to worship in their old home, but as a rule the people find it necessary to have church buildings nearer their residences, and especially Sunday Schools nearer at hand for their children, and hence the downtown churches have very generally been sold and new buildings erected in the residential districts. The city problem is so momentous that this abandonment of downtown churches must cease and a certain number must be preserved for the people whose employment requires them to live in their local neighborhoods. Under ordinary conditions, endowed churches would be a curse rather than a blessing, but these conditions seem to be extraordinary, and the endowment seems to be the duty of the church. Heretofore the Roman Catholics have been wiser in maintaining their downtown churches than the Protestants. They have been enabled to do so the easier because so many of the foreign and labor element residing in the business districts belong to their communion. Mrs. James will be preaching Christ's Gospel to the poor hundreds of years after she shall have gone to her reward, and it is likely that other hearts touched by God's spirit will imitate her splendid beneficence. If there is anything on earth that the poor have a right to it is the Gospel of Jesus Christ. When the disciples of John came to Christ to find out whether he was the Messiah or not, Jesus gave as one of the evidences of his divinity that:

The poor have the Gospel preached to them. (Matt. 11 : 5.)

Madame Chang and Her Daughters

There are also a dainty tea set and an imposing coffee set, on every piece of which the dragon's extended jaws and curling tail are delineated.

In one end of the dining-room is a rack bearing twenty or more plates, the product of the oldest potteries in China. Rare as these are they are overshadowed by the many pieces of old pottery and porcelain in the cabinets and cases of the Minister's office. The entire lower part of the walls of the large drawing-room is lined with enclosed shelves and upon these are placed the precious relics, which include quaint tea sets, bowls, plates, platters, fruit dishes, and many others, which none but a Chinese connoisseur could name. There are also wondrous carvings in teakwood, unique designs in lacquer and other beautiful things. His Excellency has the history of every piece in this wonderful collection at his finger tips, and was most gracious in explaining them through the courteous interpreter of legation, and the kind offices of his son, in the three or four subsequent visits made by the representative of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

The sun was shining brightly on the afternoon when permission was asked by the writer to have photographs made of the Minister and his family. "The young ladies are going to a tea, and I fear that you will have to wait for them to dress," replied young Mr. Chang; but the Minister and Madame Chang came in just then, and there was no delay. Madame Chang is typically Chinese in appearance and manner, and does not speak much English yet, but she is very gracious and amiable. She was the daughter of one of China's successful officials, and, like her husband, was born in the Cantonese district, although the greater part of their lives since their marriage has been spent in Peking. They have four children: the son, Henry, a married daughter in China, and two daughters of school age, who are in Washington with them.

Just as the photographer had finished Madame Chang's sittings there was a patter of slippered feet on the wide stairway and five young girls came gliding into the drawing-room. Pretty dark-eyed maids they were, in their heavily-brocaded, bright-colored satin frocks and quaint, long trousers, with the daintiest little silk slippers turning up at the toes. It was noted with satisfaction that not one of their shapely feet had ever been bound. Young girls they all were, although one was the bride of Mr. Henry Chang and so should scarcely be called a "girl" any longer. "Do you speak English?" politely inquired the photographer, as they began taking their places in front of the camera. "Oh, no!" they chorused with a remarkable unanimity, and then they joined in the laugh that followed as heartily as did the others. They really do speak English, and French, too; for they have had both English and French as well as Chinese tutors from babyhood. They were the Minister's two daughters (who have taken the familiar names of Alice and Lily, and who are in their very early teens), the little bride, who was married with Oriental ceremony at the legation just before Christmas, and her two sisters, Misses Emily and May Tang. These last three are daughters of Tang Shao-yi, the Governor of Manchuria, who came to the United States last year as the special envoy bearing the Chinese government's thanks to this government for the return of the Boxer indemnity.

The first public appearance of Minister Chang with his family and suite was at the reception at the White House on New Year's Day. It was the usual New Year pageantry, in which the entire official world at the capital turns out in its fullest court dress. Minister Chang and his family were almost complete strangers, and were the centre of interest as they passed from room to room with the unconscious, staid dignity which is characteristic of the high-class Chinese. In the East Room they were the focus of attraction, and many guests were presented to them by Secretary Yung Kwai and his American wife, who have been connected with the legation in Washington for several years.

"She is a sweet, motherly woman, and the American women are sure to like her when they become acquainted with her," said Mrs. Yung, in speaking of Madame Chang. "I met her in her own home last year in China, and I was very much interested in watching her there. Her household there is a tremendous affair. I imagine that the majority of us women here would think we simply could not run such an establishment; but she did it with the greatest ease. And her gentle motherliness to all the numerous members of her household was that which struck me most forcibly. I really think she is a wonderful woman, and I know that the Americans are sure to like her." And THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S representative, from her slight acquaintance with her, is sure that they are, too.

To Our Subscribers

Formerly of the

HOME HERALD

DEAR FRIEND: We are still very busy with the work of consolidating the Home Herald with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Every now and then we meet new problems arising from the differences of business methods employed by the two concerns, and these are taken up, one by one, and solved. This consumes considerable time, but we feel sure that our new friends will bear with us patiently for at least a little while, when we hope to have everything in such perfect order that the great business machinery will move on without a single hitch.

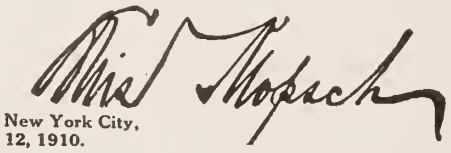
In the meantime, our new friends will, we feel confident, give us credit for having almost immediately established prompt and regular delivery of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and we will continue this course until every difficulty has been adjusted. Our uniform custom has been to first recognize the right of a subscriber to regular service before anything else is considered, after which, if any differences exist, they may be taken up for consideration and amicable adjustment.

Hence the subscription list was a matter of first consideration. The system employed by the Home Herald, of omitting the year from the date "tab," made the immediate checking up of 150,000 names a physical impossibility. So we decided that we, and not the subscriber, should stand whatever sacrifice might be entailed or loss incurred by the unavoidable delay, and instructions were promptly given that every name on the Home Herald list should at once be incorporated with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD list, in order that the service of the former might be as prompt as the service of the latter.

This course proved very expensive, entailing work all day and all night for four weeks, but it could not be avoided if our new friends were to be treated as promptly and fairly as our older ones.

Now that our house is again getting into apple-pie order, we meet you and greet you with hearty salutations of welcome, welcome, thrice welcome! May you, one and all, find the new companionship as lovable and enjoyable as we are sure that we shall find yours. Let the now greatly enlarged CHRISTIAN HERALD family, which in the past has built up a record unprecedented for deeds of love, of kindness, of unselfishness and of self-sacrifice, continue more aggressively than ever to work together to make our future history even more illustrious than our past.

Very cordially yours,



Bible House, New York City,
February 12, 1910.

SPECIAL NOTICE

WE are now preparing for our new friends another edition of our famous "Dreamland" Calendar, to enable us to meet their requirements without delay. We are also printing special editions of our Premium Books and arranging for Magazine Combinations, in order that every advantage enjoyed by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD subscribers may also be extended to the Home Herald contingent.

As it is rather a large undertaking to provide for 150,000 newcomers, we ask your indulgence for yet a few days, when all things will be ready. At the same time accurate dates of expiry will be available and subscribers will be corresponded with individually to ascertain their further pleasure.

Flood Days in Paris

floors above. The structure, added to by succes kings, has an inner and an outer court. The in upon which abut the statue galleries, is even y danger of sinking into the water below. The o court looks west toward the Place de Carrousel, Tuileries Gardens and the Place de la Concord

The Place de la Concorde was covered with sev feet of water. In the centre rises the obelisk Rameses the Great, and beyond is the Arc de omphe of Napoleon I. This great square is narily the teeming centre of modern Paris. Rue Rivoli runs into it from the east. During flood the water ran in from the southwest. A g fountain, with tritons, ordinarily plays here. surrounded by ideal statues, representing the c of France, with Strasbourg alway's in mournin

The weather became intensely cold and ca much suffering, as there was no way to heat m of the buildings and the supply of fuel began to low in the dry districts. Food also became sca as the farmers had not been able to make their into the city for days. Probably it will be fo that most of the poultrymen and others have fered equally with the people of the capital. F while it seemed as if there might be a famine.

Engineers devised various ways to stop the in over the city. One of them was to build d across the streets leading to the river, remin one of the barricades of the Commune. These terfered with traffic, even where the streets v dry. Here and there the pressure against the h ily constructed bulwarks was too great, and dams would break, letting the water through.

The people who lived within several square the river, both rich and poor, had to seek safer q ters. Ambassador Bacon, who has but rece established himself in Paris, had to leave the Un States Embassy Building and go to a hotel far from the river and on higher ground. Sev other foreign Ambassadors found their ho flooded, and transferred their families to ho The hotels were soon overcrowded with refug and it soon became a problem to accommodate t who applied for shelter. Feeding them, also, a still harder problem for the proprietors.

President Fallières, though urged to leave palace, remained there, actively engaged in direc relief work and keeping in touch with the situa throughout the entire valley of the Seine. palace was entirely surrounded by water, thoug this place it was not deep. Madame Fallières g her usual reception, but the only lights were a tallow candles.

The Chamber of Deputies was flooded also. water rose over the parapet at the Place de la C corde, and swept up to the front of the Chambe Deputies. The deputies held their sessions as us but had an exciting journey to reach the build Gun-carriages were in waiting to receive them; deputies would mount to the uncertain seats, drivers cracked their whips, and away they w dash, the horses leaping through the water a gallop. The deputies, on arrival, would be dep ited several steps above the street level, at main entrance.

Paris made a brave effort to put on a smil face, but, though done heroically, it was a dis failure. At first they thought, if the water w recede, all they would have to do would be to cl up the débris it had left; now, however, that first excitement is passing, a sense of the ma tude of the disaster has begun to dawn on th All know that it is a national calamity, and that covery from its effects will cost millions of mo and will take many months to accomplish, perh years.

As soon as the magnitude of the disaster bec known offers of assistance were made by priv individuals and governments. Dr. Klopsch com nicated by cable with Ambassador Bacon, send his sympathy to President Fallières, and offer aid. A cable was also sent to Pastor Wagner, known to our readers as the author of The Sim Life and of sermons in THE CHRISTIAN HER offering the aid of this paper in relief measu President Fallières gave $20,000 from his own pu and subscriptions are coming in from Germa Great Britain and America. Twelve thousand p ple are homeless, and many free soup kitchens being established. Meanwhile, if there are no ra the river will cease to be a menace to the city.

Likes the Story Bible

Dear Dr. Klopsch: We have received The St Bible, "Dreamland" calendar and "Daughters Dorcas" with our renewal of THE CHRISTIAN H ALD. We are pleased with each. The Story B draws out the facts of the Bible in such a way t any one should see the Gospel truths. We pleased to see that Mrs. Sangster has dedicate to one so worthy as Miss Helen Gould.

AROUND THE HOME HEARTH

Less Meat and More Fruit

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

A CONSTANT diet of meat, fortified by rich pastry, is the bane of many an American household. The popular anti-meat crusade brings this subject prominently into view. Meat, in one or another form, is served three times a day, and partaken of indiscriminately by parents and children. Once a day is often enough for most people to eat meat. A man who is going out to a big day's work, and who can be sure of nothing more than a hurried luncheon, may be excused for eating the hearty breakfast of fried or broiled meat, potatoes and cakes that is set by some of us on the morning table. Still, the same amount of energy and vitality would be conserved if a well-cooked cereal were substituted for the chop or steak and an omelet or poached egg were eaten in addition. Fruit should form part of every meal. Whether cooked or uncooked, fruit is wholesome, and is nature's remedy for indigestion. The haste with which we eat and the undue pace at which we work, united with a corroding anxiety about making both ends meet, account for the frequency of dyspepsia. This malady causes physical suffering, spiritual depression and shocking ill-temper. A dyspeptic is seldom a saint, nor can he be altogether blamed for being a sinner.

Plenty of fruit and plenty of cold water, very little coffee and tea, and the elimination of hot bread, highly-spiced foods, rich pies and cake would add years to the life of men and women who are in danger of dying before the meridian.

A hint to men on the use of tobacco in any form is usually unreasonable, for when nicotine poison is added to overmuch use of fresh meat incurable illnesses are ready to spring out of ambush. Children are the better if permitted access to ripe fruit as often as they have it.

The Care of the Hands in Winter

Women whose hands in winter are apt to be red and rough would have less trouble if they were careful thoroughly to dry the hands after having them in water. If any moisture is left on the hands, contact with a chill atmosphere may roughen them. A little cold cream thoroughly rubbed into the hands at night, after which a pair of loose gloves are put on for an hour or two, will insure whiteness and smoothness. It is not necessary to wear the gloves through the entire night. They can be slipped off after a while, if the wearer prefers. Women who are obliged to have their hands very much in hot water should be provided with rubber gloves. They would find in these a complete protection.

The Baby's First Step

When baby learns to walk, and takes the first independent step over the carpet, with a fluttering motion like that of a bird learning to fly, the household is stirred with interest. A grandmother may have seen her own babies learn to walk long ago, father and mother may have watched the first steps of other children, but when the latest baby takes the plunge and sets out independently on its own little feet the performance is as new and interesting to everybody as if all had perceived it for the first time. The little feet may take many a step on the road of life, they may find plenty of steep places, they may sometimes flounder in bogs, or they may sturdily keep the middle of the path and go straight forward to their goal. They have before them, let us hope, long years in which to work and play. If only the baby gets started right, who knows what shall be its portion in the days to come? Bless the little feet, so dimpled and so sweet, that are balancing on the floor and finally learning to walk and to run on the right road.

In Behalf of Our Friend the Dog

Our British cousins understand much better than we how to care for and keep in health and comfort man's dearest and truest animal friend, the dog. Everywhere in English towns there are low drinking troughs, conveniently placed, so that the wayfaring dog may solace himself when thirsty. A little care in this direction here in America would be much more to our credit than is the annual summer crusade that aims to exterminate this four-footed comrade. Undoubtedly hydrophobia is a malady to be regarded with apprehension and dismay. The fact is that comparatively few dogs are the victims of rabies, and that the bite of a dog in health is unlikely to produce serious results, especially if the wound be promptly cauterized. When no doctor is at hand, cauterization may safely be done at home by any one who has the nerve thoroughly to cleanse a wound. This having been done, a touch of carbolic acid, followed by a dash of alcohol, will render the bitten person immune from injury. A bit of absorbent cotton on the end of a wire should be used to introduce the carbolic, and no drop of it should be allowed to fall on the surrounding surface.

People are unwise to take liberties with dogs to whom they are strangers, and children should not be allowed to torment these or any other animals. Some little time ago a newspaper in Virginia related an incident that had its tragic side. A dog noted for good behavior suddenly ran to his mistress with every demonstration of violence. He pulled her dress, barking furiously, and very nearly knocked her down. It happened to be at a time when the general public had lost its head on the subject of the dog, and the woman, thoroughly frightened, shrieked for aid. Her husband, running up, shot the dog and killed him. A little later the couple discovered that their only child, a little lad of four, was missing. They searched for him in vain until the adjacent river gave up its dead. The faithful dog had been trying as best he could to tell them of the child's peril, and had they listened to him the boy might have been rescued.

A Persian Millionaire

IT is but a few years since Persia was a comparatively unknown country to all except the student of archæology. Suddenly the country took a prominent place in the public press; the Persians showed themselves active in the things which interest the people of the present. It is expanding its trade with other countries and has men of large capital and enterprise. The richest man in Persia is Hon. Khodja Baba, and lives in Senah, Kurdistan. He owns seven villages and has a large business in woolens and rugs. He sits at the extreme right in the picture. The first woman in the second row is the millionaire's wife. The boys of the family will undoubtedly be influential in the coming history of the new Persia.

Our Children's Friends

IN some households the different sets of people are as distinct from one another as if they were ivory balls. The family breaks itself into separate groups, or separate units, as it may be, and almost the only points of contact are in the daily meetings around the table. The parents have their friends, the grown daughter has hers, the sons have theirs, and even the little boys and girls have companions and playmates who are practically unknown in the home. This is, in a way, unfortunate all round. That home is the happiest in which there is the largest fellowship of love and the completest unification of purpose. In other words, the friends of one should be the friends of all. This would not prevent intimacies on the part of one or another, the young girl having her chum, who was almost as dear as a sister, and the lad in his teens possessing a comrade who might be to him as Jonathan to David. Mothers ought to be acquainted with their children's friends. For the reason that, in a large measure, education goes on outside the schoolroom, and the people with whom we associate have as much to do with our development as the books we read and the lessons we learn, fathers and mothers should know what their children are deriving from those whom they constantly meet.

There are homes to which young people throng, taking as much pleasure in the elders of the family as in those whom they specially go to see. In the ideal home there is no diversity of interests. Everything tends to help and elevate the common lot. Our children's friends should be our friends all the way along the road. Try the plan and see if it does not work.

In Quarantine

The public health is carefully guarded by municipal restrictions against the spread of contagion. Notices, conspicuously posted on houses that we pass, inform us that the families therein are quarantined. When a doctor orders a quarantine because scarlet fever, diphtheria, or any other dreaded malady has attacked a victim, the edict of seclusion is rigidly enforced. The patient and the caretakers are isolated from the rest of the household, as well as from contact with the outside world. If there are those in the house who are compelled to go to business, they are shielded from contact with the sick one as effectually as if they lived in a different dwelling. In many cases the victims of contagious disease are without delay removed to a hospital, and this is done in their own interest as well as in the interest of the community. Certainly it is every one's duty to observe quarantine regulations as strictly as possible. No one knows what the end may be when a child or an adult is seized with a malignant sickness. We are all bound together, and in a way, all over the nation, we are one great family—each for all and all for each. Even if there be private burdens to bear, they must be borne cheerfully, because of the brotherhood and sisterhood that unite our people in friendly bonds.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—HOUSEKEEPER. The greatest care should be taken to label plainly and clearly every jar, bottle and box on the pantry shelves. This is especially necessary if irresponsible people or children are in the habit of taking articles from the shelves. Serious results have ensued from mistakes due to heedlessness. What you say about using poison for rats, and leaving it in closets, is alarming to me. I once lived next door to a house in which a child died from eating a slice of bread and butter on which arsenic had been spread for the mice. Do use greater care than you appear to do in this matter.

SHALL WE RAISE THE "MAINE"?

By REAR-ADMIRAL CHARLES D. SIGSBEE, United States Navy

IN response to the invitation of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, that I give my views relative to raising or removing the wreck of the old Maine, and at the same time announce my own attitude in the matter, I venture to present the following remarks:

Several months ago I gave a lecture on the subject of the Maine, in order to swell the funds of the Maine Monument Association, of which I have the honor to be president. In my delivery, which occupied only fifty minutes, I was largely intent on reviving public knowledge of the almost inconceivably shattered condition of nearly, or quite, one-half of the Maine's hull and fittings. For the purpose I used photo-pictures taken soon after the destruction of the vessel, and before the above-water hamper had been removed by the wreckers. I set forth the difficulties that must attend any effort to raise the wreck intact. Also, I reaffirmed my belief that the condition of the wreck, and the cause of the explosion, had been correctly investigated and amply reported by the American Court of Inquiry, after its four weeks of sittings at Havana and Key West. Apparently very many of our people have tended to forget the convincing details contained in the report of the court, which was issued in print as a public document. My object was to set forth facts clearly, and to give no opinion whether the wreck should or should not be raised. I gave no opinion on that point.

Then followed certain editorials in leading newspapers, based on the inference that I was opposed to raising the wreck. They were kindly in tone, but held that my supposed attitude was impolitic. To dispel all doubt, let me say that if the people of the United States wish to have the wreck of the Maine raised or exposed, then I wish it more than any other citizen. I have never taken any other stand. But, having in mind the evidence already gathered by the American Court of Inquiry, as well as the facts that were obvious to myself independently, my own wish must necessarily be one of patriotic sentiment. I cannot base it on a disagreement with the opinion rendered by that highly competent court. Certainly I can have no sympathy with the people who hint at facts withheld. I know of no such facts. So far as I know and believe, all ascertained facts are already published and available universally. I have never expressed a preference for any particular private enterprise having in view the final disposition of the wreck. I have kept my balance rigidly in such matters, as the friends nearest me well know. I have not been under any imposition of silence or secrecy by the government. The government has never stayed nor directed either my voice or my pen, nor has it ever seen any article from my pen prior to publication.

As president of the Maine Monument Association I am engaged, with others, in a movement to erect in Washington a monument to the Maine and her dead, so my own interest in my old command is active, not passive. I should not think of volunteering opposition to any general wish regarding the disposition of the wreck, but I conceive that I may properly discuss the mechanical conditions that must be met in dealing with the wreck by methods already proposed and publicly discussed. Congress, when appealed to, may be expected to wring any proposition quite dry of false flavorings, and to consider the actual conditions before appropriating the great amount of money that will be needed. It is well, therefore, that any appeal should be well grounded in a knowledge of the conditions known to exist by those who are sufficiently informed.

Many people are influenced by the expectation of finding bodies of the dead down in the wreck. I fear that the hope will not be realized. This topic is painful, but it is well that the public should be prepared for disappointment. Twelve years have passed since the Maine was destroyed. In the warm water of that land-locked and tropical harbor any human remains must have disintegrated and disappeared long ere this. It is probable also that the number of dead recovered—by sufficient indications—was larger than estimated at the time. The wreck was well searched by both naval and civilian divers. For a long time it was my belief that remains might be found in the cabin, or compartment, of the chief petty officers, which was on the berth deck, at the dividing line between possible safety and certain death. On comparing my list with the names of men who habitually slept there I find that the remains of some were recovered and identified. Others may have failed of identification, and some of the men may not have been in the compartment at the critical moment.

Rear-Admiral Chas. D. Sigsbee

Three methods of treating the wreck have been proposed, viz.: first, to "raise" it, with a possible view of repairs; second, to remove it in parts, as a hindrance to navigation; third, to build a coffer-dam around it and expose it to view.

Before the American Court sworn testimony showed that, in the destruction of the Maine, there were two distinct explosions, one short and sharp and the other—the second—of greater volume and duration. Various witnesses heard both. The report was followed by a lifting of the forward part of the vessel, and then by an immediate sinking of that part. As to the visual effect, a Spanish lieutenant testified, before the Spanish Court, that he saw an enormous blaze of fire rise toward the zenith and to a great height, followed by a terrible explosion; that almost the whole of the ironclad was covered by a thick smoke; that the illumination (ship's own lights) was instantaneously extinguished, and that an infinite number of colored lights passed away into space. He added that the moment after the explosion all was dark until, a little later, the scene was illuminated by the brightness of the fire caused by the explosion, and that other explosions, apparently of shell, followed, which continued until two o'clock in the morning.

The Wreck of the Battleship "Maine," in Havana Harbor

The explosion occurred at 9:40 P.M. The a part of the vessel, supported by its watertight c partments, remaining more or less intact, s slowly. The initial explosion was forward, on port side, and nearly under the conning-tower. American inquiry was unsparing in its investiga of the officers and men of the Maine. It went lines of inquiry apparently ignored by the Spa Court, whose sittings were much more brief. cerning the vessel destroyed, the American C required testimony as to the amount, character stowage of the inflammable and explosive mater on board, the measures taken to safeguard them, attention to duties of the persons in charge, much more. For weeks our divers were work under expert direction, aided by the detailed dr ings from which the ship was built. Their res were given under oath to the court, and are t found in the published records. Finally, the c knew the condition of the submerged wreck with accuracy needed to form an opinion, which was t "The Maine was destroyed by an explosion of a s marine mine, which caused the partial explosion two or more of the forward magazines." N rally, the Spanish Court depended largely on ar ment for its report, which said, in part: "No kn case has yet been recorded where the explosion a torpedo against the side of a vessel has caused explosion of the magazines." Undoubtedly statement had much more weight, universally, fore the destruction of the Russian battleship Pe pavlovsk, the flagship of Admiral Makaroff, off P Arthur. On April 13, 1904, she ran against a J anese mine, the explosion of which communica with the magazines of the ship. Then the ma zines of the ship exploded, with awful destruct and loss of life. The ship sank in two minutes, t repeating the loss of the Maine. Apparently have the same similarity in the case of the Japan battleship Hatsuse, sunk on May 15, 1904. For reason yet advanced am I able to disagree with opinion of the American Court. It is one thing wish to raise the Maine, but for me it is anot thing to question our own court without warra Let us do what we choose with the wreck of Maine, and do it openly, so that all men may see judge, but let us do it only on the ground of pa otic sentiment. We owe no apologetic concessi anywhere for that terrible disaster.

The forward half of the Maine was distorted disintegrated beyond hope of repair. The intric confusion of parts was astounding. The early p tographs show, above water, a vast, interwoven conglomerated mass of details, large and sm nearly all of which has since been removed. us turn again to those pictures before we conde the government not "stopping up h o l e in the bo Under water, har more than loose ma rial, such as guns ammunition, were moved. If the int tion be to expose wreck to re-exami tion, then it is hig important that maintain the s t a t relation of the vari parts. The bend even of small det might wrongfully verse the conclusions already reached by lo continued examination. Three methods of deali with the wreck have been proposed. Let us disc them briefly.

"Raising" the wreck intact. To insure non-c turbance of any part, it seemingly would be nec sary to insert under the whole structure, and bel many feet of mud, a rigid platform, about 70 f wide and 350 feet long. It must be capable of maining rigid under a load, unequally distribut of about 4,000 tons. Then would come the lifti bodily, of this 4,000 tons, increased by the weight the platform. By operating on a large scale, could be done, but only at enormous expense. O above water, what should we do with that n buoyant, hopelessly damaged mass of wrecka th supported? Where should we tal it, and how? What object would we ave in view? Obviously the prob- ler would be only partly solved.

emoving the wreck in parts. By res ting to blasting, this method wo d be comparatively simple, inex- pe ive and quick. But here enters th question of disturbing those condi- tio on which the court based its opin- ior Considered merely as a mechan- ica proposition, this method affords fa and away the simplest solution of the oroblem. Before we can attempt it e must decide whether we have res ng on us any further responsi- bil y of demonstrating the cause of the Maine's destruction. The question of xpense might force this method, bu in advance of operations, Spain mi t be invited to make an indepen- de examination of the wreck on her ow account and at her own expense, bu with drawings provided by our go rnment.

uilding a coffer-dam around the wr k, and pumping out the contained wa r and mud, thereby exposing the ve el to full view and without the ea disturbance of parts. There is no ing repugnant in this method. I na it in mind the very day after the Mae was destroyed. It would afford a mplete opportunity for re-exam- na on. Then would come the matter of inal disposition, which at least cou be determined intelligently. It s rdly to be doubted that a suitable cof r-dam could be built. So far as I n informed, the plans heretofore pr osed have had in view a dam ar nd the whole ship, but this is not ne essary for the purpose of re-exam- na on. The damage was done in the fo ard half of the vessel. The after ha has never been in dispute. There- fo a coffer-dam, to include only th injured part, with bulkheads of ca ked timbers, built into the hull, tr sversely, at the middle body, wo ld suffice.

has been proposed to employ this th l method, and, after re-examina- tio to cover in the wreck with earth an make a monumental islet of the sit The plan appeals, but it would se egate a part of the harbor which, th gh not much needed now, may be re ired with the increase of com- me ce.

Havana harbor is nearly enclosed. The rise and fall of tide is about eighteen inches only. There is but a single channel for the ebb and flow. Consequently the harbor is not well scoured by the tide. The water and mud are filthy, and disagreeable in odor when stirred up. Any of the suggested operations would keep the water and mud agitated for months, perhaps for many months. The city is very near, the climate tropical and the population large. This is to be considered. Even blasting, except of small pieces, might prove objectionable to the people of Havana, and to the vessels in the harbor.

Frequently I get letters on the subject of "raising" the Maine. Commonly, the writers conceive that "hole in the bow." Some, instead of referring to the records of the court, with its sworn testimony arrayed intelligently, prefer to "pick up" their information from haphazard and irresponsible statements. One citizen vigorously and publicly urged his scheme, which was to "raise" that mass of disintegrated metal by means of inflated gas bags, and then tow the wreck to Key West for "docking." He wrote me a severe letter, apparently because I would not discuss his undigested scheme. There is no dock at Key West, and only a machine shop for minor repairs. The dry dock nearest Havana is at Pensacola—a long span indeed. Some letters that I receive are worthy of more attention than I can give them. This I regret, because they are patriotic and convey a sentiment for my old command, but my mails are larger than I can manage. I have no secretary nor other writer to assist me.

Shall the wreck of the Maine be "raised," or shall it be removed? By what method? If raised, what shall be done with it? The Maine is obsolete both in size and in type. For fighting value she may be compared with the Texas. Shall her after-half be floated and placed, monumentally, elsewhere? Is the prime object re-examination, or patriotic sentiment and sorrow for the dead? Have we evaded any responsibility? May I express the hope that I have now shown myself quite ready to fall into accord with any scheme for dealing with the wreck of the Maine that may meet with popular approval.

RESULT OF THE MEAT STRIKE

WHILE the anti-meat strike is not occupying so much space in the pu lic prints, yet the movement is still ho ing public attention in many parts of he country, and may be said to ha e succeeded in one of its principal ob cts—to draw universal attention to he present constant upward trend in oodstuffs, and to arouse the people ar lawmakers to some line of effective ac on. The strike was only called for thi ty days, and did not succeed in ke ing wholesale prices down, though it d frighten the dealers into tempo- ra concessions.

robably the most startling single di losure during the strike was the m hods of putting supplies in cold st age, when they should be plentiful, ar thus keeping control of the market at ll seasons, the price never being al wed to drop in eggs below a certain fi d point. If fresh at the time they ar put in cold storage, no harm will co e to the user; but if they are at al ancient when put away they are a m ace to health. Cold storage plants in he vicinity of New York were in- ve igated, and 80,000 eggs in one st ehouse were destroyed as unfit for us n January 29 an order was sent ou by packers in Omaha, Neb., to all th live stock shippers in the Western States not to ship live stock of any kind to market until the present protest against the high price of fresh meat had died out. Every shipper in Wyoming, South Dakota, Montana, Iowa and Nebraska is said to have received one of these orders.

After the decline at the first of the strike, meat went up again by February 4 in New York City. Beef rose in one day 50 cents on the 100 pounds, selling at $10. Lamb and mutton, under orders from Chicago, went up half a cent a pound.

The grand jury investigating conditions in New Jersey made a round of the storehouses in Hudson County. In a distributing station in Jersey City they found half a million tons of meat on hand. It was covered with ice and frozen hard as a board. Some of it had been there since last April. The superintendent, in answer to the query why it had been kept so long, replied that it was kept in "anticipation of trade requirements." In an egg storage plant it was found that 36,000,000 eggs were in cold storage.

These are but a few instances of many from all over the country, and the knowledge of packing methods now being acquired by the public and investigators will play an important part in regulations which must be made.

Does your skin dry, harden, roughen and crack when you venture out of doors in cold weather?

The trouble may be due to any one of several causes—wind; exposure of the face and hands after bathing them in warm water; or the usé of a soap which is not properly made.

In any event, you should use Ivory Soap. Made of pure vegetable oils and containing no "free" (uncombined) alkali, it not only cleanses the skin, but it helps to keep it smooth, soft and healthy —in winter as well as in summer.

Money will not buy purer soap than Ivory. Many toilet soaps which find a ready sale at 15, 25 or even 50 cents a cake are not so pure.

The Work for Peace

BY MISS VEER DE VERE

IN 1915, and most likely in 1913, the Hague Conference will be held, and it will depend on our work whether the third Hague Conference will mark an era in which reason will prevail over brutal force. The United States, through its very position and the very elements the nation is composed of, is the only power which effectively could bring about arbitration. It is in view of this that I want to make a campaign throughout the United States to arouse public sentiment and opinion in favor of arbitration to settle disputes.

Once that we are convinced that war is not necessary to settle differences between nations, and that a cool talk together with a third competent party will do far more to advance the interest of a country than to kill each other blindly to prove that we were right and the other wrong—if once we are convinced of the foregoing statement that wars are detrimental to our welfare, they will soon disappear, and with them the extravagant budgets to keep up the army and navy.

This movement of universal peace, which may lead one day to a general confederation of the entire world, is one of the grandest causes to which a man could devote his efforts.

I have devoted myself to this peace and arbitration with heart and soul, as also to the question of old age pensions by the State. One is an international and the other a national, economic question; both, however, intended to make this world of ours a little better, a little brighter, to all of us. All of those who want to contribute to the betterment and welfare of their fellowmen should join our forces, or support our hard work, as they will find no better cause. I feel encouraged that the third Hague Conference will be a memorable event in the annals of the civilization of mankind.

THE REAL TEMPERANCE BATTLE

By Dr. F. D. Crothers

THE so-called temperance movement of to-day is really an evolutionary stiggle upward from the ignorance an delusions of the past, and a call fo a larger knowledge of the great la s and forces that govern the progr s of the race. The study of inebrty is scientific, and should be confir d to the facts and the laws which go rn the growth and development of th great evil. Every advance of scienfic knowledge makes it clear, from a arger study of the causes, that ma y of the diseases which afflict the ra are preventable. This is confir ed in the diminishing mortality in di ases of the present day. An exact st ly of crime, pauperism, insanity a a great variety of evils of this cl s show that alcohol is the most p minent exciting and contributing c se.

his fact is also more and more evid t in disease, accidents and losses, a l it is the consciousness of this, felt in almost every home in the land, that g es to the temperance movement a p wer above all sentiment or theory. Stistics show beyond question that o r half a million persons are sick a l dying yearly in this country, and t t alcohol is most intimately related a a prominent cause. Also, in many c es, the use of alcohol is a symptom o conditions which existed before, and i all cases it contributes to make f al and hurry on the degenerations t t are present. Inebriety is an insity, springing from states of exhustion, poisoning, defective living, a l alcohol is a narcotic, covering up these conditions and intensifying them. The inebriate is literally insane, because his conduct is suicidal to his own interests and antagonizes every impulse of life and healthy living. Scientific study and experience show that the inebriate is curable, not by emotional appeals or secret drugs, but by the use of accurate means and measures, applied along the lines of exact laws of cause and effect. The suppression of the saloon and educational measures are all helpful, but removing the causes farther back, training parents and children to live on higher planes of hygienic life in both conduct and thought, will prevent and stamp out this great menace to civilization.

The army of inebriates, with all the associated degenerations seen in crime and pauperism, are as truly grown and cultivated in our midst as weeds in the garden. Given certain conditions and surroundings, and all these degenerations will follow from them, with the same certainty that typhoid fever germs, scattered through drinking water, result in an epidemic of that disease. It is the stress and strain of life, bad living, bad thinking, ignorant conduct, that brings on fatigue and weakness, and resort to alcohol to cover it up. How to live right, how to take care of the body and the mind, is the highest kind of temperance culture, that will bring a race of total abstainers, to whom alcohol can never have any fascination. Break up the great delusion of to-day that alcohol is a stimulant and a tonic, and a new age will come in. The saloon is doomed to disappear, and alcohol is going to be one of the great fuel and light producing forces of the world. Already its power has been demonstrated, and it only awaits the inventor to devise means for harnessing it into the great productive forces of the world.

The temperance problem is a hygienic one, and the diseased insane inebriate is curable by means and measures along lines of exact science. These facts are becoming more and more prominent, and with them the absolute certainty that inebriety will be stamped out and many of the conditions of which crime and pauperism are only results will be removed. Both local option and prohibition are terminals that are absolutely certain to be reached in the near future. What we want to-day is a study of the causes and conditions which make inebriates in every community. Knowing these, we can apply means for their removal. This must be done by physicians and scientists, and it is the great unknown field of preventive medicine, that is to be occupied in the very near future.

TEMPERANCE NOTES

—In Elkhart, Ind., many saloons a ticketed "For Sale."

—Dr. F. E. Yoakum, an evangelist f m Los Angeles, is conducting a re- v al in Carson, Nev. It has taken a s ong temperance turn, and large c antities of liquor and tobacco, turned c r to the evangelist by dealers, have b n publicly burned.

—Birmingham, Ala., affords a good i stration of the results of prohibit n. Three years ago the city had 200 s oons. When local option won in J ferson County, Birmingham became c y. It was a bad season in trade, th strikes and a panic; yet capital i vested in Birmingham increased fm $13,500,000 to $17,000,000 in a l le over a year, crime decreased 50 p r cent., there was a decrease of 172 i the number of violent deaths and a c rease of about 4,500 in the arrests. he moral clean-up alone was well worth the experiment, to say nothing of the business improvement.

—Alcoholism is a prominent cause of crime and mental disease in Italy. Antonini, the director of an insane asylum, writes: "The hospitals and the insane asylums are filled with alcoholic patients; consumption, promoted by alcoholic degeneracy, rages; pellagra joins itself with alcoholic poisoning; crime is becoming more frequent among the young; the suicides are legion; the people are growing steadily weaker and more morally degenerate. . . . But the rulers are blind; they do not see that the certain consequences of the encouragement they have given to the alcohol industry will be the extension of alcoholism."

The Stark Year Book for 1910

is ready to mail. It will be sent to any person interested in fruit-growing on receipt of 7 cents to cover postage. The Stark Year Book for 1910 represents an entirely new idea in nurserymen's literature—it is a work of art as well as a catalogue of Stark Nursery products. Within its covers are 32 full-page illustrations of fruits and flowers, representing 175 varieties, done in four colors, and exactly reproducing nature. 84 pages are devoted to descriptions, prices, and records.

Stark Delicious, the apple that has revolutionized orchard planting and established a new standard of apple values (selling at $10.00 per bushel box this year); Stark King David, another apple of wondrous quality and merit; Stark King Philip, a hardy black grape of California grape quality, and dozens of the very best things in the horticultural world are fully described, illustrated, and priced.

To any one planting one tree or many, of fruits or ornamental, this book is of inestimable value—a horticultural text-book—a guide to proper selection.

Stark trees have stood the supreme test of actual planting for 85 years—they are the yard-stick by which all other nursery products are measured—they are the first choice of this country's most successful orchardists. The success of the orchard is dependent on the kind and quality of tree planted. Stark varieties are the best of the best. Our record of 85 years of successful selling is a positive guarantee of tree quality.

Winning Our Nation*

AS "charity begins at home," and as the man who does not work for the salvation of his own household is considered no better than an infidel, so the true patriot, no matter how much he may be concerned for the fate of other nations, has most at heart that of his own country.

Therefore he must desire for it the highest ideals of life and conduct; and it is not likely that anybody will dispute the claim that the Christian ideals surpass all others.

The first thing that must occur to every thinker upon this subject is personal. A man must shape his own life after those Christian ideals. If he believes they are the best, he is no patriot unless he strives to make them his own.

The next is that he must strive to make his family share his beliefs and his objects; then the town in which he lives; but, most of all, the nation to which he belongs. We rose up in might when a project was formed to rend our nation in twain, and with blood and tears maintained its unity. It is now a great union of States—one and inseparable—but how much more important that it should be Christ's country than merely a great, united nation! Can we not in some way kindle as fiery an enthusiasm for its evangelization as was once kindled for its political salvation?

Dr. Jefferson has profoundly treated this question in his New Crusade. He would kindle this fire as the so-called Christian nations of Europe kindled the passion to save the holy sepulchre from the contamination of the Mussulman. He says:

"The Saracen of the twelfth century has gone; the Saracen of the twentieth century is here. Who is he? He is the rumseller and the gambler and the scurvy politician; the dishonest merchant, the mischief-making artisan; the greedy capitalist and the anarchistic wage-earner; the bribe-taker, the bribe-giver, the man who works iniquity and makes a lie. Let us break the power of his mailed fist. To beat back the Saracen, to rescue America, the land dedicated to liberty and God, that is the goal of the crusade of our new century.

"To many, home missions suggest a lumber camp, a mining camp, a straggling settlement on some far-off frontier. The fact is, we are all on the frontier. We are always in sight of the Saracen.

"It will be a long campaign. It will cost money and it will cost men. But to what better purpose can they be spent than in breaking the power of the Saracen?"

True as it is in one sense that "we are all on the frontier," in another it is not true. We in the towns and cities of the East and the great Middle West have, in the beautiful old phrase, "means of grace" on every hand. Schools, churches, libraries, beneficent institutions of all kinds surround us.

On the desolate stretches of the far Western plains, and throughout many sparsely settled districts of the South, no such privileges are to be found. Read Ralph Connor's unsavory but powerful story of The Foreigner, and realize something of the needs of those sections.

As Dr. Strong has so keenly reminded us, public opinion in these far-off places is as yet unformed, but it is forming fast. There is not a moment to lose. "Strike while the iron is hot." Let us do all we can for home missions—it is for God and native land.

O beautiful my country, ours once more,
What were our lives without thee?
What are all our lives to save thee?
We reck not what we give thee.
We will not dare to doubt thee;
But ask whatever else and we will dare.

The Strawberry Handkerchief

A Tale of Colonial Days in Old New York

By AMELIA E. BARR

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

FOR the benefit of our new subscribers we give a brief synopsis of the preceding chapters of Mrs. Amelia E. Barr's most interesting story: The scene is laid in New York, at the time of the Stamp Act, in 1765. Captain Jansen Van Vroom was a rich, retired sea captain, and lives with his wife Katrina in a fine Dutch house, by the North River. They have a daughter, Virginia, whom they wish to marry to a young sea captain, Batavius De Vries, for whom she has little liking. She is really in love with Joris Artaveldt, a dashing young officer. Virginia's dearest friend is Lady Rose Harley. Captain Van Vroom is bitter against the enforcement of the Stamp Act. Joris and the two girls dine at the captain's house, after which the two men leave. Arent Van Vroom, the son of the house, appears and is introduced to Lady Rose. The next morning Van Vroom describes the condition of New York to his son, and the things which were leading to the breaking point. The Lady Rose becomes interested in Arent when he describes his voyages. Joris declares his love for Virginia, and she returns his affection. Arent, her brother, falls in love with Lady Rose, who gives Virginia a handkerchief embroidered with strawberries. She herself has one like it. Virginia gives Joris the handkerchief. Politically, things grow worse. The people determine to resist the oppression of the British government, and wear only home-made things. Batavius De Vries suddenly returns, expecting to marry Virginia. He is a course, bombastic person, and Lady Rose is disgusted with the idea of Virginia marrying him. Joris tells his father of his love for Virginia and he offers no objection. Lady Rose plans to get Batavius drafted into the naval service. Virginia protests to her father against marrying Batavius. He angrily insists. He says the banns must be published within the month, and threatens her. The mother also takes the father's part. Joris tells Van Vroom he loves his daughter and is ordered away. Katherine Van Heemskerk offers to carry Joris' letter to Virginia. Batavius, walking back with Katherine, insults Joris, who lays his hand on his sword, but refrains from action for the lady's sake. She goes to Joris' side.

WHEN Batavius returned to the Van Vroom house they were ready for tea, and as they drank it Batavius made rude mirth over the temper of the young lieutenant, of his own offer of a cutlass on the deck of his ship and of the womanly claim of Katherine on Joris; all of which incidents went like fire to the heart of Virginia. Her low laughter flooded her white face with a sudden glory, her eyes shone, and she said with an accent of delight:

"The dear child! So wisely, so properly she behaved. A little lady is Katherine; though her sister Joanna is beyond all belief plain and common."

This opinion was hardly expressed ere it was followed by a shrill, long-drawn whistle, and a chanty-like cry. Captain Jansen leaped to his feet.

"It is Arent!" he cried.

"It is Arent!" echoed Virginia, also rising.

"It is my friend Arent!" added Batavius, with unctuous appropriation.

Madame, who had the sugar tongs in her hand, turned her face, shining with mother love, toward the door, and the next moment Arent threw it wide open, and with a following of fourteen Southern gentlemen, entered the room. Then the air vibrated with happy greetings and exclamations, and Arent explained that the visitors were "a few of the Southern members and sympathizers who had come to the Assembly on the Manhattan; and who wished to make Captain Van Vroom's acquaintance.

By this time Madame had half a dozen black women carrying her orders to the kitchen, and drawing out the long table, Virginia soon covered it with white damask and set in order on it the best china and crystal, while Madame brought out all her treasures of condiments, jellies, cakes, and other dainties. And as the Captain did not seem in a hurry she felt sure that there was no special hurry; she could take time to place before the strangers a meal worthy of them.

In fact, within ten minutes the men were in stern discussion of the Stamp Tax folly. They were noble men, well worth seeing and hearing—tall of stature, and full of animal strength and courage and self-dependence. And as the two proud, pleased women moved hither and thither about their hospitable duties they listened; and when any specially forcible words were said they looked at each other and smiled their approval.

"The English government," said Aiken of South Carolina, "intends to yoke the South as a laboring ox, and they will find they have roused a lion."

"I think Mr. Pitt will yet save us from actual war"—this from an optimistic member of the party.

"Save us from those we trust in," was Aiken's retort. "We do not know what ought to be. God alone knows that—but we do know that our taxation, as it is at present, ought not to be; and with God's help we will save ourselves from its tyranny."

"Right, Aiken!" said Worth of Maryland, in a voice of thunder. "The time has not come, and it will never come, for us to make bricks in Egypt. If great and good deeds are to be done, our colonies are full of great and good men ready to do them." There was a proud general assent to this statement, and a chorus of questions and opinions, from which Virginia gathered the following:

"What is Lord Bute about? I do not understand."

"Who can understand him?"

"You cannot touch his reason."

"No, he is to be knocked on the head."

"Before we finish this business, we shall have many casualties."

"We shall thrive by them."

"We might be driven by necessity to——"

"Necessity does everything well."

"The fact is," said Jeffries of Rhode Island, "England feels to us as a scholar feels toward Latin. However well he knows the language, it is not his mother tongue."

"Step-bairns!" laughed McLeod of South Carolina; "even sae, but we are na going to be mere buttons on the coat tails o' our rulers. If they will put us in such a humiliating position, we ha'e hands, and we ha'e swords, and we can use them."

"Right, McLeod! Right!" and there was a storm of inarticulate sympathy and smiles.

In less than an hour they sat down to a feast fit for a king. They had by this time talked themselves into a fever of passionate patriotism; their souls vibrated and urged each other; the atmosphere was charged as if with electricity; the spacious room felt as if it was on fire. Long before they left the Van Vroom house they felt quite able to cut themselves loose from the buttons of their rulers' coats, and McLeod chuckled merrily over "the puir German King, and the trouble he was helping to make for him."

"Prince Charlie may come to his ain yet," he mused, "and he might do waur than come here for it. This is a fair, broad kingdom, and if we could put Charlie in Geordie's chair, the clans would gather round him, and it would be a sort o' compensation for that black woe, Culloden."

He was so full of this impossible hope that he went down to the City Hotel with the crowd, humming "Wha wouldna fight for Charlie?" though the Liberty Boys escorting them marched to their own fine song of the "Liberty Tree."

It was one of those hours in which mortals feel that they are immortal. The passionate evening, the ringing words of the song, the cheering of the boys and the citizens, opened for them some irrational doorway through which the mystery, the majesty, and the pang of life stole in, and thrilled them into an ecstasy of self-renunciation.

Only Batavius remained cool and prudent. He had eaten and talked and cheered with the rest, but as he walked alone to his ship he said to himself, with a scornful smile, "What fools these men are! They are full of complaints and threats. They are going to set the river on fire—Humbug! That is not my way. I complain of nothing. I accept everything. I will not prejudice my future by foolish scruples about liberty."

And to thoughts of this tenor he fell into that comfortable animal sleep which is neither troubled, nor comforted, nor informed by prophesying dreams.

CHAPTER SEVEN

ALL AT SIXES AND SEVENS

THIS first meeting of a Colonial Congress in the city of New York was an event of the greatest significance. The whole country was in an insurgent condition, and the government paralyzed by circumstances it had no authority to meet with that severe promptitude which apeared to be absolutely necessary. For Grenville, who was densely ignorant of American affairs, had appointed as collectors of the hateful tax only native Americans. He intended this as a conciliatory measure, but was amazed to find it universally regarded as insult added to injury.

"Is it not better the tax should be collected by Americans, rather than foreigners?" asked one who had just been duly qualified.

"No, vile miscreant!" was the answer. "If your father must die, is there no defect in filial duty if you become his executioner, in order to secure the hangman's fee? If the ruin of your country is decreed, can you innocently take part in the plunder?"

This was the feeling that leaped first into every heart; then they immediately began to ask one another, "Why should we allow a stamp officer on this side of the water at all?"

The answer to this question was startlingly quick, clear and unanimous. The effigy of Oliver, the collector for Massachusetts, was found swinging one morning from an elm tree at the entrance to Boston. Chief Justice Hutchinson ordered the Sheriff to remove it. He positively refused. It hung until evening, when a great multitude, marching in order and shouting "Liberty and No Stamps!" took it down and burnt it before Oliver's house. Hutchinson ordered the colonel of militia to beat an alarm. "My drummers are all in the mob," was the reply. Oliver resigned the following day.

The little turbulent colony of Rhode Island promptly raised a mob also, and the mob compelled the tax collector to resign. Maryland was in commotion, and her stamp collector fled to the fort at New York for refuge. The officer for Connecticut was following his example when he was overtaken, escorted back to Hartford Court House, and ordered to read his recantation before the Assembly. Beyond Maryland the whole South passed resolutions to resist the Stamp Act. The last collector to yield was John Hughes of Philadelphia. He was desperately ill, but he heard muffled drums beating through the city, and the State House bells ringing muffled, and the tramp of men round his house demanding his resignation, and he gave them his written promise to have nothing to do with the stamp paper.

In the meantime, New York was watched with intense interest. It was not only the most important city on the continent, it was also the headquarters of the British army in America. Governor Colden was putting the fort in a state of offense and defense. Major James of the artillery was working day and night to increase his stock of powder, shot and shells. It was said he had vowed "to cram the stamps down the throats of the people," and the people were watching with a grim determination that knew no fear. McEvers, the appointed stamp master for New York, was in hiding; and Colden had sent to General Gage for a military force sufficient to keep New York City in order.

This was the condition of affairs in the city at the beginning of October, A.D. 1765; and, on the sixth of the month, all the members summoned for the first Colonial Congress had arrived. Just before this opportune moment a new paper appeared. It had not been advertised, no one knew who edited or printed it, or who, with marvelous celerity, scattered it far and wide over the city and the surrounding country. It was called The Constitutional Courant, and bore the device of a snake cut into eight pieces, with the motto, "Join or Die." This motto became the watchword of the hour. It was on the lips of every one. The paper was in the hands of every one. The men who had supped with Jansen Van Vroom found it on their breakfast tables, and, as they met, greeted each other with its motto. Jansen had it in his hand when he bid them good-morning. Batavius carried it with obvious ostentation.

Yet he carried it in a nonchalant manner, and this manner for once explained his real feeling. At that hour he was very indifferent to every side of the political quarrel; he had spent some restless, unhappy hours during the night, having become conscious for the first time that he was really in love with Virginia. He had so long regarded her as his own that he never suspected any personal reason for her cold reserve. He told himself it was the instinctive mood of a woman eighteen years old.

But on the previous evening he had seen a different Virginia, and when he awoke from his first deep sleep the vision of this other Virginia tormented him. Her rosy blush, her sparkling eyes, her light step, her gracious manner, her eager enthusiasms, patriotic anger and ready laughter—why had she never shown him any of these enchanting moods? To strangers she had been far more sweet and beautiful than she had ever been to him. He recalled other occasions when she had treated him in the same way. And how wonderfully charming she was! He felt that he could never rest until Virginia smiled and beamed on him as he had seen her smile and beam on Aiken and McLeod.

The first effect of this new manner of thought was in his dress. He twisted his black hair into a curl or two, he adorned his hands with rings, and added to his finest uniform that touch of brilliant scarlet in his silk waistband that was so popular among privateers and other seamen of more doubtful occupation. Captain Jansen noticed this change at once, and thought well of it.

"Good clothing, and a few ornaments, Batavius," he said, "are often better than many words. I am an old man, but I am always noted for my white linen and fine broadcloth."

"Well, then, Captain, you have a wife and a daughter to look after your linen and broadcloth."

INSURANCE AS AN INVESTMENT

THERE is at least one man living in the United States to-day who carries one and one-half million dollars worth of insurance on his life. There are over twenty men who carry a million dollars worth of insurance on their lives. There are thousands who carry upward of one hundred thousand dollars worth of insurance and hundreds of thousands who carry upward of a thousand dollars worth.

There are at least two American women who have been insured for a million dollars. A great many have been insured for a quarter of a million, while those in the hundred thousand dollar class are very numerous. The aggregate value of the death claims paid annually for both sexes by legal reserve companies at the present time is far above $200,000,000. And this does not include the moneys disbursed by fraternal benefit and mutual aid societies.

Now it will be inferred that the men or women who are able to insure their lives for a million dollars, or even for one hundred thousand dollars, must enjoy and expect to continue enjoying a large income, for the premiums necessary to be paid on such policies of insurance must be very large, the actual amount depending on the age of the policyholder when insured. And the question arises, Why do they do it? The answer, when the facts are known, is perfectly obvious—for investment.

The mere possession of such policies is a certificate of more than financial and physical soundness. That policy for a million and a half dollars worth of insurance carried by the foremost department store owner of America gives him the highest of ratings in the business community, for merchants know that the insurance companies have investigated the matter of his integrity far more deeply than they, as individuals, could. And so, in times of business stress, his policy stands for just so many ready dollars.

Investment Features

And what is true of the bigger is true of the smaller business man. It is not uncommon to find small business firms carrying policies of insurance for the purpose of reimbursement in case of the death of any one of the members. Again, many a business man was enabled to pull safely through the depression of 1908 only by reason of the borrowing power of his insurance policy.

A noticeable feature of investment insurance is the difference in the attitude toward it of the rich and the poor. For instance, the higher you ascend the ladder of expenditure the greater care will you find the insured to have taken to perpetuate the investment as long as possible after death. The poorer the man the more does he seem willing to rest content with being able to leave his wife a lump sum when he dies. The richer the man the more does he seem to insist that his widow shall receive not the lump sum, but a yearly allowance, accruing from its investment.

Now this may be due, on the one hand, to the fact that the rich, adverse opinion to the contrary notwithstanding, are keenly alive to the value of money and to the fact that nothing on this earth can prove quite so elusive on occasion as a badly guarded principal; and, on the other hand, it may be due to the feeling on the part of the poorer man that the amount of interest to be gained from the investment of a small death benefit is likely to be too small to be of practical use to his widow. Nevertheless, the problem of her support after his death is one that may constantly concern the man who has nothing to leave his wife but an insurance certificate.

Even if the sum be considerable there must arise the quite natural question, What can, or rather, what will, she do with it? A woman who for years has been used to a regular weekly or monthly allowance, out of which has been paid the household expenses, suddenly finds herself, through the death of her husband, deprived of her stipend, and the possessor instead of a few thousand dollars. She must not live upon the principal, for with the most rigid economy and the most determined will it could last but a few years.

If she invested it in ultra-safe securities, the highest interest to be derived in that event would be at the rate of $60 per $1,000 per year. She might go into business, but even if she were lucky enough to hit upon some honestly attractive opportunity it is probable that her previous domestic capacity would utterly unfit her for the new mode of existence, and if she be advanced in years the idea of business would be out of the question altogether. Of course, there are exceptions, for many a woman, face to face with a desolate future and with not even an insurance policy to help her on her way, has risen superior to the situation and has prospered.

A Monthly Allowance

But the average woman, much less the average man, come suddenly into possession of a substantial sum of money, is curiously apt to lose all judgment when the problem of investing the money presents itself. And so most of the large insurance companies have begun to issue policies which, instead of bestowing a lump sum at the death of a man, provide for the payment of an annual, quarterly or monthly allowance to his wife as long as she lives.

There can be no doubt that this plan of insurance will become more and more popular, for a husband can rest assured that not only is his money safely beyond the reach of a possible swindler after his death, but his wife will have a certain amount of money at her disposal every month.

Some of the companies arrange only for annual payments, but where the amount of money is small it is, perhaps, better to arrange for monthly payments. An annual allowance, incurring the necessity of banking it and drawing upon it at intervals, places a woman in practically the same position as though the whole amount had been placed at her command in the first place. It may be lost or unwisely disposed of, and the long interval of waiting until the next payment is made may provoke hardship.

Provisional Features

Some of these policies run for a period of twenty years, and, if the beneficiary be old at the time of the death of her husband, this might perhaps be long enough to provide for her until her death. But by paying a larger premium the wife may be assured of a monthly allowance as long as she lives, however long that may be.

The cost of such policies depends not only on the age of the person taking the insurance, but also upon the age of the beneficiary. If an old man were to take out one of these policies in favor of his minor son, it would cost him more than if the son were of middle age, as the payments after the father's death would have a long time to run. A wealthy woman bought one of these policies the other day in New York in favor of her little daughter, six years old. It was expensive, and she meant to leave her fortune to her daughter in any event; but, as she remarked, riches sometimes take wings, and she wanted to be sure that her child would never actually want.

As a phase of investment insurance, this plan is well worth consideration.

Farm Land the Basis of Value

In making investments the first consideration should always be the character of the security. Every investor to whom income is important should learn the facts about Irrigation bonds. They form, in our estimation, the safest way to earn 6 per cent.

Secured by a Thousand Farms

Irrigation bonds are secured by first liens on good farm land—sometimes a thousand farms. The farms are worth usually at least four times the loan.

The farms are exceedingly fertile, and are not subject to crop failures. Any one season's earnings are generally sufficient to repay the whole loan.

The bonds are additionally secured by a first mortgage on an irrigation system, in which the investment is often twice the bond issue.

Some Irrigation bonds are municipal securities, which form—as do School bonds—a tax lien on the district. Some are issued under the "Carey Act," where the State supervises the project.

They are issued in denominations of $100, $500 and $1,000, so one may invest either little or much. All are serial bonds, part of which are paid annually, so one may make long-time or short-time investments.

78 Issues Sold

In the past 16 years we have sold 78 separate issues of Reclamation bonds, all based on farm liens. Not a dollar of loss has resulted to any investor.

Our dominant place now gives us the pick of these projects. They are passed on by our own engineers and attorneys. And an officer of our Company constantly resides in the irrigated sections, watching the projects we finance.

We have issued a book based on all this experience—a book which every investor should read. Please cut out this coupon as a reminder to send for it. (16)

GET POWER

The Supply Comes From Food.

If we get power from food, why not strive to get all the power we can. That is only possible by use of skilfully selected food that exactly fits the requirements of the body.

Poor fuel makes a poor fire, and a poor fire is not a good steam producer.

"From not knowing how to select the right food to fit my needs, I suffered grievously for a long time from stomach troubles," writes a lady from a little town in Missouri.

"It seemed as if I would never be able to find out the sort of food that was best for me. Hardly anything that I could eat would stay on my stomach. Every attempt gave me heartburn, and filled my stomach with gas. I got thinner and thinner until I literally became a living skeleton and in time was compelled to keep to my bed.

"A few months ago I was persuaded to try Grape-Nuts food, and it had such good effect from the very beginning that I have kept up its use ever since. I was surprised at the ease with which I digested it. It proved to be just what I needed.

"All my unpleasant symptoms, the heartburn, the inflated feeling which gave me so much pain disappeared. My weight gradually increased from 98 to 116 lbs., my figure rounded out, my strength came back, and I am now able to do my housework and enjoy it. Grape-Nuts did it."

A ten days' trial will show anyone some facts about food.

TRUE CHARACTER BUILDING*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

WHEN Jesus reached the closing part of his Sermon on the Mount we will discover, if we have not done so before, that his theme was character building, and he likened his hearers some to wise builders and some to unwise builders.

The first were those who would hear his sayings and do them, and the second were those who would hear them and do them not. He made the difference between the two kinds very vivid by using as an illustration something they were quite accustomed to see: houses built upon the rock and houses built upon the sand. Most wonderful are some of these houses, which the traveler of to-day sees, notably "Marsaba," which is built not only on the rocks, but into the rocks, apparently chiseled out of them, those cliffs which sheltered the prophet Elijah in the place where he was fed by the ravens.

Marsaba, however, is almost inaccessible to the usual traveler, so narrow and precipitous is the path that leads to it. More to our point is this home built among the rocks of Mount Lebanon, which shelters a lovely Christian family, Dr. and Mrs. Ghosn-el-Howie, and their children. It is a centre from which radiates Christian teaching not only for that community, but for other parts of the world. We believe that it was just such a life as this that the Lord Jesus had in mind when he spoke of the house "built upon a rock."

The Foundations of the House

The houses built upon the sand to which Jesus referred may have been the tents, which were spread, without any thought of foundations, in valleys, and which were swept away by the rising streams when the rains descended. What a contrast there was between the house of the abiding Christian, on the rock, and the careless nomad, on the sand!

We shall need to put ourselves in the place of the Oriental to comprehend the teaching of Jesus on this point. In our land, all houses have foundations, some better and stronger than others; but, generally speaking, the foundations are rather secure. If Jesus had been speaking to Occidentals, like ourselves, he might have had something to say about superstructures. A few years ago there was a man in New York City who put up a block of tenement houses, which fell to the ground almost as soon as they were occupied, and many lives were lost. When investigation was made, it was found that, in order to save expense, he had economized in sand, not putting in enough to make a durable cement. Of course he was sent to prison for such culpable cupidity.

Another notable instance of wrong superstructure was the Tay bridge, in Scotland. It went down on December 28, 1879. For some years trains had been crossing in apparent safety; in fact, the train which passed over just before the fatality had carried the Queen of England. But the train which followed may have been overweighted. Investigations which followed revealed the fact that there was a defective beam, and that is where the bridge gave way. The builder acknowledged that he had noticed a slight imperfection, but thought it not sufficient to make him refuse to put it in. What a fatal mistake on his part! Without that weak spot the bridge would undoubtedly have stood the strain of traffic. There are some human characters like the bridge of Tay, seemingly grand and strong, that have a weak spot in them, and if an investigation should be made it would be found to be a weak spot in character building, which was overlooked or condoned in childhood and youth, such as a lack of self-control, an inadequate idea of the value of truth, selfishness, etc. Any one of these weak spots might cause the whole structure of manhood or womanhood to fall. A little boy was asked, "Who made you?" and he promptly replied, "God." Then another question was put to him: "What did he make you out of?" "Sand," he replied. More sand would have been a good thing in the building of those houses in New York.

When we speak of "sand" in relation to human character we mean grit, courage. The boy did not mean just that, but we can put that meaning into his words. In all our character building we need just the kind of courage and steadfastness which God alone can give us.

The Strength of Habit

The earthquake which devastated the city of San Francisco a few years ago also wrought havoc with the buildings of the Leland Stanford University. A costly memorial arch was demolished. Upon an examination it was found that the foundations had not been solidly built, and so the superstructure was easily shaken down. Let parents and teachers take warning from this to lay firm and true principles as foundation stones in the characters of the children whose upbringing is in their charge. Sad it is to say that we have only to read the daily papers to see that men who have been famed for great deeds suddenly tumble all to pieces, morally, and are sent to jail to serve long sentences. By way of illustration take two walnuts: open No. 1, and find in it a rich and meaty kernel; open No. 2, and there is nothing but the dried up semblance of a kernel—fair on the outside, rotten on the inside. President King, in his book Rational Living, says: "Every smallest stroke of virtue or vice leaves its never so little scar. The drunken Rip Van Winkle, in Jefferson's play, excuses himself for every fresh dereliction by saying: 'I won't count this time.' Well, he may not count it, and a kind heaven may not count it, but it is being counted none the less. Down among the nerve-cells and fibres the molecules are counting it, registering and storing it up, to be used against him when the next temptation comes. Nothing we ever do is, in strict scientific literalness, ever wiped out." Also, he says: "From your early morning toilet, through the care of your clothing, and the order of your room, table manners, breathing, tone of voice, manner of talking, pronunciation, gesture, motion, address, study, to your very way of sleeping at night—all your habits are setting like plaster of paris. Do you wish them to set as they are?

What Is Expected of Us

God created us, but he expects us to build our characters, and the building is not wholly to be likened to the erection of a house or a bridge. We may get some valuable hints from the mineral world, particularly from the formation of crystals. Hear John Ruskin talk to a company of young girls. He says: "Here is a perfect crystal of quartz for you. It is of an unusual form, and one which it might seem very difficult to build, a pyramid of convex sides, composed of other minor pyramids. But there is not a flaw in its contour throughout; not one of its myriads of component sides but is as bright as a jeweler's faceted work (and far finer, if you saw it close).

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

e crystal parts are as sharp as javeli; their edges will cut glass with a touch. Anything more resolute, c summate, determinate in form, can n be conceived.

Here, on the other hand, is a crys- t of the same substances, in a per- f tly simple type of form—a plain s-sided prism; but from its base to i point, and it is nine inches long, it l s never for one instant made up its rnd what thickness it will have. It s ms to have begun by making itself a thick as it thought possible, with t quantity of material at hand. S ll, not being as thick as it would l e to be, it has clumsily glued on p re substance at one of its sides. T en it has thinned itself in a panic d economy; then puffed itself out a ain; then starved one side to enlarge t e other; then warped itself quite out o its first line. Opaque, rough-faced, j gged on the edge, distorted in the s ne, it exhibits a quite human image o decrepitude and dishonor; but the w rst of all is that, half way up, a p rasite crystal, smaller, but just as s kly, has rooted itself in the side of t e larger one, eating out a cavity u nd its root, and then growing back- w rd, or downward, contrary to the d rection of the main crystal. Yet I c nnot trace the least difference in p rity of substance between this first m st noble stone and this ignoble and a solute one. The impurity of the h st is in its will, or want of will." L ke which of these crystals are you b ilding?

Crystals differ in quality and value. t the sapphire, the opal, the diamond. T ese are respectively developed from cl y, sand and soot, according to laws w hich God has placed in their sub- st ance. Each becomes in its own way a mirable, the heavenly tinted sapphire, the radiant opal, with a beauty of color like the rainbow, and the diamond, a star of blazing light. Let us seek to understand the powers God has given us and seek to build ourselves accordingly. If we should discover that his desire is that we shall be strong crystals of quartz, which is an essential element of granite, let us be content not to be flashing geniuses, but strong and useful servants to do his bidding.

> Whate'er thou purposest to do,
> With an unwearied zeal pursue;
> To-day is thine—improve to-day,
> Nor trust to-morrow's distant ray.
> — From the Russian.

In his Sermon on the Mount Jesus told his hearers where they must start in their building, in the way that is straightforward, entering by the narrow gate, and not on the broad road, where the gate is wide. We will illustrate this by drawing a capital Y. On the left we will draw the broad road which leads downward to destruction, on the right we will draw the narrow way which leads upward to life eternal. Certainly the way is not "narrow" in the sense of liberty curtailed, but some people do really think that they have "to give up everything" in order to live the Christian life. The way to heaven may be said to be narrow because it is all-absorbing—"this one thing I do." "Only that is important which is eternal." Paul knew the secret joy of the narrow way when he wrote, "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain."

The Lesson of a Great Painting

We are all more or less familiar with Guido René's picture called "The Aurora." It represents the sun in his chariot, drawn by four horses, and heralded by a genius of light in cherubic form, bearing a torch. Around the chariot, hand in hand, treading upon the clouds are graceful figures, representing the hours. Preceding the chariot is the goddess of the morning, scattering flowers upon the earth below. It all represents the glorious sunrise. But as we look at it we think of the soul as the charioteer; the four horses are the passions, which must be held in check; the genius of light, which God gives to every man that cometh into the world; the figures around the chariot are the years appointed unto man to live; Aurora is the blessing of God, which guides every soul born into the world.

It was our privilege to describe this beautiful picture to a company of blind people, and then to pass for them to examine a small copy of the picture cut in cameo, not more than two inches long and one inch wide. Imagine the tiny figures! But as the blind people passed their fingers over them they exclaimed, "I see the horses!" "I see the hours!" "I see the little light-bearer," etc. And so God's truth is to be comprehended by all.

The original painting of Aurora is so large that it covers the ceiling in a palace. It can only be seen, so large and so high up is it, by a person sitting down and looking at it reflected in a mirror. In this there is a suggestion of how great is God's purpose in the creation of every human soul.

As to the "broad way which leads to destruction," it is luring because people think "they can do just as they please" if they are not following a Christian life. One cannot shirk responsibility to God in that manner.

Those on the broad way are just as much bound to obey him as those who are traveling the narrow way. He is the Father of us all. But the broad way is dangerous because the guideposts are all misleading: "This way to happiness," "This way to fame," "This way to riches." The unwary traveler, intoxicated with pleasure, does not realize that he is thus brought nearer and nearer to his doom.

Dr. Guthrie, the celebrated Scotch preacher of long ago, has said: "With his blind face turned up to heaven, you see a man approach the edge of an awful precipice. Every step brings him nearer, still nearer, the brink. Now he reaches it; he stands on the grassy edge. Oh for an arm to reach him—for a voice to warn him—for a blow to send him staggering back to the ground! But he has lifted his foot; it is projected beyond the brink; another moment a breath of wind, the least change of balance, and he is whirling twenty fathoms down. You stop your ears, close your eyes, turn away your head; horror has taken hold of you. And such were David's feelings when he contemplated the sins and fate of the wicked: "Horror hath taken hold upon me, because of the wicked that forsake thy law; rivers of water run down mine eyes, because they keep not thy law, O God." It is only at the lower end of the broad way that such a place is to be found.

But it does more—it molds the eye painlessly but surely to its perfect shape. This is necessary to correct near-sight, far-sight, astigmatism and kindred defects. It is absolutely safe—it does not come in direct contact with the eyes; and five minutes' manipulation in your own home, twice a day, is all that is necessary to counteract eyestrain and headache, and relegate eyeglasses to the rubbish box. A FRIENDLY GROCER

Dropped a Valuable Hint About Coffee.

"For about eight years," writes a Mich. woman, "I suffered from nervousness—part of the time down in bed with nervous prostration.

"Sometimes I would get numb and it would be almost impossible for me to speak for a spell. At other times I would have severe bilious attacks, and my heart would flutter painfully when I would walk fast, or sweep.

"I have taken enough medicine to start a small drug store, without any benefit. One evening our grocer was asking Husband how I was and urged that I quit coffee and use Postum, so he brought home a pkg. and I made it according to directions and we were both delighted with it.

"So we quit coffee altogether and used only Postum. I began to get better in a month's time and look like another person, the color came back to my cheeks, I began to sleep well, my appetite was good and I commenced to take on flesh and become interested in everything about the house.

"Finally I was able to do all my own work without the least sign of my old trouble. I am so thankful for the little book, 'The Road to Wellville.' It has done me so much good. I haven't taken medicine of any kind for six months and don't need any.

"A friend of ours who did not like Postum as she made it, liked mine, and when she learned to boil it long enough, her's was as good as mine. It's easy if you follow directions." Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

How to Work*

IF a man really wants to work it is seldom that he does not get a chance. We hear pitiful stories of the men who are unsuccessfully searching for work, especially in our great cities; but upon looking into their cases you are all too likely to find that they have had place after place given them, only to show their benevolent helpers that they are unfit or unworthy.

What is true of worldly labor is true of work in the church. All of us, and especially our ministers, can testify that we are constantly meeting with so-called Christians, usually church members in good and regular standing, who profess to long for activity in the Master's vineyard, but who fail to find any work which is adapted to their capacity.

There are undoubtedly some honest ones among these inquirers; but it is to be feared that, perhaps unconsciously to themselves, they are not so overpoweringly desirous of hard and steady occupation as they say they are. One of our great poets spake truly when he said:

Beneath the stream, shallow and light, of what we say we feel;
Beneath the stream, as light, of what we think we feel;
There flows with noiseless current, strong, obscure and deep,
The central stream of what we feel indeed.

This is only another way of putting the great Scripture saying, "The heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked." Remember that if you pretend that you are hungering after work in the Lord's field, and do not speedily engage in it, you lay yourself open to a charge of serious insincerity.

Last year Dr. McAdam gave us a strong word upon the value of work, which is worth repeating. He said: "As acid corrodes steel, idleness eats in the moral fabric of a human life. The miserable beings whose task is to kill time by loafing on street corners or strutting along boulevards are full of indecencies of thought and often of language. The young woman who has no more serious work than to lounge on cushions with a silly novel, or dissipate the hours in useless trifling, cannot long maintain the whiteness of her soul."

Work is absolutely necessary for most human beings in order to preserve their integrity.

Carlyle, speaking of a potter and the material from which he must form lives, says: "Of an idle man, the highest destiny can bake and knead nothing other than a botch; let her spend on him what expensive coloring or gilding she will, he is but a mere enameled vessel of dishonor."

Bishop Williams has some excellent advice regarding the proper preparation for good work. "It is a high art, this art of service," he says, "and it requires much ability and wisdom. Therefore the prime necessity in order to any efficient, useful service is culture, self-development. Especially would I burn that conviction into the conscience of all who feel called to any high vocation, whether it be the ministry, or going on a mission to the heathen or to the slums; taking up social settlement work, following the physician's or the teacher's noble profession; or, best of all, being the head and the heart of a home, the father and mother of children. Zeal and good intentions are not enough. Know all that you can know; but let your culture be in order to service."

MRS. M. L. CRAWFORD BOWER, Lingayen Pg, Philippine Islands, asks THE CHRISTIAN HALD family to mail her any Sunday School cs, used or left over. She will use them amg children who never see pretty cards. A , children's Sunday School papers will be ve acceptable.

DR. JOSEPH SIMMS, well known as a lectur and author (and whose books on bygiene, mals, etc., have been widely noticed by the pss and are to be found in many public libraris), has been in the lecture field for over fcy years. Though now over seventy years ofge, he is still exceedingly energetic and isngaged on several new volumes on scienti topics.

THE "BLIND EVANGELIST," Rev. Thomas Hston, of Frenchtown, N. J., bas lately ccluded a series of meetings in the M. E. Clrch, Hancock, N. Y. As a result forty-fo joined the M. E. Church, ten the Baptist, a several others the Presbyterian. The last tw weeks in January he labored in the Presbyrian Church, Shelter Island, N. Y., and eity persons professed conversion, most of wm have signed cards to join the Presbytean Cnurch. In a revival which he conded recently in the South Side Presbyterian Clrch, Pittsburg, Pa., over two hundred profeed conversion and one hundred and fifty uted with the church.

SOME TWENTY-EIGHT years ago a colored Mion Sabbath School was organized in a ve poor locality in Camden, N. J. Many of the children have since grown to be useful Cistian workers. Twenty-six years ago a mers' meeting was started, which still contles. The women learn Bible verses, in alabetical order, and those who cannot read reat a verse of some old hymn at the afterslice. There is also a very active Loyal Tperance Legion, in its second generation. Tl testimony service, that is always a part of th proceedings, would be an inspiration to my. The superintendent is Mrs. Isabel Sbley, 880 Ferry Avenue, Camden, N. J.

DR. L. D. HOWE, the physician who did su heroic service among the victims of the Cry mine disaster and who founded a relief wk among the survivors and the relatives of thvictims, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD: "ere are over two hundred bodies still in the me. I think it will be reopened, say in the weeks. I have received numerous donatis of money through your readers, from as fwest as Idaho and California. I have used the small sums—say, $15 all—to the best of mability in relief work. Even to-day I reced a letter from Fondis, Colo., where good pple have offered to take in a widow or a chd. I have received over fifty such letters fm readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and he I can place some of these poor people in gd homes later on."

ONE NIGHT not long ago, when Superintdent Hallimond, of the Bowery Mission, asd those who wished to be prayed for to pblicly make their wants known, a young fow of about twenty-two arose and said: "I wi you'd pray for me. I was a bad boy and ra away from my home in the old country; but I ant to do right and want you to pray that G will help me. I also ask prayers for my pents in Ireland, and that I may soon be rested to them." He was prayed for. He atended the mission nightly for about a week. T superintendent found that he had walked toVest Farms, a distance of twelve miles, the pvious night to ask aid of a minister he knew the. The minister was not at home and the pr fellow walked back to the mission again, sas not to miss the service. He was pennile, homeless, hungry. As he seemed to be ting hard, he was assisted in every way. One d he came to Superintendent Hallimond and sd: "I appreciate what you've done and are dg for me, and would repay you, but I have n money. I was a barber by trade, and if y'll get me a chair and a razor I'll shave the m of the mission and have them all tidied up bSunday." A free barber shop was started athe mission, and the young man proved as gd as his word.

UNITED STATES Consul-General Philip C. Jna writes to Dr. Klopsch from Monterey, Mico: "You have probably learned of my sere illness, as I asked the State Department btelegraph to inform you that I was very ill but that relief work was being properly atended to. I have nearly recovered. I am se that it would afford you and THE CHRISTN HERALD family special satisfaction to see hv much relief to suffering humanity the bkets you sent have afforded. This has been aunusually cold winter, and the people who he been visited by flood and frost were poorly pared for severe weather. These blankets he brought comfort to thousands of poor fmilies, and have kept many women and children from perishing. The people of this countis rich and poor, will never forget what has bn done to relieve the situation. I have received abundance of corn from other directhis. The corn has come by the carloads fm Texas and other points in our country. A large quantity of rice and beans has been reived; but nothing has been more appreced by the poorly clad and poorly housed ple than the blankets. If I were to suggest f you a decoration for your part in this rel work, it would be that of 'Sir Knight of t Gray Blanket,' for, in the opinion of the or of Mexico, such would beat the decoration of the Garter all to pieces. The sewing mahines you sent us are beautiful, and exceedily useful. We are placing them out with sfet care, so that they cannot be seized for ot or taken away from the poor women to om they are given to enable them to support tir families. They will help to make one hdred happy homes for years to come."

A Perfect Wonder

The Little Giant reaches every crack, corner and crevice of the floor; the cracks in the wall, the ceiling and mouldings. It cleans and renovates bedding, comforts, blankets, mattresses and pillows; the cracks or crevices in wooden and iron beds; even the dust, fuzz and other accumulation in the tightly coiled woven wire springs. It reaches and cleans such inaccessible places as trunks, linen closets, desks, document files, pigeon-holes, radiators, registers, etc., etc., ad infinitum.

The Little Giant House Cleaner consists of a powerful gasoline engine, a double acting suction air pump, a vacuum condenser, cold water tank, electric spark battery, vacuum gauge, high pressure suction hose, observation glass, and cleaning tools, all properly connected so as to work in unison and give the desired results. The whole is erected upon a substantial four-wheel wagon, to be drawn by hand, so that it can be moved from place to place.

Nothing to Compare With It.

There are several small machines on the market for home use to be worked either by hand or a small water or electric motor, but they have never been a success because they do not have power enough to clean with, although they will draw the top dust from the room. The Little Giant Cleaner does the same work in the same way as the large machines costing from $2,000 to $7,000 each. It has the same size hose.

We have seen it pull out pail after pail of dirt from houses—dirt that was impossible to remove completely by the ordinary means of heating, etc. When it is working on the streets, the dirt and filth pouring through the observation glass attracts a crowd of people that look with wonder. They would not believe it possible.

The ordinary house can be cleaned by two men with a Little Giant House Cleaner in from one to four hours, and when the work is finished all of the furnishings will be in their original places.

RIDPATH'S enviable position as an historian is due to his wonderfully beautiful style, a style no other historian has ever equaled. He pictures the great historical events as though they were happening before your eyes; he carries you with him to see the battles of old; to meet kings and queens and warriors; to sit in the Roman senate; to march against Saladin and his dark-skinned followers; to sail the southern seas with Drake; to circumnavigate the globe with Magellan; to watch that thin line of Greek spearmen work havoc with the Persian hordes on the field of Marathon; to know Napoleon as you know Roosevelt.

RIDPATH in your home means you need never spend a lonely evening. You can associate with the world's heroes; you can cross the Rubicon with Cæsar, after which Rome was free no more. You can sit at the feet of Socrates, the loftiest genius of the ancient world. You can kneel at the shrine of Lincoln, "the greatest character of all time, the gentlest memory of our world." It is ennobling to commune with these children of destiny. To be associated with great men is to be great one's self, and you will add to your store of knowledge which is power, and to the richness of your life.

MAULE'S SEEDS

Once Grown Always Grown

Few gardeners have any idea of the size of the Maule Seed business. To one firm of celery growers I have sold in the last five years over 1,000 pounds of my XX Golden Self-Blanching Celery seed; this year I have already shipped them 200 pounds for their own planting. To another gardener I shipped last year $550 worth of Maule's Prize Earliest Cauliflower; this year I am getting $100 per pound for this seed. In one county in New York last season I sold almost 1,000 pounds of my selected Danish Ballhead Cabbage. One of my customers last year cleared up $3,375 net on 15 acres of Maule's Earliest Valentine Beans; another made $9,000 net profit on a 50-acre field of White Bush Squash; another, on 300 acres on an Island in the San Joaquin River, in California, made a net profit of $92,000 on Maule's XX Golden Self-Blanching Celery. In the small town of Sunnyside, Wash., I shipped last year direct to growers 110 pounds of Maule's Earliest of All Tomato seed, while in a small town in Texas, with a population of 25, more than $3,000 worth of Maule's Seeds are annually consumed.

I will be glad to send my Seed Book for 1910 to every reader of Christian Herald who will send me their address on a postal.

Other facts are that in the last five years I have paid the U. S. Government $214,898.07 in cash for postage. For years I have received more registered letters at the Philadelphia Post Office than any other Philadelphia seed house. In my home State of Pennsylvania alone I have 67,801 customers, fully 15,000 more than any other seed house in the country. During the late Boer War more cases of Maule's Seeds, bound for the Transvaal, were held up by the British Army than of any other seedsman, whether French, German, English or American. These facts may prove of interest to readers of the Christian Herald who do not know Maule. Maule's Seeds have today a reputation surpassed by none, equaled by few, and as you can get

An Algerian Maid

A MOUNTAIN TOUR IN ALGERIA

By SASHA E. PERKIN

Daughter of the late Sir W. H. Perkin

"WHY go interfering with other people's religion, and upsetting them? Why not leave them alone?"

Arguments like these bring vividly before me a remembrance of two women living in mountain villages in Algeria. I see again those wistful faces. One hot day in July we went up a steep burnt hillside to visit a village, which, though not far from civilization and near a railway, we had not visited before. The village, as we approached it, looked like a cluster of faggot stacks. We tried to make friends with some shy children, but they would hardly let us come near them. Then we made for a group of women, at the entrance of the village, and after the usual formalities asked if we might read and talk with them.

"No," they said. "Go away again on the hills. You have one religion, and we have another—and they are not the same."

But a woman stepped out from among them. "You come with me," she said. We followed her down the bare hillside to another group of huts, somewhat better than the first. These had mud walls and red-tiled roofs. Our guide invited us into one. It was absolutely dark, and the only furniture was a large straw mat. We groped our way in, and sat down on the mat. We found that our hostess was Aissha, the wife of the sheikh, the headman of the village. Women and children came and squatted round us, and listened eagerly to the few simple words about the Gospel. "These are women sent from God," they whispered among themselves. They repeated again and again the simple prayer we made; it was as much as they could grasp. It was: "Oh, our Lord Jesus, save me from all my sins." We said: "If you can say that from your heart, and not merely with your lips, He will hear you."

Aissha repeated the words wonderingly, as though they were too good to be true. Then we sang a hymn for the children, with a few words of explanation, saying, "The Lord loves the children." How the mothers brightened up at that! The girls were as anxious to get the prayer by heart as the women.

Now a large dish of semolina and eggs was placed before us, with two wooden spoons, and to please our hostess we had to make a show of eating very heartily, though it was too hot to eat much.

Aissha took up the remains of our meal and carried them to our guide, who was waiting outside. While he was eating, she said, "Tell me more." She drank in every word. When the guide was ready, Aissha kissed me and said, "I will pray to him tonight." Then she added beseechingly, "Come again soon, and remind me."

That was more than two years ago, and though we have never forgotten that pleading figure on the bleak hillside we have not been able to go again. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few."

Mohammedan Women Wearing the "Yashmak"

A year later, on a glowing summer afternoon, we approached a village far away in a different part of the mountains. The little cluster of huts was framed with pomegranate trees, ablaze with scarlet flowers, and the afternoon sun shone through the golden green leaves. This village had been visited before, and we were recognized and welcomed. A mat was spread under a tree, and we talked to a sick man and a group of women. Then we visited two women in a hut, who were grinding corn with a stone hand-mill, such as is used in Palestine. They said that they often spoke together of what they had heard the previous year and they were eager to hear again. Last of all, we came upon a girl wife, Haweesha. Miss Lillian Trotter had spoken, the summer before, to a group of inattentive women, and Haweesha was among them. She had been interested and had remembered a little, and she invited us to sit down, and listened intently. After a while she broke in: "But, listen! You can read and remind yourselves, every day; but we only hear once a year, and though we try to remember, it slips from us."

It was getting late, and we had to go, promising to pray every day that Haweesha might remember the words of life. That was more than a year ago, and we have not been able to go back to remind her. As we remember these two, Aissha and Haweesha, and many others like them, we commend them to the tender Shepherd of the scattered sheep and are comforted for them as we are reminded that "whosoever calleth on his name shall be saved."

"They are satisfied with their religion; it is good enough for them." We hear this again and again. Thank God, the early Christian Church did not say this of the ancient Britons, nor of our Saxon forefathers. An English novelist has been vindicating Mohammedanism. There is one answer to him, and to all who idealize non-Christian religions: "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we may be saved."

A missionary entered into conversation with a young Arab student, who was traveling in the same

WHEN MY LORD JESUS COMES

An Unpublished Sermon by DWIGHT L. MOODY, America's Greatest Evangelist*

This is one of some twenty remarkable sermons by Moody, never before published, and the existence of which was disclosed only a few weeks ago. The absolute authenticity of the sermons is vouched for by the evangelist's son, Wm. R. Moody, who cordially approves their publication in this paper. The sermons are now the exclusive property of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. One will appear each month.

WE have for our subject this morning "The Return of Our Lord." I believe it is about the only subject that I have brought up here that we are divided upon. We all agree upon his coming back, but are divided about the time. Some say he is coming before the millennium; some think he is coming at the close. Some think there will be no millennium until he does come in person, and others think the world is going to grow better and better, until it gets so upright, loving and good, that he will be drawn right down from heaven and cannot stay away longer. Those who believe that he comes at the end are called post-millennarians, and those before are pre-millennarians.

The Mystery of His Coming

Now, I want to stir you up to look into the subject, to think about his coming some time. Some people think he is never coming at all; but what we want is to have something to look forward to. Don't criticise if our watches don't agree about the time that we know he is coming. That is settled, I think, eternally. Who that believes the Bible doubts that Christ is going to return to the earth? He has bought it with his own blood; he is going to have it. He has redeemed it; and the Father is going to give it to him. And the time is coming when the Lord will sway his sceptre from the river to the ends of the earth. Satan will meet his match until he becomes like the dust of the summer threshing-floor.

There's many better men than I am that don't agree with me in pre-millennial views; but I love them all the same. We will not have division. If you preach the other side of the millennium, I will preach this side. Let us get at it, and see what the Scripture says. Some people have an idea that it is one of those horrid subjects, so mysterious that you don't want to touch it. People have said, "There's no danger of his coming in my day, therefore it's nothing to me." But, my friend, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and all is profitable." "All," not a "part." I believe the reason why we have got so many good Christians, good in spots, but mighty poor in others, is that they live on too few truths. We want to take the whole of it, and take things we don't understand half way.

I used to think the world was going to get so good that Jesus wouldn't come back. I believe he is coming before the millennium—that is my standard; but what I want is that you should study the Bible for yourself, and come to your own conclusion.

In the first place, I want to show you the importance of this subject. The denominations all make a good deal of baptism—I don't know of one that doesn't make a good deal about it, unless it be the Quakers. Take Paul's last letters; he writes about baptism thirteen times in his Epistles, but he writes of the return of our Lord fifty times. There are 260 chapters in the New Testament, and 318 passages about the return of our Lord; so that there is an average of more than one passage to every chapter.

Another thought: What is it that makes certain chapters very precious to all the churches? Now, I suppose that no one will contradict the statement that the fifteenth chapter of I. Corinthians is one of the sweetest portions of Scripture, and very precious to the whole Church of God. Perhaps there is not one single chapter in all Paul's Epistles that is read oftener than that fifteenth chapter of his first letter to the Corinthians. Why is it that this is so precious? It not only tells us what the Gospel is, that Jesus died for our sins and rose again for our justification, but it tells us that Christ went back to heaven and that he is coming back again. I used to read that chapter, but I did not get the sweetest part of it. In the fifty-first verse he says: "I show you a mystery: We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. . . . Then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory."

Now that is what makes that chapter one of the most famous in the Bible. I suppose the high mountain peak of the Gospels is the fourteenth chapter of John; I don't think any one will challenge that statement. It is read oftener in the sick-room and at funerals than any other chapter in all the Bible. "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself: that where I am, there ye may be also."

"I go to prepare a place for you." I used to think that was what made that chapter so famous; but there is something even sweeter than that. He is coming back again! "I will come and receive you unto myself." I do thank God for the promise of his return—of his coming back. Mark you—we have the same authority to believe that he is coming back as that he was going away. It was an angel that told Daniel he was going to come; it was an angel told Mary he would come; that told the shepherds he was already come; an angel that told that he was risen from the dead, and an angel told us he was coming back again. An angel dropped down, and said, "Ye men of Galilee, this same Jesus that you have seen taken shall come in like manner." That is how he is coming—just the same body he took up from this earth. That is the declaration of this blessed Book, and we have the same authority to believe that he is coming back as we have that he came first.

Now, I believe truth has suffered more from its so-called friends than from others. We have been making out a programme to tell us what is going to happen, and one who does that has a big job. If any one had tried to tell what Jesus would do when he first came, he would have had a job indeed. We have been told that he would be born in Bethlehem and live in Jerusalem. But when you come to make out a programme, I differ. I don't know! I don't think any one knows what is going to happen.

"The day and hour no man knoweth"

When a man begins to "figure it out"—taking up the weeks in Daniel—again I differ. I have had a good deal of experience "figuring it out"—the day, the day and the hour set. The Son of God settled that question forever. Matt. 24:35, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Verse 42: "Ye know not what hour your Lord cometh." Verse 36: "But of that day and hour knoweth no man; no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only." No man knows. That has not been revealed. The day and hour no man knoweth. Now take another, the forty-fourth verse: "Therefore be ye also ready." He is coming, and unexpectedly. "Therefore, be ye also ready, for in such a day as ye think not the Son of Man cometh.' "In such an hour as ye think not." If we knew the day and the hour, he would not be coming unexpectedly. Take the twenty-seventh verse: "For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be."

Get still another point of view. Some people think because he is going to come suddenly that everything is to be wound up in a whirl. Not a bit of it. When he first came, we find the holy priest there, and the story told that he was going to have a son, who would be the forerunner of Christ. We find the story of the shepherds of Bethlehem; we find the old prophets and prophetesses there in the temple, and the old women. Thirty years pass. Then appeared John on the banks of the Jordan and he preached that Jesus was come. Then Christ was baptized. Then, after those thirty years, what took place? His death, his resurrection and ascension. These were the events that took place at his first coming.

He will come again suddenly; but don't think everything is to be closed up with a whirl. When the Lord comes, he brings joy and light, and drives away darkness. You don't need to be afraid of this doctrine. Christ says, "Fear not! I have come to do you good." And what you want is to thank God that he is going to come in his own way, and be ever watching and ready with hope for his coming.

Watch and Pray for His Coming

Now some of us say, "That means death." Not a bit of it. I don't believe you are told to "watch for death," but for himself. There is a deal of difference in watching for death. There is no joy in thinking of going down into the grave, to be eaten up by worms; but rather like Elijah, of being taken up into heaven. Cheat the undertaker, if you can.

John 21:21: "Peter saith to Jesus, And what shall this man do?" What shall John do? "Jesus saith to him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me. Then went this saying abroad that that disciple should not die. But Jesus said not unto him, He shall not die; but If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?" There is a distinction between death and the coming of the Lord. The disciples made that distinction. "This is the disciple which testifieth of these things, and wrote these things, and we know that his testimony is true."

There is one thing we are told to be ready for and watch for, and that is for the return of our Lord. Over and over again he tells his disciples to be on guard, to be watchful. Mark 13:33: "Take ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is. For the Son of Man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch. Watch ye, therefore, for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock crowing, or in the morning. And what I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch." And do you know he seldom speaks of his return without adding this word, "Watch"? Many have ceased to expect him much less to desire his return; yet we are told three times in these few verses to "watch." It is always safe to do what God tells us. If he should say "run," run; if he tells you to "stand still," stand still; and if he says "watch," then watch. That is the true attitude of every Christian. In the parable of the Ten Virgins he gives a hint—to tarry. But they are to keep their lights burning, for they could not tell the day nor the hour when the bridegroom would come. Did you ever notice how one disappointment followed after another? They felt they had plenty of oil; they thought they could borrow. they were disappointed, and then they thought they could buy, and they were again disappointed.

O man and woman! Make sure that all is well with you—that you are doing what God commands you to do, and then, if death overtakes you as an accident, and you are taken away before the return you are doing what the Master tells you, and you shall have a "part in the first resurrection."

Notice the letter to the Thessalonians. I know some think that is the first letter Paul ever wrote. The fourteenth verse of the fourth chapter says: "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, That we which are alive and remain shall not prevent [come before] them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend

A LITTLE TALK ON SENTIMENT

By Rev. J. M. FARRAR, D.D.*

GOOD-BY to February. This month is short in days, but large in celebrations. It is a month of sentiment. I hear some one asking, "What is sentiment?" It is something that comes to you when you are not looking for it. It comes from your heart. Let us take an example: As you walk along the street you see a man whipping a boy. This makes you think. If you hold the "think" in your brain, it will keep cool and you will be able to reason about it. You will say, probably, the boy was bad and needed a whipping. You can put the thought in cold storage; that is, in your brain, and pass on. But if you let the thought get into your heart—warm storage—you will begin to be sorry for the boy. A tear will come into your eye, and you will go up and ask the man not to whip the boy: "Please, mister, give him another chance." The feeling that made you sorry for the boy is what we call "sentiment." It is a cold thought from your brain warmed up in your heart. You should think, and think hard. Make your brain work. But you have a heart as well as a brain, and through your heart you should pass all your thinking. The warm heart will soften the edges of your thought and give you some "sentiment."

THERE are some people who think they should obey what the brain says, and not listen to the heart. I heard of a boy who decided that he would only put "think" through his brain, and not through his heart. He was determined to be guided by reason alone and not by any sentiment. One day he did something that was wrong, and that made his mother cry. He took one of her tears to his chemistry teacher, and asked him to analyze it. The teacher told him this tear was composed of phosphate of lime and soda. The boy went home and told his mother that when she cried she was wasting her lime and soda. He did not have any "sentiment." Another boy saw his mother crying, and the tear on her cheek not only went through his brain, but he let it go through his heart. His heart told him that the mother's tear was composed of love and sympathy. Putting his arms about his mother's neck he said, "Mother, I am sorry to vex you; I shall be a good boy, and not make you cry again." One boy used his brain, but not his heart. The other boy used brain and heart. Which of the boys do you like better? I am sure that you like better the boy who let his thought pass through his heart and whose sentiment prompted him to be kind to his mother.

WHEN Christ was visiting in Bethany a woman broke a box of precious ointment, and poured it on his head. Her thought about Christ was not in her brain only, but also in her heart. Those who had no sentiment said, "Why was this waste?" They did not let the thought into their hearts. She was pouring out her love, but all they saw was the ointment. Cold brain said she was wasting the ointment. Christ told them that it was a sweet sentiment, it was not waste. The broken box became her monument. Christ said, wheresoever his Gospel is preached in all the world, this story shall be told.

I WANT my juniors to think about Christ. "What think ye of Christ?" But do not forget to hold your "think" in your heart until there is a tear in your eye. Your brain will tell you that Christ is the greatest man who ever lived. Your heart will tell you to love him as your best friend and Saviour. Love is a great sentiment. Do not forget that there is plenty of room in your brain and heart for both reason and sentiment. Napoleon had a big brain, and could reason out great problems. He also had a big heart and had room for sentiment. One day, when marching rapidly to a great battle, he stopped to turn over a turtle that was struggling on its back. That was a good "sentiment."

THE woman who poured the ointment on Christ's head got a great reward. But she was not expecting any reward. I read in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of a girl who got a reward for sentiment. This young girl had nursed an aged relation, who was neglected by her other relatives. When the woman died, she left some money and an old watch. This watch was to be given to whichever one of the heirs might choose to take it instead of $500. One after another examined it, and said: "Give me the $500; the old watch rattles, but will not tick."

BUT the girl who had nursed the old lady said she would take the watch because it had her friend's picture in it. She was ridiculed for her sentiment, which the other relatives called foolishness. But she got an unexpected reward for her sentiment. One day, when looking at the picture, she accidentally touched a secret spring in the watch. It flew open, and she saw why the watch would not tick. The wheels had all been taken out. What do you suppose they had heard rattling in the watch? Not loose wheels, but beautiful diamonds, worth thousands of dollars. Each stone in the watch looked like a big tear, moulded by sympathy into a precious diamond. Her sacrifice and love were not wasted.

husband—what a separation! How men can study that Book and see Scripture constantly fulfilled in their eyes, and still doubt this doctrine, is a mystery to me—this doctrine which tells us that he is going to come—that there is to be a separation by and by! Therefore, every man and woman ought to do all they can to get their loved ones into the kingdom of God, for we don't know the day or the hour in which he is coming back. But if we are watching and waiting, working and doing what we can—doing everything to rescue some one, to get them into the kingdom—we are doing what he tells us, for he has said, "Occupy till I come."

train. The Arab said: "I have a Gospel of John, and every night eight of us gather together, when our studies are over, and read it." He further said: "Our religion tells us to pray and fast and give alms; but it does not tell us how we may be saved from our sins. Your religion tells you that!" The other day a thoughtful Morocean, who had a shop in Algeria, said to Miss Lillian Trotter, our missionary: "I want to know how to get rid of my sins, and, if you know the way, you ought to tell me." This is just a glimpse, as it were, of what is not being done in North Africa. In Africa, as a whole, the undone looms so large that the done is as nothing beside it. Algeria occupies a very small space on the map; but there are many villages among the mountains and in the plains, and there are populous towns on the edge of the desert, and large nomad communities, which are all in darkness still. Now, when religious freedom has been declared in Turkey, is the strategic moment in the history of missions to the Moslems. Now is the time to push forward and with the fresh opportunity God is sending us more workers. He has put into the heart of the Methodist Church to establish a centre at Algiers. Each one of us must do our share in the work. It is prayer that we need. Pray for us, and for the people.

FLOODS STILL THREATEN FRANCE

A Party of Soldiers on Patrol Duty

Longshoremen Who Saved Lives and Property

SLOWLY and sullenly the black and turbid waters of the Seine have drawn back, inch by inch and foot by foot, from the streets of Paris, as if unwilling to release the beautiful districts which had become their prey. After the waters had gone down several feet there was a heavy fall of rain in the country districts, and the river rose two feet, while the people looked on with a feeling of total helplessness and despair. Then it receded once more, and is still gradually falling and seeking its natural channel, from which it had not emerged for over a century until a few weeks ago.

The pictures received from Paris still show new phases of the flood and of the way the usual life of the French capital was interrupted. The collection of animals has always been a favorite objective point for sightseers from abroad, and even the more volatile French people seem never to tire of strolling about the cages and the bear pits. The animals are kept, strange as it may seem, in the Jardin des Plantes, or botanical gardens. The water gradually invaded the precincts of the garden, greatly to the astonishment of the four-footed inhabitants and to the consternation of the keepers, who were afraid that many of them would be drowned.

The white polar bears at first seemed to enjoy it, but as the water continued to rise, and there was no floating cake of ice on which they were accustomed, in their native state, to take refuge, they became alarmed and swam about, seeking some way of escape.

At last the animals were lifted out of the pits, and, but little the worse for their experience, were transported to safe quarters on higher ground.

The great railway stations are yet deserted. In several of the most important the water rose to the height of the ticket-sellers' window, and soldiers, who rowed into the waiting-rooms, found the benches and seats overturned or floating about. Now that the water is out of the stations no trains run in, as it is feared that the tracks would sink under the weight of the first train to use them. Everything must be tested and braced before it can be subjected to strain.

The postal service continued its work as nearly as possible in the usual way, but it was an odd sight to see the postmen wading in their heavy boots in water two feet deep to deliver letters on a flooded street, or else rowing in a light ... where the water was yet deeper, while some ... reached down from the second floor to get ... mail. PRESERVING THE WILL OF GEORGE WASHINGTON

THANKS to the timely intervention of government officials, the last will and testament of George Washington is to be preserved to posterity. For some years past it has been to all admirers of our first President a matter of grave concern and regret that the most interesting relic of the Father of His Country was being allowed to fall into decay, with every prospect that it would ere long be wholly lost to the nation. The will, of which there are twenty-three pages, all in Washington's own handwriting, was filed for probate in the year 1800 at the quaint county court house, still standing, at Fairfax, Va. In this isolated community it has remained much of the time since, save when it was carried to Richmond for safe-keeping during the Civil War.

However, the will has been subjected to much handling at one time or another, and finally reached a state where almost every page was torn across, or rather worn through along the line of the crease made where it had been folded. Then, to make matters worse, some person attempted to restore these pages by sewing them, with the inevitable result that fresh holes were made in the precious document, and the bindings gradually wore new rents. Of late years historians and others have been seeking to have the United States Government experts restore the will.

The officials of the State Department were willing to undertake it if the will be brought to the capital, but it could not be removed from Virginia, he ... a seeming insurmountable obstacle. Finally arr... ge-ments were made to send the expert of the U...ed States Library of Congress to Fairfax to d...he work there. He devoted some sixteen days t...he task, and by a miracle of manuscript surgery ...nd document restoration he has given the will ...ac-tically the same appearance it had when it ...rst left the hands of its author. All the wounds ...nd scars have been obliterated, and the ink "set' ...nd made more vivid. Henceforth the relic will be re-served in a fireproof, burglar-proof steel case, ...ich will be specially constructed, under the super...ion of the government officials, to serve as its pe...a-nent repository.

In witness of all, and of each of the things herein-

THE WASHINGTON ANCESTRAL HOME

The Large Dining-Room of Sulgrave Manor House

A Bedroom Showing Half-timber Partitions and Carved Bedstead

SULGRAVE, the ancestral home of the Washingtons, is a small and beautiful English village in the county of Northampton. The scenery about it has no striking features, but presents to the eye a pleasant variety of dale and gentle hills, with a patch of forest here and there in the green park surrounding some ancient manor house or nobleman's seat. Numerous churches, dating back even to Norman days, lift their embattled towers above the red-tiled and brown-thatched roofs of the quiet hamlets, and to the American visitor Northamptonshire is even as attractive a county to visit as storied Warwickshire, off to the northwest, even if we do not bar the fact that the latter is Shakespeare's own countryside. If Warwick has its Shakespeare shrines at Stratford-on-Avon, at Shottery and Wilmcot, Northampton draws the American with irresistible interest, for it was the home of the Washingtons, ancestors of our first President and commander of the brave little army which he led in defeat and victory, from beneath the elm at Cambridge, in Massachusetts, to the redoubts at Yorktown, in Virginia.

Sulgrave, lying a little off the beaten track, is not so much visited as if it were on the main line of travel; but nevertheless, every summer some patriotic Americans find their way there, to visit the old manor house of the Washingtons and to sit for a while in one of the pews in the old medieval church, where several generations of the family lie buried. Besides the line of Washingtons from which our first President was descended, other branches of the family were seated in Northamptonshire, one living for some time at Wormleighton.

Sulgrave Manor House stands in the outskirts of the village, and to the American tourists it is a most satisfying example of an "Old World house," though a little fallen from the dignity it probably enjoyed in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. It is of stone, covered with mastic. It has broad windows, the larger on the front of the lower story. The entrance is through a fine Tudor doorway, with ornamental spandrels at the top, and the door itself is of stout oak, swinging on long wrought-iron hinges. This door is situated in a two-story projection from the left hand of the main front, and over the archway is the coat-of-arms of the Washingtons, with its mulets, or stars. Above this is a window, and higher still the royal arms of England, as they were quartered in the days of bluff King Henry VIII.

There is a large wing to the house, which the English ivy has covered to the roof with its thick green curtain. The roof of the manor house is made of heavy pieces of slate, lichened and most picturesquely worn and eaten with the passing years.

Passing through the entry the visitor finds himself in what was the great hall of the old manor house. At a period subsequent to its occupancy by the Washingtons, the hall was cut by a partition into two large rooms. The great beams overhead and the heavy oaken finish of doors and windows give a fair idea of what its appearance used to be if we use our imagination a little.

The house looks so quaint on the exterior that, as the visitor passes from room to room, he looks involuntarily, but in vain, for the portraits of the earlier Washingtons upon the walls, with a cluster of halberds and headpieces above the chimney place, and the old oaken forms and court cupboards that once must have composed its furnishing.

A Street in Sulgrave Village

The large fireplaces, which used to hold a backlog and a barrel of kindling beside, have now small grates, which probably give twice as much heat to those seated about on a winter's night, but which are less picturesque. The large stone blocks of the fireplace in the pleasant dining-room give an idea of the solidity with which the whole building is put together.

Laurence Washington, the builder of the house, was Mayor of Northampton in 1532 and in 1545. He was the son of John Washington. Laurence's wife was Amee, the daughter of Robert Porgeter, of Gretworth. If you pass to the adjacent parish church you will find in the south aisle, just underneath the east window, a stone slab covering the burial place of this Laurence Washington, and on it is a carved figure, now headless, which represented him. At his side was formerly a brass, commemorating his wife, but this has disappeared, torn away by some vandal hand. The inscription, however, has been restored and may be read in full, lacking a date or two, which were probably never filled in.

Laurence Washington was succeeded by his son Robert, and the latter, with his son, sold Sulgrave Manor in 1610. This son's name was Laurence, and he lived later at Brington, a picture of which was printed recently in this paper. He died in 1616. He had five sons, the eldest being William Washington, who served his king gallantly in the field and, receiving the honor of knighthood, was known as Sir William Washington of Packington. He died in 1643. A younger son of the second Laurence was named Laurence also. He was a fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford, and a clergyman of the Church of England. He was rector at Bureligh, Essex, from 1633 to 1643. He had a son, John, who went to Virginia. He had a son, Laurence, who died in 1697, and who had a son, Augustine, who died in 1743. Augustine was the father of George Washington, of Mount Vernon.

Such in brief is the line of the Washingtons from the time they first made their home at Sulgrave. Without doubt George Washington owed much to them, for they played a man's part in the world, serving well their king and country. R. S. BLAIR.

HOW WASHINGTON MET ONE CRISIS

ONE of the most trying situations which confronted Washington in the last year of the war with the mother country was when Congress planned to reduce the size of the Army, which had suffered somewhat from a lack of supplies, and send them home with a small part of the pay due the men and officers. In this state of affairs a military faction began to show open opposition to the plans of Congress, and anonymous pamphlets were circulated, disparaging a republican form of government, as illustrated in the acts of Congress, and calling on Washington to take a decisive step and for the Army. The Army was camped at Newburg on the Hudson, after leaving the French forces at Verplanck's Point. One officer begged Washington to make himself king. He indignantly refused. Shortly after, on March 15, 1783, Washington attended a meeting of the discontented officers and pointed out to them the "irregularity and impropriety of their conduct," and reading a most remarkable address, appealed to their patriotism. He then assured them, on the strength of a letter from Congress, that they would be generously dealt with; and at length the trouble was satisfactorily settled.

Mr. Fairbanks and the Pope

CONSIDERABLY more than a "tempest in a teapot" has been stirred up by the recent incident in Rome, in which the Pope and Ex-Vice-President Fairbanks were the principal characters. When Mr. Fairbanks, by declining to cancel his engagement to speak at the American Methodist Church in that city, as the Pope requested, sacrificed the coveted honor of a presentation at the Vatican, he did precisely what a true American should have done. Had he weakly yielded, it would have been at the cost of his manhood and his independence. The honor would have been too dear at the price. Had he broken faith with his countrymen, and turned his back upon them at the Pontiff's august command, he would have done a shameful thing. Rejection by the Vatican is, after all, a comparatively small matter; ere now, it has rejected kings and princes, and men who have been great leaders in the world's thought and progress. But Mr. Fairbanks did the right thing at the right moment, and what was intended as a snub and a rebuff comes to him as a great tribute; for all men, saving only the apologists of the Vatican, thank him for what he did. By his wise and timely words at the meeting to which the Pontiff had objected so strongly, he proved that an American citizen can be more broad-minded and tolerant than the Pope of Rome. He lost the honor of a presentation; but he won a greater prize—the approval of his fellow-countrymen, and the respect of right-thinking people everywhere.

The Latest Attack on Christianity

WE learn by the cable that a certain Professor Drews, of Karlsruhe, Germany, who is said to be a man of great learning, recently spoke before a public audience and later before an assembly composed exclusively of theologians, delivering at each of these gatherings an extended address, the object of which was to prove that no such person as Jesus Christ ever existed. He pronounced the whole record of the life, ministry and death of Jesus on earth a myth. He rejected the testimony of Christian writers as prejudiced and unworthy of credence, and wholly ignored the evidence of such secular writers as Tacitus, Pliny, Lucian, Suetonius and Eusebius. He excluded the Gospels, although their historical accuracy is established and accepted throughout the world. He seems to have directed his main attack against the much discussed passages in the works of Josephus, the eminent Jewish historian, which refer to Christ. Those passages have frequently been assailed by anti-Christian writers in the past, none of whom, however, have succeeded in disproving them, so they remain in the works of Josephus up to the present time.

For a man of learning, Professor Drews did a most singular thing. While apparently exhausting the field of anti-Christian research, he overlooked one source from which he ought to have sought information—the Talmud. Every notable Jewish scholar to-day knows that the Talmud, up to the year 1631 A.D., did contain a record of the accusation, arrest, trial and conviction of Jesus. This record was written, of course, from the Jewish standpoint, and appeared in every copy of the Talmud, from the first centuries of the Christian era up to the seventeenth century. Owing to the bitter persecution of the Jews in Europe, a Jewish World Synod, held at Jaroslav, Poland, in 1631, ordained by formal proclamation that in every copy of the Talmud thereafter all reference to Jesus Christ, and everything relating to his life and death, should be omitted, and that the sign of a circle should stand instead of such references, which would be understood by the initiated. It was explained in the Synod's proclamation that this action was taken because the references to Jesus Christ in the Talmud had provoked Jewish persecution, and that their removal would leave the people to the enjoyment of peace. There are copies of the ancient Talmud still in existence, containing all of this subsequently prohibited record. These facts have been known to practically all of our great Bible scholars: Lightfoot, Lardner, Munschen, Wuensche, Poffer and others—all of them men of eminent learning. They went down to the very roots of the matter; they did not halt at Josephus. They went to the Talmud, where they found the most direct and convincing testimony of the life of Christ, from the anti-Christian standpoint—testimony that could not be gainsaid. If there were no other written or printed line in the whole world, and never had been any other, this Jewish account alone would suffice to establish the fact that Jesus lived and suffered and died. Even to-day there is no well-read Jew who denies that Jesus lived. Only a few weeks ago several leading American rabbis declared in public addresses that the Jews regarded him as a great Jewish prophet and teacher, though not divine. They knew the meaning of the circle in the Talmud, which Professor Drews does not seem to have ever heard of.

Moses Maimonides, the great Jewish reformer, who was called "the glory of Israel" and who lived in the twelfth century, in his writings on the Talmud Torah recognized Jesus of Nazareth as a great prophet, "who prepared the way for the Gentiles to enter into the kingdom of heaven."

A Day for Review

IT has unfortunately become the habit of superficial writers and thinkers, overcome with a new idea, to deride patriotism, saying that we should be citizens of the entire world and not of any one country, and that patriotism is a manifestation of a narrow spirit. Nothing could be further from the truth. We can be steadfast, patriotic Americans, rejoicing in the great deeds of the founders of the nation, and still see the good points in the government and people of other lands.

Our patriotism is not narrow, but most generous. It is one of the finest emotions that can inspire the human heart. Patriotism should be taught to the growing generation, and to the people from other lands who have adopted our flag as their own. We should use every patriotic anniversary as an opportunity to tell again the story of the men who started a great nation from the thirteen English colonies; and, as a time for a review of our present conditions, to see by comparison if we are remaining loyal to the lofty ideals which inspired them and which made our present government and country of opportunity something more than the Utopian dream of philosophers.

Washington's Birthday is still celebrated in ry State of the Union, and as long as it is obs ed with some sense of its national and patriotic in rt it will show that we still firmly believe in the ty of leadership of which he was the greatest exa le, and also the vital things for which he stood, th the other patriots, in the period "which tried n's souls."

We have an historic past no less interesting an that of older nations, and in every way possibl he memory of early achievements, and the great fi es who participated in them, should be kept fre in memory. If we arrive at the point where se anniversaries, such as the 22d of February, be ne meaningless, then we will have true cause for a m as to the future of our country, but not until n. Every effort should be made to mark historic s s, and honor with statues our national heroes. T se statues serve as signposts to the people of the n- try and keep before them a high ideal to mea re up to, an inspiration for every boy and girl.

To Investigate Postal Rates

SENATOR CLAY of Georgia, adopting the g- gestion of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, has i o- duced a resolution providing for an investig on by the Interstate Commerce Commission of e comparative cost of transporting publications d g- nated as second-class mail matter, both in this c n- try and abroad. His resolution also include m inquiry into the comparative rates paid by the v- ernment and by the express companies to the n- cipal railroad companies in the United State or service of the same character. This resolutic if adopted, would pave the way for a rational u r- standing of the whole situation. As we expl ed last week, Canada, with a territory equally as ge as ours and in many parts sparsely settled, is w carrying second-class matter at one-quarter a cent per pound, just one-fourth of the rate th is being charged by our Postoffice Department for r- rying periodicals. At the one-half cent rate e Canadian postoffice found the business so profi le that, in order to give its people the benefit of a n- creased circulation of general literature, it cu e rate clean in half. Our own public express n- panies in this country are competing with the t- office by giving a lower rate of transportatio or newspapers and periodicals. It will be the du of the Interstate Commerce Commission to find ut how this can be reconciled with the extraordi y statement that it now costs our Postoffice De t- ment nine cents per pound to handle similar tr c.

Carmen Sylva

QUEEN ELIZABETH of Roumania, known throughout the civilized world no less for her many works of charity and benevolence than r her great literary talents, is the royal patroness the Deaconess Home in Bucharest. She is often be found there, and when the Crown Prince Wil-lm of Germany and the Crown Princess were in icharest lately, on the occasion of the seventieth rthday of King Charles, they visited the Home, d had the pleasure of meeting "Carmen Sylva." l the distinguished visitors were greatly in-rested in the work of this benevolence. One the aged Queen's ruling passions is her work nong poor blind children, which has been a bless-g to many. Her husband is almost as ardent a ilanthropist as the Queen herself. Their united forts in well-doing have furnished a most excellent ample for other monarchs, and the Roumanian ople love them greatly for their simple democratic ays. This tender spirit on the part of royalty as promised, among other things, by the prophet hen the Messiah should come.

And they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters all be carried upon their shoulders. And kings shall be thy nurs-; fathers, and their queens thy nursing mothers. (Isa. 49:22, 23.)

s Wish Gratified

A little New York newsboy, called "Rusty" on count of his red head, performed acts of peculiar liteness and kindness to a lady who is well known the New York public. mong other things, he de-ined to accept the penny for e evening paper which he fered her. This he did suc-ssively each day, in spite of r insistence that he should ke the change. Then she cepted the paper with a nile. Upon her returning to e city, after an absence of onths, he continued his cour-ous and generous act. One y Miss Elliott, the lady in uestion, asked him what he ould like to have more than ything else in the world, and e said, "An education." She as as much surprised at his swer as he was surprised at r action, for she made an ar-ngement by which he should e sent out to a military acad-my in Minnesota for his pre-minary education, she arrang-g to pay his expenses of every nd. Rusty was a country boy ho, when his mother died, rifted into the city. It is more han likely she was a good oman, who put pure impulses his heart and right thoughts his mind, which led him to ake a wise choice of an ducation, which doubtless in-uded in his plans moral and spiritual as well as tellectual development. Who could have made a tter answer than Rusty the newsboy, who did not k for money, or pleasure, or ease, but for an educa-on, that he might meet the high ideals of useful-ess and happiness which God had put in his young eart.

Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom: and with l thy getting get understanding. (Prov. 4:7.)

unshine in Jail

A new jail is to be erected in Chicago, which will e a novelty in its line. It is to be built on the top f the building, and a glass roof is to be over the ells. The design is to give sunshine, cheer and ealth, as far as possible, to the prisoners. What real reform and what a blessed thing it will be to lustrate the Christly spirit which our Master anifested, and which our better times demand. he time was, and not very long ago, when he blackest, most dismal, damp, unhealthy and retched dungeon was thought to be the becoming hing for the criminal, and thousands of lives have een sacrificed in these pestilential prisons. It is ot expected that society will construct her penal stitutions in such a way as to give ease and luxury the prisoners and put a premium on wrongdoing, nd yet it is its duty to have an eye to the health, nd even the moral reformation, of those under its urisdiction; to not only give all the sunshine and cheer possible for the health of the body and mind, but to let spiritual light into the souls of the prisoners. It has taken human society many centuries to properly apprehend and exemplify the spirit which the Great World Teacher manifested and taught in the treatment of those who are confined in the prison. Jesus, in his description of the reckoning of the judgment day, gives as one of the specific reasons for having a place on his right hand with the saved, that they had visited those confined in the prisons in his name.

I was in prison, and ye came unto me. (Matt. 25:36.)

Jews Reclaiming Palestine

The migration of Jews to Palestine, which has been going on for years, has been greatly accelerated by the proclamation of the constitution of Turkey. The Jews have literally taken Jerusalem. Four-fifths of the entire population of the city is of Hebrew faith. The bankers, merchants and business men in all departments are most of them Jews. Over a hundred Jewish schools already exist in the city, and synagogues are scattered everywhere. Large amounts of money have been poured into the city by benevolent men and societies in Europe and America, to enable the colonists to build homes, hospitals, and other institutions of beneficence. The land of Palestine, from Dan to Beersheba, is being occupied by Jewish farmers. The territory around Lake Tiberias, in the Plain of Sharon, between Jaffa and Lydda, and the Plain of Esdraelon, is one blossoming flower garden under the skill of these new settlers. Towns like Ramoth-Gilead, Bethlehem, Nazareth and Gaza, where a few years ago no Jew dared go, have now their Jewish quarters and places of worship. The Jews, after having wandered for centuries from their native land to the very ends of the earth, have prospered under the most desperate persecutions, have pushed themselves into the commercial and every other centre of influence in the world; and now, partly on account of sentiment and partly on account of sagacity, thousands of them are going back to take possession of one of the most beautiful and fertile countries on the planet, and Jerusalem, the city of their fathers and their God. Many modern Jews believe that God's covenant with Abraham, promising the Holy Land to his seed, is to be perpetual, and that they are only returning to the country which naturally belongs to them, making a practicable interpretation of the psalm of thanksgiving:

Be ye mindful always of his covenant; the word which he commanded to a thousand generations; . . . saying, Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance. (I. Chron. 16:15-18.)

War Against White Plague

In the promise to include an appropriation of $110,000 in the budget for 1910 the Board of Estimate of New York City officially recognized a determined campaign against tuberculosis. Robert W. De Forest, of the Charity Organization Society, in the first argument made for the appropriation, said that the community lost economically, through consumption, $15,000,000 a year. He claimed that the foes of tuberculosis had been handicapped in their work by insufficient funds. Dr. Woods Hutchinson claimed that the carelessness of consumptives in the tenement houses was largely responsible for the prevalence of the disease in the poorer districts; that there are 8,000 cases in the tenement houses, who are unconsciously infecting children with the germs of their disease. By statistics he showed that in cases where one or both of the parents are suffering from the disease 51 per cent. of their families are similarly affected. There are in New York City 44,000 consumptive patients, 22,000 of them concealed in the poorer tenement districts, and only 16,000 of the 44,000 are receiving proper treatment.

Ten thousand people died from this disease alone in New York City last year, and it is high time that more heroic efforts be put forth to check and stamp out the white plague. A pestilence of cholera, smallpox, yellow fever, or the bubonic plague, with so stupendously fatal consequences as attend the great white plague, would cause a panic of fear and the immediate expenditure of millions of dollars, if need be, to check its ravages. Science has learned how to cure consumption in its incipient stages. And the millions of dollars wasted in extravagance and in graft, and the millions that benevolent hearts could have subscribed, should long since have been used in an attempt to remove this shocking malady. The city will give more money, and good people will subscribe the funds, and the horrible massacre will be checked. Sin, like tuberculosis, is contagious; in its earlier stages, is the more easily conquered, and requires the application of a remedy, and is unlike consumption in the fact that it never reaches a stage in the human soul when it cannot be cured, if application be made to Christ for a remedy.

And Jesus went about all the cities and villages teaching in their synagogues and preaching the Gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness and every disease among the people. (Matt. 9:35.)

Cigarette Explodes Mine

There was a terrible explosion recently in the Palau mine, at Las Esperanzas, Mexico, which killed sixty-eight men outright and injured almost as many more. The miners, principally Mexicans and Japanese, had scarcely gotten to work in the mine in the morning when those above ground heard a loud explosion, and a cloud of dust and smoke shot from the mouth of the shaft. As soon as the air in the shaft could be purified rescuers went down and brought many to the surface. When they had reached the third level they found the dead scattered about, where the foul gases had suffocated them. A careful investigation revealed the fact that a miner had ignited the gas from a cigarette, which he was smoking, contrary to the rules. The sixty-eight slain are only the smallest fraction of the multitude of boys that the cigarette has killed, boys who have persisted in smoking them against the rules of their parents and the laws of the State. Sixty-eight is a very large number to be murdered by a man carelessly handling a cigarette, and doing so in open defiance of the law. There is scarcely a civilized nation on the earth where human life is so insecure as in this country. The number of avoidable deaths each year is appalling and disgraceful. Stronger laws must be enacted and those we have must be better enforced if we are to be spared a wholesale slaughter such as that of the miners by the deadly cigarette. The Mosaic law against unintentional killing was drastic. A man charged with such killing remained in the city of refuge till the death of the high priest; and if caught without it, he could be killed by the avenger, who would suffer no penalty.

But if the slayer shall at any time come without the border of the city of his refuge, whither he was fled; and the revenger of blood find him without the borders of the city of his refuge, and the revenger of blood kill the slayer, he shall not be guilty of blood. (Num. 35:26, 27.)

PUSHING THE AMERICAN UNIVERSITY

THERE is a strong likelihood that the present year will witness the formal opening of the American University at Washington, D. C. This great seat of learning has been in the making for some years past, and is designed to be the headquarters of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States. It now possesses two imposing marble buildings that are to serve as the nucleus of the splendid group of structures that will one day crown the heights overlooking the capital. The prime movers in the enterprise are impressed with the conviction that there should also be an inauguration of practical instruction—even though it be on a restricted scale.

Methodists in all parts of the country have been appealed to to raise an "Opening Fund" of $1,500,000, on the basis of subscriptions running from two to five years. Of the total endowment asked $500,000, or one-third, is desired as an actual working basis, to enable the university to open its doors. Donations to this portion of the fund have been coming in at a gratifying rate, and at this writing total upward of $250,000, or one-half the needed amount. One man in the Middle West has contributed $50,000, and another life-long Methodist in the same section, who withholds his name, has pledged $40,000 to endow a lectureship. There are already on file more than 1,500 applications for admission as students from young men and women.

The two buildings now in evidence at the ninety-three-acre site of the university (purchased at a cost of $100,000) give a hint of the magnificence of the institution when all the projected buildings shall have been provided. One building—the College of History—has been completed at a cost of $180,000. The second structure, the College of Government—a memorial to the late President McKinley—is now finished in so far as the exterior is concerned, about $150,000 having been expended upon it, and nearly as much more will be needed to finish the interior. When the fund permits, teaching and lecturing will begin in the completed building. A Hall of Administration, to cost half a million, will perhaps be the next building to receive attention.

When the American University project had its inception the site chosen, though an admirable and commanding one, had the disadvantage of being a somewhat inaccessible portion of the suburl Few tourists and sightseers who have visited Was ington during the past ten years have had point out to them this enduring monument. Latter however, Congress has made liberal appropriatio for the extension of Massachusetts Avenue, whi will create a wide thoroughfare to the very gates the university and will afford a direct and unbrok artery of communication between the new universi and the United States Capitol. This, likewise, w become a reality during the present year.

Remembering

"I WOULD give anything in world," said a rich man recen "if I could forget certain passages my life. If parents would only w their children to do only those thi they would love to remember, th would be fewer of these sickening collections."

It is worth while for every girl boy who is confronted with a cha for a doubtful pleasure, especially it is one that they do not wish t parents to know, to ask themsel "Shall I like to remember this in ture years? Shall I ever wish to get it, and then find I can't?"

If you have not read the story that weak King Charles of Fra who ordered the awful massacre of Bartholomew, get a good history France and read it. Then you will how a man can be plagued w memories.

It is said that night after night walked the floor of his chaml shrieking with horror from time time, as visions came over him of misery he had caused. It is a terri thing sometimes to remember!

MR. FAIRBANKS AND THE POPE

An Incident in Rome Which Has Stirred Religious Circles Throughout the World

Rev. B. M. Tipple, M.E. Church, Rome

Bishop Earl Cranston, M.E. Church

Ex-Vice-Pres't Charles Warren Fairbanks

Bishop W. F. McDowell, M. E. Church

Archbishop Ireland, R. C. Church

WHEN Ex-Vice-President Charles W. Fairbanks reached Rome, on his trip around the world, he desired, as is customary with distinguished visitors to the "Eternal City," to make formal calls both at the Quirinal and the Vatican. Matters were quickly arranged, and, on the day of his arrival, Mr. Fairbanks was informed that King Victor Emmanuel would grant him an audience on Saturday, February 5, and the Pope on the following Monday. It was also arranged to give him a reception at the American Catholic College, and he consented to address an audience at the American Methodist Church in Rome. This gave the greatest satisfaction, no less to the Ex-Vice-President and his party than to the pastor and the members of the American Church, Mr. Fairbanks himself being a loyal son of the Methodist Church.

On Sunday, when Mr. Fairbanks was visiting the American College, Monsignor Kennedy, the head of that institution, made an announcement to the Ex-Vice-President which was somewhat of a surprise. He intimated briefly that, unless Mr. Fairbanks canceled his appointment with his fellow-Methodists and abandoned the plan of visiting and speaking at the American Methodist Church, he would have to forego the pleasure and honor of a personal audience with the Pontiff. This announcement he made on the authority of the Pope. He gave as the reason that the American Methodists in Rome employed methods to which the Vatican could not give approval.

Mr. Fairbanks, who knew nothing of such charges, was amazed at Mgr. Kennedy's extraordinary proposition. He promptly refused to cancel his engagement and to disappoint his Methodist audience.

The Monsignor, however, was still urgent, and pointed out that it would be impossible for the Pope to receive him consistently under such circumstances. To this Mr. Fairbanks replied:

"I have agreed to make an address, and am obliged to keep the agreement. I have always exercised the privilege of speaking to Catholics and Protestants alike, whenever they desired, and whenever it was possible. Therefore, I regard the arrangements for the Papal audience as ended."

There was no bitter feeling nor high words; both were courteous, but equally firm. It was a breach, however, that was impossible to be bridged, from the Monsignor's point of view. But although the Vatican appointment was now formally canceled, this circumstance did not diminish in any degree the warmth of the reception accorded to Mr. Fairbanks at the American College dinner which was given in his honor. It should be explained that the American College is an institution of the Catholic Church. Among those present were one hundred and forty-four American students. Monsignor Kennedy, in a brief address, welcomed the distinguished guest. He expressed his high appreciation of the honor conferred upon the college by Mr. Fairbanks' visit, and the latter responded in complimentary terms, speaking appreciatively of the work of the Catholic Church. His greeting, especially from the Americans present, was cordial and enthusiastic.

At the reception in the American Methodist Church, held later, there was a large attendance and the greetings extended to Mr. Fairbanks were very cordial. It was evident on every hand that the incident of the papal audience had produced a profound impression. Mr. Fairbanks, in the course of his remarks, said:

> It is impossible to emphasize too strongly the good work the Christian Church is doing in all lands and among all nationalities. It is gratifying that the American churches established in all countries are asserting a wider influence to-day than ever in their history.
> The agitation going on in the political, social and economic world is due to Christianity breaking down castes and prejudices and lifting mankind to a higher plane. The democratic idea which is taking root in political institutions is due to the expanding influence of Christianity.
> All Christian churches are worthy of support. They above all should be inspired by a generous, tolerant spirit toward each other. Nothing is more unseemly than the narrow jealousies they occasionally manifest toward each other. There is room for all. Cease narrow denominational wars and direct your energies toward the common enemy. Let Catholics and Protestants of all denominations vie with each other in carrying forward the work of the Master, which is worthy of the best in them all.

The Pope's refusal to receive the distinguished American visitor was an absorbing topic in the Italian capital. The Tribuna, one of the leading journals, commenting upon it, said: "Ex-President Roosevelt is expected here soon. He also has been invited to speak before the Methodists. We shall see if he prefers the Methodists or the Pope."

It is learned from another source that the Pope instructed Mgr. Kennedy to express his regret at his inability to receive Mr. Fairbanks, but he could not depart from his rigid policy, "as to do so would appear to give recognition to the disloyal influences of certain Protestant denominations." This is the substance or purport of the message conveyed, which was neither more nor less than an ultimatum from the Vatican, singling out the Methodists as the one denomination whose wonderful progress and aggressive policy were resented by the Roman Church.

Speaking of it afterward, Mr. Fairbanks said: "When I told Dr. B. M. Tipple, the pastor of the Methodist Church, he said he was ready to release me from the engagement, but I answered that that was impossible. Under the circumstances I felt obligated to speak, in fulfilment of a promise made before the papal audience was arranged."

As might have been expected, the incident has caused a tremendous sensation in Protestant circles in this country. The course pursued by Mr. Fairbanks meets with hearty approval. He has been receiving many cable dispatches from America, congratulating him on his dignified and proper attitude toward the Vatican. One of these messages says: "The entire Protestant world is grateful to you." Another, from Bishop Cranston, of the Methodist Church, reads: "Your dignified vindication of American tolerance is heartily endorsed by our clergy and people." The Ministerial Association of Washington, D. C., adopted a resolution of congratulation. Telegrams have also reached the Ex-Vice-President from several places in Italy, one of which reads: "Greatly admire your attitude in preferring to speak to the evangelical people of Rome rather than submit to Vatican intolerance." Protestants in the Italian capital are delighted over the outcome of the incident, and express themselves in unmeasured approval of Mr. Fairbanks' course; while the Catholics, on the other hand, regret that the Pope should have turned an occasion which was meant for homage to such ill advantage. While some of them talk of offensive Methodist propaganda, the majority bitterly lament the lack of diplomacy shown by the Vatican's agent, presumably Mgr. Kennedy. To not a few there is a gleam of humor in the situation, over the fact that "the American has the best of it."

Catholic leaders in the United States have been prompt to support the attitude of Rome and attempt to justify it. Archbishop Ireland has issued a statement, in which he calls American Methodists in Rome "pernicious proselytizers," and says that the Methodist Association in Rome is not there to meet American Methodists, but to convert Catholics from their own faith, and that "they take every advantage of the poor." The official organ of the Catholic Church in Boston tries to justify the extraordinary action of the Pope as being due to the rigid etiquette which rules at the Vatican, and attacks the Methodist Mission in Rome for its general course.

Leaders of the Methodist denomination here regard the course of the Vatican as a blunder, both in religion and in diplomacy, which, far from reflecting upon the Methodist Church, must everywhere be regarded as a splendid tribute to its energy and efficiency. It is not denied that the Methodists are in Italy to make converts from the Catholic Church, but the methods pursued are no more aggressive than those of the Catholics in America, nor can they in any sense be regarded as "pernicious." Bishop Cranston declared that the Methodist Episcopal Church is working openly and honestly in Rome; that it never "takes advantage of the poverty of the poor," as has been charged, and he added, with a hint of humor, that if the "pernicious propaganda" test were applied here, as in Rome, "diplomacy would at once exclude many people who have been frequent callers at the White House, lest offense be given to friendly nations."

The papal incident did not by any means diminish the many honors that were paid Mr. Fairbanks during his Roman visit. With Mrs. Fairbanks, he attended a special function of the Italian Court, at which Mrs. Fairbanks sat next to the Queen and conversed for an hour, while the King chatted with the Ex-Vice-President. It was an honor seldom vouchsafed to any foreigner, and it was obviously the desire of both King and Queen to emphasize their courtesies to their American guests.

The Methodist Church was established in Italy in 1873, and now has four thousand communicants. Rome is the headquarters for the church, but there are numerous branches throughout the country. In Rome the church property is valued at $250,000. It includes an American and an Italian Methodist church, a boys' college, attendant residences, and a printing establishment. The work is under the Methodist Board of Foreign Missions.

GOSPEL BOATS ON CHINA'S RIVERS

Our First Church at Wuhu, China

Mr. Beals Teaching a Class of Theological Students

On the Old Houseboat Going Up the Chao River

By Rev. Z. CHARLES BEALS

Wuhu, China

THERE is no country under the sun that is making more progress than China. For centuries she has been kept back by her traditions, but these bonds have now been cast aside, or broken, and to-day she is rushing forward with tremendous speed in Western arts and sciences, and all their accompaniments. China is doing all she can to encourage her rich men to invest in railways and all modern improvements and enterprises. She is also encouraging her young men to travel and study abroad, so they may be better able to sail the ship of state later on. Her students are not slow in taking advantage of this opportunity, and we find these bright young men of Sinim in almost every country. They are not dull by any means, but frequently stand well toward the head of their classes and take high honors.

The Prince Regent is a very studious man, and the other day he asked the hanlin, on duty at the imperial library, whether he might read the books stored there, as he was anxious to be well versed in everything, and especially regarding constitutional government.

We missionaries in China are glad to see this, and we encourage many of the students to go to some Western country and study, for we know in so doing their vision will be enlarged and their country benefited. We are also very anxious that these young men shall become preachers, so we encourage them to study the Bible and take up studies in a seminary. As a rule, those students who would like much to go cannot because the cost is too great, so we were compelled to open a Bible School at Wuhu for them, where the expense for each student is but $2 a month.

The young men we have sent out in the past could not spend more than two years in the Bible School, and they see the need of more to-day. To get this additional instruction they kept urging us to build and maintain a more efficient school. We felt this need so strongly that last year we opened a small school with seventeen young men, and over half of these later on expressed a desire to be preachers to their own countrymen. The school was popular from the start, and this year we had over forty scholars, and now we are face to face with the problem of a Bible School building for them. This building, which is needed, should accommodate one hundred scholars, and will cost $3,000. We are praying that God will put it into the heart of one or more to send us this amount, for the need is great.

Connected with our Bible School and Wuhu Church is our Inland Church Work—the work in the Yangtsz Valley, north of Wuhu.

When we went back to China, in the fall of 1901, we asked God to give us the privilege of establishing one new church every year. This prayer was answered in a most marked manner, the generous readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD having a goodly share in the beneficent response. By that I mean that before going we spoke to Dr. Klopsch about a houseboat, and how much it was needed on our circuit, to go up and down the small rivers and canals. He said, "You shall have one," an appeal was made, and the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD bought one and have kept her running all these years. We called this houseboat The Christian Herald, and she has carried the missionaries of the Cross many miles up the inland waters of Central China, where they have proclaimed the good tidings to multitudes. This boat went first up the Han Shan River, and we planted our second church in a city called Han Shan. Later on we went up the Chao River, and opened up churches at the following places: Chao Hsien, Chin Che, Huang lo Ho, Lin Teo and Cheh Kao, making in all, including Wuhu, seven churches. We have baptized over 450 persons in these seven years, and we have at present many who are waiting for baptism. We have found it wisest and best to wait at least a year before baptizing one who has come out of heathen darkness.

We have a day school at each of these stations. In these day schools our Christian children come and study, and, when they are advanced enough, we pass them on to our higher schools, our hope being to see them all become preachers or teachers.

Now this sailing boat, which was so kindly given to us for our work, has been a great blessing to hundreds and thousands, but it has seen its best days. It is old and decaying, and not safe. It would cost too much to repair it; besides, it is too slow for progressive China of to-day. We need a modern launch, for we ought to get about quickly, so as to meet our church engagements, and much valuable time is lost in traveling in a sailboat. Would not an investment in this much-needed launch yield large and eternal dividends to some of the Lord's stewards who read these words? We need it at once, for in less than a month we will return to China and we want to buy the boat while here. I believe there are two thousand readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who will take a dollar share in this houseboat and send in that amount by first mail. We have some of the souvenir boats left, which we will send to donors as long as the boats last, but when they are gone we will send you our book, China and the Boxers, instead.

When the famine of two years ago was raging there was a call for volunteers to come and distribute the flour and money THE CHRISTIAN HERALD people had so generously sent. We readily said "Yes" to the call. Not because we thought it an easy task, for we knew we took our lives in our hands. There were the dead and dying on every hand. The sight was too awful to describe. In the homes, smallpox and the deadly typhus and famine fever were raging, yet we went that we might chu ming (save life). You at home gave over $500,000 to save the bodies of these people. You did this because the call was great; at home and on the field the call was heeded.

One night, traveling on a steam launch up the Grand Canal, we ran into a fishing boat and cut it in twain. A man clung to the stern of the boat, calling as loudly as he could, "Save life, save life." The launch put about and in time rescued the man. We were indeed happy because his life had been spared. This was only one soul that was saved from physical death, but are you aware that 100,000 souls a day are sinking into Christless graves? Those that have never heard this story of redeeming love—this story of a Christ that came to save not only the body, but the soul, from eternal death.

The money of two of our well-known millionaires would be sufficient to send out, and fully sustain in every way, over 50,000 missionaries. This number could preach the Gospel to every creature within the time limit, the present generation, set by the Laymen's Missionary Movement. God's people throughout the world could easily do this. What a privilege to give of their means, and their prayers, and themselves for such a worthy object! If they could only see as we see this awful blackness of heathendom, they would cheerfully and quickly do so!

Friends, in closing, remember the words of our Master, "Freely ye have received, freely give," and "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye did it unto me." The following list shows the needs of the work at Wuhu:

$3,000 will erect a good building for our Bible School.

$25 will fit up a room of five beds. The roo will be named for the donor.

$100 will build a day school building.

$2,000 is needed for our new motor boat.

$60 will support a native preacher a year.

$25 a year will be sufficient to support a Bib student in school.

[Any readers of this paper who are interested the work of this most deserving mission, and wl desire to aid Missionary Beals, can send in the contributions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, whi gives the appeal its hearty endorsement.]

Search wherever you may, you will never find anything that, at the price, gives greater and more genuine satisfaction as a gift than a weekly or monthly magazine, which the whole year through reminds the recipient of the thoughtfulness of the giver.

Little Folks

A beautifully illustrated monthly magazine for children from three to thirteen. Mothers and fathers who wish to provide the very best reading and pictures for their young children, that will be read and re-read, and looked at and looked at, welcome Little Folks. It is a story-teller, a picture book, a playfellow, an out-of-school magazine. Its fun is of a simple, sunshiny sort. Its little tales of children possess an ethical value—they stimulate their readers and hearers to be fearless, cheerful, unselfish, and, above all, true and honorable. All stories of a painful kind are excluded, especially such as would haunt nervous and imaginative children. There is much curious and interesting natural history, also playwork for little fingers.

McClure's Magazine

Mr. S. S. McClure, editor of McClure's Magazine, is one of the greatest magazine editors in America and a man of national reputation. Speaking of McClure's Magazine, he said recently: "I shall continue to spend more and more money—to give my readers a better and better magazine. McClure's Magazine for the next year will be more intensely interesting, and will exert a more potent influence on American life than any other magazine. It will be the best twelve numbers of any magazine in America." McClure's is always a step in advance of other magazines. Besides the articles on government, politics, people and things, McClure's is also famous for its fiction. The coming numbers will make new history for McClure's. You'll want them surely.

Pearson's Magazine

One-half is for information on subjects in which you are interested; that means home subjects, the things that American people are thinking and talking about. Once in a while some foreign matter may be discussed, but only in its relation to Americans and only when it means something to America. During the coming year informative articles on subjects which mean something to the average man will be written, in every case by the writer best qualified for the matter. The other half of the magazine is for entertainment, purely and simply. Pearson's Magazine is famous in two hemispheres for its fiction. It gets the best that is written. There is a continual and urgent demand from the newspapers for Pearson's stories. Do you want this sort of a magazine?

Review of Reviews

Fifty Magazines Condensed—More Necessary Than Ever.

In a single number of The Review of Reviews there are sixty topics, every one of real, immediate interest to every intelligent man and woman, discussed and interpreted by Dr. Albert Shaw, his staff, and his contributors; there are one hundred pictures that really illustrate and inform, including the cartoon department, which amuses into the bargain; there are fifty magazines and leading articles skilfully condensed, and scores of the new books reviewed. "The Review of Reviews is a liberal education," is the way one eminent subscriber sums it up. The more things that happen—the more magazines there are—the more indispensable is The Review of Reviews. Busy men and women want it, need it, read it. Why not you?

Woman's Home Companion

The greater Woman's Home Companion will be the most interesting, the most useful and the most beautiful woman's magazine published. There will be fiction by Anna Katherine Green, Juliet Wilbur Tompkins, Anne Warner, Myra Kelly, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, and a host of others. There will be special articles no woman will want to miss. With nearly a score of different practical departments for women Woman's Home Companion can promise the most useful woman's magazine in the world. In short, The Companion will have more stories than the fiction magazines, more pictures than the picture magazines, and more practical departments than any other magazine.

World Evangel

Readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who are Sunday School teachers or scholars should not fail to include The World Evangel in their combination magazine orders. The Evangel is the leading Sunday School magazine. It makes teaching delightful and effective, its fund of anecdotes enabling the teacher to interest scholars of all grades. Its lesson study department provides the best available exposition and information, and its lesson-teaching department is divided into Adult, Intermediate and Primary Departments, including comment on Primary Graded Lessons. The Superintendent's Department is most practical. In addition to the lesson comment, by six specialists, it presents the most successful methods and news. The Evangel will save time and increase your efficiency.

World To-day (The)

The one magazine indispensable to every home. A world review, furnishing monthly not only a complete digest of events, but many attractive articles on timely subjects, by noted contributors. In it you will find events, religion, travel, science, invention, art, drama, literature, education, etc., treated in a popular way, affording recreation for the idle hour, and, best of all, something worth while. In illustration it is a regular panorama of the world—many of the pictures being in colors. The World To-Day is really a $3 magazine for but $1.50. It is clean, healthful and inspiring—just right for Christian readers. Its remarkable quality and low price make it an exceptional bargain. It has proven one of our most popular publications, and we recommend it strongly to our readers.

Questions and Answers

Writers forwarding MSS. to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD should enclose postage stamps for return of same, if unavailable.

L. E. J., Winchester, Ky. How many women are mentioned in Tennyson's "Dream of Fair Women," and what are their names?

Eight. (1) Helen of Troy, (2) Iphigenia, (3) Cleopatra, (4) Jephthah's daughter, (5) The Fair Rosamond, (6) Margaret Roper, daughter of Sir Thomas More, (7) Joan of Arc, (8) Eleanor of Castile.

Mrs. B. C. H., Madison, N. J. 1. Who wrote the lines:

"Speak to these gentle hearts of ours,
And teach them to be true"?

2. Where can I get a little Golden-Text Book? 3. Please give a list of good, old-fashioned stories, interesting and instructive.

1. The quotation you probably desire is not worded exactly like yours. It is from Mrs. Cecil F. Alexander's "Burial of Moses," and reads:

"Speak to these curious hearts of ours
And teach them to be still."

2. Write to Fleming H. Revell Co., New York City. 3. We suggest The Angel of the Tenement, by George Madden Martin; The Country of the Pointed Firs, by Sarah Orne Jewett; A Humble Romance, by Mary E. Wilkins; The Bow of Orange Ribbon, by Amelia E. Barr; The Call of the Wild, by Jack London; Captains Courageous, by Rudyard Kipling; Betty Alden, by Jane G. Austin; Westward Ho, by Charles Kingsley; Sonny, by Ruth M. Stuart; The Head of a Hundred, by Maud Wilder Goodwin.

W. A. M., Atco, N. J. Were any of the Gospels written during the first or second century, and by whom?

The genuineness of the four Gospels rests upon better authority than that of any other ancient writings. It is the general conclusion of the most eminent scholars that all four were written during the latter half of the first century. Before the end of the second century they were in general use and acceptance as one collection. They are mentioned by Tertullian, in a book written about A.D. 208, as being the work of two apostles and two disciples of apostles. Marcion also mentions their apostolic origin. Origen (who lived A.D. 185-253) refers to them as "the four elements of the church's faith." Theophilus, Bishop of Antioch (A.D. 168), also mentions the Gospels in his writings, and Jerome tells us that Theophilus arranged the four into one work. Tatian (who died about A.D. 170) compiled a Harmony of the Gospels. Justin Martyr (A.D. 99-165) gives many quotations from the Gospels. Many other witnesses might be cited to the same purpose. None of the original manuscripts are now in existence.

Bessie F., Keokuk, Ia. Are the lines beginning "Laugh and the world laughs with you" in any American poem, or are they from an English poem?

They are from a poem by an American author, and have their counterpart in a very old English ballad, which says:

"Smile, and the world smiles with you,
Weep, and you weep alone;
For the good old earth has need of your mirth,
It has sorrow enough of its own."

F. C., Little Hocking, O. Please make a brief comparison of Whittier and Bryant, and their works.

Both Bryant and Whittier were country boys, reared in humble homes, though Whittier was much the poorer; both deplored their lack of early education, though Bryant had much more than Whittier; both were engaged in journalism, and both were intensely interested in politics. Whittier excelled in ballads, hymns and household lyrics, for none of which Bryant seemed to have much taste or disposition; Whittier had no special business ability, while Bryant had much; Whittier composed freely, his facility being his besetting literary sin, while Bryant wrote comparatively little; Whittier's prose was rather poor, Bryant's excellent; Whittier was not especially scholarly or given to hard study, while Bryant was exactly the contrary, as his fine translations of the Iliad and Odyssey prove; Whittier was often careless, even slovenly, in his method of versification, while Bryant polished and filed unceasingly. Whittier's verse is sweet, loving, and often strongly emotional, but seldom dignified or stately, as Bryant's generally was; Whittier's verse has, perhaps, more spirituality than Bryant's, and certainly has more moral earnestness.

M. E. B., Franklin, Vt. 1. How long were the wise men coming from Persia to see Christ? 2. How old was Christ when they saw him? 3. Was the star of Bethlehem a star, or an illumination of the heavens?

1. They had traveled a long distance, and were probably months on the journey, as traveling was very slow in those days. Some Bible scholars have reckoned that, the star being first visible in May, the Magi must have traveled seven months, while others take a different view as to the season of the Nativity. 2. He was probably several weeks old, as the presentation in the temple, the offerings and customary rites, had all been performed. 3. All that we know of it, beyond what is related in the Gospels, is mere speculation.

C. S. M., Dalton, Ga. 1. Did the United States soldiers use percussion-cap muskets, like the Springfield, in the Mexican War? And when did the United States Government first use the percussion-cap gun? 2. Technically, how many constitute a corporal's guard?

1. The percussion-cap gun had already been invented, and our government was manufacturing it when the Mexican War broke out. General Scott, however, felt that it was an experiment, and so the troops which invaded Mexico carried the last pattern of flintlock, issued just before the percussion-lock came in. Within a short time after the close of that war the percussion-lock had superseded the flint. 2. There is no set number for a corporal's guard; it may number from two up, according to circumstances. Probably it would average four or five. We are unable to answer the last question sent. Submit it to the War Department, Washington, D. C.

Reader, Springfield, O. Is there no law to protect and save the pine trees in Florida? Years ago the climate was much warmer and pleasanter in the winter than now, the pines being a wind-break, that the cold did not penetrate. The average height of a Florida pine is fifty feet. With their foliage on top, they make a protection from the sun's heat in summer. And the health-giving odor of the pine should not be forgotten. Some take the turpentine from the tree, that saps its strength; and others have grabbed every foot of the fine land and timber they could purchase, or otherwise obtain, and when they cut the large trees they don't leave the young trees, but cut them down and leave them.

Our correspondent, who has lived thirteen years in Florida, has touched one of the principal topics now being considered by the Conservation Commission, viz., the denuding of the forests and the evils it produces. Florida, like many other States, has suffered from the reckless and unscientific operations of the timber companies.

Mrs. J. R. W., White Creek, N. Y. There must have been a large amount of expense attending the revision of the Bible. Did the American Bible Society carry our share of it? If not, how was it provided for?

The foregoing question was submitted to Rev. Dr. H. O. Dwight, recording secretary of the American Bible Society, who replies as follows: "The expense of the (American) revision was met by private subscription in part, and chiefly by Thomas Nelson & Sons, who hold the copyright. The American Bible Society did not share in the expense except by such courtesy as furnishing the free use of a room in the Bible House when needed, et

S. Van D., Hackensack, N. J. Is it true that Mexico has no national debt?

No; it has a national debt of $138,8[illegible]00, payable in gold, and $142,116,950, payable in silver.

E. B., Bennington, Vt. Please explain what the sin against the Holy Ghost is.

It is generally believed to have been [illegible]ibuting the works of the Spirit to Satanic agency.

S. S., Holliston, Mass. Is there a premium on Lincoln pennies, which have the small initials at the base on one side?

There is no premium on these coins. [illegible]day, many years from now, they will probably have some value to collectors, but at the present time there are many thousands in existence.

N. S. M., Clinton, Tenn. 1. How many different governments are there? 2. Is there any other nation that is considered a Christian nation, in the sense that America is so regarded?

1. There are nearly one hundred recognized governments, big and little, listed in the almanacs and political year-books. 2. Yes; every nation in Europe, except Turkey, has a right to be considered a Christian nation, though several, like Russia and Austria, have a considerable population of non-Christians. South America, too, is nominally Christian; so, too, Canada and Australia.

Famous Christian Testimonies

Gov. W. R. Stubbs

SOME time ago the question was put to a number of leading Americans: "Is the spirit of Jesus more dominant in business and public affairs than when you entered active life, and is it an advantage or not for a public man to-day to be known as a professing Christian?"

This has brought out many notable replies, almost all of them of a character that should prove spiritually helpful and encouraging to others.

The testimony chosen for publication to-day is that of Hon. W. R. Stubbs, Governor of Kansas. It is an inspiring thing to find the Governor of a great State courageously and unhesitatingly coming to the front, with a declaration so clear and unequivocal that none can mistake its purport. Here is his letter:

STATE OF KANSAS
W. R. STUBBS, GOVERNOR
TOPEKA

December 22, 1909.

Dear Sir:

I cannot conceive of any logical deduction from available data that can be made to negative the proposition that Christ's teachings are making actual progress in the world. On the contrary, it seems to me that almost every fact in contemporary sociology would sustain an affirmative answer to your question.

I am equally strong in the belief that it is an advantage to a public man to be a Christian, especially if, in his public life, he can prove by his acts the sincerity and the genuineness of the faith which he professes. If, on the other hand, his public and private actions do not accord, comport and harmonize with his professions, I believe he will be disadvantaged in the competitive ambitions of public life.

To deny that the spirit of Jesus is more dominant in business, political and international affairs to-day would be to repudiate the philosophy which teaches us the persistent and eternal progress of the good. Everywhere and in every line of effort the spirit of Jesus as we find it expressed in his teachings is influencing the affairs of the world. We sometimes feel that evil is gaining ground in our business and political life, but my calmer reflection convinces me that its enlarged apparition is only the result of a better detection of private and public error by the more vigilant eyes of increasing goodness.

I send greetings to the Christian young people of America, and ask them, for their own good and the welfare of our beloved country, to stand firmly by the teachings of Jesus and to fill their young hearts with the power and the influence of his spirit. Sincerely,

W. R. Stubbs
Governor of Kansas.

AROUND THE HOME HEARTH

Are Women Growing Stronger?

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

NO one who looks back over a few years can fail to see that the health rate of women has steadily risen. Formerly it was not uncommon to meet delicate women who had become chronic invalids in their forties. Women not only grew old faster and looked old earlier thirty years ago than is usual to-day, but they really were lacking in physical staying power, and were oftener martyrs to disease than is now the case. A gentlewoman, who has retained her vigor of mind and body until the has reached the mark of fourscore, says that in her childhood her mother and aunts, and the neighbors in general, were nearly all the constant victims of colds and nervous headache. In winter they were carefully housed, and in summer were afraid of draughts. In reading the memoirs of several noted people who in their day did excellent work in art and literature the impression has been given that the women of the families were nearly always ill, and that they died early.

In this day women have learned that overwork, if it can be avoided, is not so much a mistake as a sin. No one has a right deliberately to tire herself to the point of exhaustion. Women do not toil so persistently as once they did in the making of garments for their children, simplicity being now more prized than elaboration. Many women are compelled to work beyond a reasonable measure of comfort, in business and professional life and in the household, and yet notwithstanding this their strength is equal to their day. Indeed, men now seem to reach the breaking point rather sooner than women.

The explanation of a change for the better, if it be admitted as a fact, is that women know more about the beneficence of air and exercise than their grandmothers did. Instead of hermetically sealing a house in cold weather, it is thoroughly aired every day. People sleep in rooms that are well ventilated, and those who are threatened with pulmonary trouble frequently sleep out of doors. More attention is paid to eating the right kind of food and to resting at proper intervals than would once have been thought feasible. In consequence of this and of the athletic training of girls our women are growing stronger, lovelier and younger every year.

A change has taken place in the popular sentiment about illness. We used to hear the phrase "rude health," and women thought it elegant to be fragile and dainty, and were apologetic if they had good appetites. We have found out that headaches and backaches, and other aches that can be prevented, are deplorable and to be regretted as misfortunes. Nobody exploits her maladies if she is in the least up to date.

An old colored auntie in Virginia, who was a fine specimen of feminine vigor, had a formula that she never failed to use if a friend met her with a pleasant "Good morning; how are you, auntie?"

"Miserable, thank you," was her invariable reply. If further inquiries were made, she described in detail various imaginary ailments. She would have lost caste with her neighbors if she had confessed to being perfectly well. Old Aunt Hannah was not exceptional in her day, and she had caught the tone of her white folks. We have all learned a better way, mentally, of treating health and illness now.

Talk at the Table

To partake of meals in grim silence, eating in a hurry and thinking about the work to be done the instant the meal is over, is a fatal American mistake. If there be such a thing as a national disease its name is probably dyspepsia, and the beginnings of it are often to be traced to food eaten in haste and discomfort. The family rally around the table three times a day is the principal social opportunity of the home.

The general talk during the meals should be familiar, interesting and free from sternness and malice. Children should not be reproved at the table, and, if their manners are to be corrected, the mother should speak to them quietly and unobtrusively. No hint of unkind gossip, of criticism of friend or neighbor, should creep into the family table talk.

GOING TO CHURCH, VALENDAM, HOLLAND

The bells are calling from out the steeple,
"Hither to worship the Lord, good people."
Forth from their homes the good folk throng
To gather in meeting with prayer and song.
May the God of the Covenant be their guide,
And evermore for their wants provide.

An item of news that is pleasant, a story that provokes a smile, a jest that all may share, a limerick that awakens a laugh, are each in order in the table talk of the household. Far more than parents think, their boys and girls are educated by the conversation in which they take part daily in the home. To forbid children to speak at the table is decidedly an error, although they should not be suffered to monopolize attention. While not ignored, they should not be allowed to become loquacious.

The Marriage Market

THE phrase is certainly objectionable. Considerations of the market and the bargain counter ought not to intrude in the question of marriage. Love should be the basis, mutual attraction the magnet and congenial qualities of character the guarantee in happy marriage. Unfortunately, too many of our young people have grown calculating and a little sordid in their estimate of marriage. They want too much that is artificial. The cost of living appals them. A man on a modest salary hesitates to ask a girl to share a slender income. In this he may be doing an injustice to a young woman who, if tried, might prove herself resourceful, practical and able to make a dollar serve two as well as it has hitherto served one. Men spend a good deal of money on superfluous luxuries, notably in the line of tobacco, that they might to advantage save for the purpose of starting a home, the presiding genius of which should be a wife, and where in due time there should be the music of children's voices and the joyous patter of little feet. Wage-earning women, as a rule, have people whom they help out of their salaries, and if this be not so they prudently try to lay aside some provision for the rainy day of middle age. No one can help noticing that the vast army of women wage-earners are young. In most occupations open to women, from the schoolroom to the kitchen, from the countingroom to hospital nursing, the demand on health and strength is far greater and the women age faster than their sisters do who are married and on whom fall the burdens incidental to the wife and mother. The cry is constantly raised that women crowd men out of paying work. We hear on every side the urgent inquiry, "What are the men to do?" Still, in every situation that demands physical vigor, staying power, and, pardon the statement, exactness and accuracy, men are more sought than women. The sober truth is that men, in these days, are a bit cowardly. There are modes of bachelor living in which they are comfortable at comparatively small expense. So some of them, at least, choose the part of selfishness, bar the door against love and refuse to give the homage of their courtship to the pretty maids who would develop into cheery comrades on the road of life. It is the man's province to court, the girl's privilege to be won. There are prizes in the marriage market, not of a mercenary kind, that should never go begging. Lonely old age, crabbed bachelorhood and cranky spinsterhood are unlovely and undesirable conditions. Why should not the pendulum swing back in the good old fashion, and men and maidens once again dare to face good and ill fortune together? Then, in some coming day, they may sing the sweet old Scottish song, "John Anderson, My Jo, John."

Every American Should Have One

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I have your Hero Tales from American Life. It is excellent. It enables one in a very few moments of most pleasant reading, at leisure times, to become acquainted with our heroes, modern and of early days. Every American boy should have a copy. If he has got a spark of patriotism, or relishes a good tale, he'll read it. It will do much toward moulding good citizenship. In this selfish age of commercialism we need to take inspiration occasionally from the unselfish characters of these American heroes.

The Strawberry Handkerchief

A Tale of Colonial Days in Old New York

By AMELIA E. BARR

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

FOR the benefit of our new subscribers we give a brief synopsis of the preceding chapters of Mrs. Amelia E. Barr's most interesting story: The scene is laid in New York, at the time of the Stamp Act, in 1765. Captain Jansen Van Vroom was a rich, retired sea captain, and lives with his wife Katrina in a fine Dutch house, by the North River. They have a daughter, Virginia, whom they wish to marry to a young sea captain, Batavius De Vries, for whom she has little liking. She is really in love with Joris Artaveldt, a dashing young officer. Virginia's dearest friend is Lady Rose Harley. Captain Van Vroom is bitter against the enforcement of the Stamp Act. Joris and the two girls dine at the captain's house, after which the two men leave. Arent Van Vroom, the son of the house, appears and is introduced to Lady Rose. The next morning Van Vroom describes the condition of New York to his son, and the things which were leading to the breaking point. The Lady Rose becomes interested in Arent when he describes his voyages. Joris declares his love for Virginia, and she returns his affection. Arent, her brother, falls in love with Lady Rose, who gives Virginia a handkerchief embroidered with strawberries. She herself has one like it. Virginia gives Joris the handkerchief. Politically, things grow worse. The people determine to resist the oppression of the British government, and wear only home-made things. Batavius De Vries suddenly returns, expecting to marry Virginia. He is a coarse, bombastic person, and Lady Rose is disgusted with the idea of Virginia marrying him. Joris tells his father of his love for Virginia and he offers no objection. Lady Rose plans to get Batavius dratted into the naval service. Virginia protests to her father against marrying Batavius. He angrily insists. He says the banns must be published within the month, and threatens her. The mother also takes the father's part. Joris tells Van Vroom he loves his daughter and is ordered away. Katherine Van Heemskerk offers to carry Joris' letter to Virginia. Batavius, walking back with Katherine, insults Joris, who lays his hand on his sword, but retrains from action for the lady's sake. She goes to Joris' side. Batavius, at Van Vroom's, jeers at the idea of Joris' gallantry. Virginia thrills with pride and praises Katherine. Arent Van Vroom returns bringing sixteen Southern patriots, including Aiken of South Carolina and Worth of Maryland. Batavius joined in with the rest and then said "Humbug," when out of hearing. The first Colonial Congress opens in New York. Batavius becomes anxious to have Virginia admire him, takes care with his dress and receives Van Vroom's approval.

"ART thou going with me to the City Hall?" asked Captain Jan of Batavius.

"No. I trouble not myself about the City Hall. I am going to speak to Virginia. Her real mind I want to know," was Batavius' answer.

"Dost thou think to reach any woman's real mind? Say some loving words, and let her know I have set the twenty-eighth of this month for her betrothal to thee."

Batavius nodded his acquiescence, and turned hastily to the Van Vroom dwelling.

He found the main door closed, but saw the one opening into the vast kitchen ajar; so he concluded that Madame was busy there, and he entered it. Virginia was the occupant, and for a moment or two she was not aware of his intrusion. In those few moments he delighted himself with the sight of her beauty in such unusual surroundings.

Virginia stood making bread. Her arms were bare, her bright hair closely braided, her neck covered with a white muslin kerchief tucked tightly into the bodice of her gray dress. Round her were the plain and crinkled pans for the loaves, the flour, the butter and eggs, and caraway seeds for the one sweet loaf made at every baking. She was kneading the dough with slow, rhythmical motions, and Batavius had time to put the fair household picture into his heart ere she heard the slight movement which caused her to turn.

"My dear Virginia!" he said, advancing.

She looked curiously at his unusual splendor, and answered:

"You! I am busy, as may be seen. You will find mother in the next room."

"Well, then, it is not mother I want. Virginia, it is you, you only. I, who have so many thoughts, have now only one thought. It is of you, Virginia. Last night I gave myself to you again. I have lost many hours of my sleep thinking of you. This cannot go on. So I have come to tell you how much I love you—yes, that is my way. I give all, or nothing."

"Give me nothing."

"To you I give everything, myself"—and he involuntarily stretched himself to his utmost inch—"my money, my land, my ships, all I have I give to you, for you I love."

"Batavius, as you may see, I am busy. The bread can not wait for words. I have no time to listen to foolishness."

"Foolishness! We are to be man and wife."

"Never!"

"I say so. Your father and mother say so."

"I cannot help what they say."

"Always I have thought of you as my wife."

"That is not my fault."

"Four years ago you kissed me."

"You say so. I remember it not."

"When we are married, I shall not beg kisses from you. They will be my right—and my right I take, wherever it may be—man nor woman can hinder me; so when you are my wife——"

"When, yes, when I am your wife!"

"During the feast of Saint Nicholas——"

"The day of Saint Nicholas will come, and go, and I shall not be your wife."

"Look you, Miss," said Batavius, "when I love you well enough to marry you, I love you better than myself. And a big fool is any man to love another better than himself. Give you up? Never! And more, I advise you, Batavius De Vries advises you, to be less free with your contemptuous looks and words. Remember that it is a debt I am sure to pay with heavy interest."

"Ah! you threaten me. I fear you not!" and she laughed disdainfully, and threw the loaf into its pan with a passion that roused anger in the heart of Batavius. He seized her hand, and held it as in the grip of iron, while he raised his other hand as if ready to strike. She saw, and understood the movement; and with unspeakable contempt looked straight into his flaming black eyes.

"Strike!" she said. "A blow would be far more endurable than a kiss."

He trembled with the rage he durst not gratify. His face became deathly white. He could not utter the words his passion prompted, his tongue was palsied, his voice too thick and feeble for articulation. He was driven to action, in order to express his anger, and he struck the table such a powerful and vehement blow as shattered the big opal in the ring he wore, almost to dust. For in his nervous pleading he had turned the stone inward, and so it had received the full force of his furious temper. Virginia pointed to the precious particles, and in a tone of mockery and triumph said:

"It was your luck stone. You told me so. Well, then, your luck is shattered and gone. Good-morning, Mr. Batavius."

So speaking, she left him standing in speechless consternation, looking at the broken gem, which had been at once his favorite ornament and his invincible charm. For he knew, what Virginia did not know, that he had been accustomed to rub it—as Aladdin ruoed his lamp—whenever he was abit any business affecting his desires or is interests; and it had never befo failed him.

his uncanny accident to his familiar errified and stunned him. He was so ismayed by the deed he had done th he suffered Virginia to leave the roo, and was hardly conscious of her dearture. Slowly and remorsefully he athered the minute remains, folding them in an I. O. U. of great value; the only available bit of paper he had in is purse.

And all this misfortune and misery fo that girl!" he whispered. "Nothin shall now make me give her up. I wi force the old man to his promise. Sh must be mine. And she shall pay me for every insolent look and saucy wo."

e went away without another word, an no one stayed him. It was an unintentioned neglect, but he heard Madam and Virginia talking and laughing together, and in his acutely sensitive mood he believed they were laughing at his misfortune. Madame ha always been on his side, but at th hour he told himself that all wo en were treacherous and unlucky.

e went first to 14 Wall Street, hoping to find Captain Van Vroom there, but the store was practically empty. Ardle teamster lolled sullenly against the intel of the open door.

Where is the Captain?" asked Batavius of this man.

Gone to the procession, sir."

o Batavius went to Burns' Tavern, an found the Captain among the crwd. He was in no mood to listen to ny lovers' quarrel; he had a far me important one on his mind, and he rankly told Batavius so.

Well, then," said Batavius, "it wold not be my way to wait here—taing, talking, and no one doing anything."

When things belong to the government of the colony, they must be done in roper order, Batavius, without regaling any one's way. That is what we wish, so then we have sent a deputaon to Governor Colden, asking him fo his help and sympathy."

atavius laughed scornfully. "A fo's errand your deputation went on he answered. "Colden would rather gibbet every man in this crowd tha help you."

Which side are you on, Batavius?"

Well, then, Captain, I am a sailor; an a sailor knows that only a fool keps an unturned sail with every wid."

Our quarrel is so just——" have reflected on it, and I am ver impartial. I do justice to the government, and justice to the people, an then also I do justice to Batavius DeVries."

The people are right."

So. But I know not, yet, which sid will be the strongest."

Liberty, Batavius——"

My Captain, there is no greater liberty than a good government."

There it is! Our government is no a good one. It is a tyranny—England must hear us."

She will, and the consequences will co e fast on your heels—a dangerous fa."

We are strong enough to stride over it, I see the deputation returning. W are now for the City Hall. Will yo go with us?"

have business on the ship. Also, as tried to tell you, I am not easy about Virginia. Very provoking she is, nd she even declares she will not mary me."

know. All women talk in that wa. For a few weeks now, give Virgia's tongue its way, and its say."

Captain, I trust your word."

Have I not said it? Did I ever brk my word to thee? Before the New Year Virginia shall be thy wife. Come with me now, or else go about thine own affairs."

"I will go to the ship. Where is Arent?"

"Among the Liberty Boys."

With these words he turned away and joined the line of gentlemen attending the members of the Congress, who were just leaving the tavern for the City Hall. And surely there have not been in the history of the civilized world many processions more remarkable than this short, unostentatious march from Burns' Tavern, 115 Broadway, to the City Hall in Wall Street. It was led by the Mayor of the city, and followed by a large body of wealthy citizens and great merchants. There was none of the insignia that usually accompany public parades—no blowing flags, or blare of trumpets, or stir of martial music—not even the beat of drums, or the shrill call of fifes—nothing to see but a broad line of grave, orderly gentlemen, their faces full of the light of purpose, their eyes bright, outlooking, and almost daring, their steps strong, steady and unresting until they reached their appointed place. For as Captain Jansen had once told his wife, they were going to do the deed that had long been the secret of their hearts—they were going to assert their inalienable rights as free citizens of a great kingdom; and, if need be, their independence.

And they were going to do this deed in no mouse corner, but in the largest city of the American colonies; in the very sight and hearing of the powerful government which they would arraign for tyrannical and unlawful exercise of authority. The soldiers of England were ready at a moment's notice to arrest and imprison them; they could hear in their meeting place the sounds of galloping troopers, the calls and hammers of the workmen strengthening the fort.

These things troubled them not. They were peaceable, unarmed citizens, publicly met to consider manifest grievances. And the town was practically on their side. It had turned itself on to the streets, and was watching and waiting. The royalist party were easily distinguished by their silk and velvet and fine linen, the Colonist party by their homespun and homemade shoes and clothing. They met each other constantly, and they met as strange dogs meet on a public street—not fighting, but quite ready to fight.

Very hard work it was for the soldiers and the Liberty Boys to keep their hands off each other, but fortunately the hands of the soldiers were bound by military discipline, and the hands of the Liberty Boys by colonial interests. To be continued

DREAMLAND

A FAMOUS artist gives us here
A child in Dreamland's regions fair;
She's done with play—her spirit's near
A paradise exempt from care.

Although so small, she may have knelt
To make her wants to Jesus known;
And in her little breast has felt
Her name inscribed among God's own.

We feel like kissing face and eyes,
But well we know this can't be done;
And so our prayers to Jesus rise,
"Lord, make us like this precious one."

We would not have her pass away
From nature's rest by earth's long sleep;
Nay, let her wake to sing and play;
Give angel guard to safely keep.

God bless the artist for his skill—
All o'er the earth be this display;
A little child of sweet goodwill,
In Dreamland, resting from her play.

I give you all the middleman's profits, and by selling direct from mill to weaver, give you the most astonishing petticoat value you ever heard of. You also get, with each skirt, my absolute guarantee of satisfaction or money back, and buy for less than the actual retail price of the material.

You will be delighted, I know, with the catalogue, and I urge you to send for it to-day, even though you may not be quite ready to buy a petticoat. I want every woman to know how easy it is to get her petticoats, both black and colors, at a lower price than even her store has to pay.

The petticoat shown in the picture is my Spring leader, latest style, fashionable cut. Physician for Body and Soul*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

ON that memorable day in Nazareth, when Jesus stood in the synagogue and read the Scriptures, he declared that physical healing was to be a part of his mission on earth (Luke 4:18-20); and so we sing of him as "the Great Physician" and "the sympathizing Jesus." There was no case too hard for him; no, not even if death had claimed the sufferer! For he was all-powerful to heal, and also to raise from the dead. No physician before him had essayed to cure leprosy. To-day, on the way from Jerusalem to Mount Olivet, one passes a row of lepers a mile long. In all the world there is certainly not such a scene of suffering—feet without toes, hands without fingers—all eaten away by leprosy. This stricken row of humanity sits in the dust on the roadside, with small cups in front of them, and in wailings almost unbearable for the traveler to endure they beseech passersby for alms. In not a few cases small children, even babies—not lepers—crawl or sit in the dust beside their leprous parents. The scene grows more heartrending as one sees a Turkish officer pass along the row, demanding taxes to be paid by the lepers on the gifts of money they have received. Imagine Jesus passing along that line of lepers on this day, March 6, 1910; at his word, at his touch, each leper rises to his feet, perfectly restored; no longer an outcast, but free to return to his loved ones and home. We know that he could do it, that he would do it, because he cured the leper as he was entering the little town of Magdala, and because during his blessed ministry on earth he cured so many other lepers.

The leper at Magdala worshiped him and said, "If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." And Jesus stretched forth his hand, and touched him, saying, "I will; be thou clean." And straightway his leprosy was cleansed. Then Jesus told him to go to the priest and offer his gift as one who had recovered from leprosy. (Lev. 14:1-32.) And he went. A remarkable thing about the cure was that Jesus said to him, "See thou tell no man." How could that be kept secret which all who knew the man would see as soon as they looked upon him? And they of course would tell others, and it would soon be spread abroad. It was evident that Jesus did not want a noise made about it, as it would cause such a throng to gather about him that it would make his work of teaching and further healing almost impossible. But the leper, or he that had been a leper, was so filled with joy that he did publish it much, so that Jesus could no more openly enter into a city. (See Mark 1:45.)

Jesus in Capernaum

But no matter how quietly Jesus came into a city he was sure to be found out, nor would he have had it otherwise. His desire was to reach the people with teaching and healing. He appeared one Sabbath day in Capernaum, and at the morning service in the synagogue he healed a demoniac, and then he went to Peter's home and cured his mother-in-law (mother-in-love) of a fever, not only taking away the fever, but so restoring her strength that she was able to rise from her bed and prepare food for all who were in the house. A Roman centurion heard of his presence in Peter's home, and came begging him that he would cure his valued servant of the palsy. Jesus was so responsive to this call that he proposed to go at once with the centurion to his h[ou]se. "Not so," said the centurion, "I am not worthy that you should come u[nder] my roof; only speak the word, and [my] shall be healed." Jesus marveled at the faith of the Roman soldier, commended it to all about him, and said it should be as he desired. And the servant was healed in that h[our].

No wonder that a throng gathered that night in the street around the house of Peter; no wonder that they brought their sick with them to be healed; no wonder that Jesus healed them all, whether they were blind, or lame, or had fevers, or were paralyzed, or possessed of devils. If there was one sick person left in Capernaum it was because he had not been brought to Jesus! "Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses." Greek scholars tell us that we cannot construe this to mean bodily healing apart part of the atonement of Christ, and so belonging to to-day as then. We must believe that the time of Christ's ministry on earth was a season peculiar to itself. Now that he is ascended, and sitteth at the right hand of the Father, he bears our sicknesses in quite another way, well explained by Dr. Maclaren, who says: "There are us that in some trackless lands, when one friend passes through the pathless forests, he breaks a twig every now and anon as he goes, that those who come after him may see the traces of his having been there, and may know that they are not out of the road. So, when we are journeying through the murky night, and the dark wood of affliction and sorrow, it is something to find here and there a spray broken, or a leafy stem bent down with the tread of His foot and the brush of His hand as he passed; and to remember that the path he trod he has hallowed, and that there are lingering fragrances and hidden strengths in the remembrance, 'in all points as we are, bearing grief for us, bearing grief with us, bearing grief like us.' In this way he does 'take away our sickness.'"

I would rather walk with God in the dark
Than to walk alone in the light.

This is illustrated by the engineer's saying that he dislikes moonlight nights, because he is all the time meeting shadows. He sees a shadow across the track, and he thinks perhaps it may be a man or some sort of animal, and it gets on his nerves that he must frighten it off and clear the track. But it will not move, and he presently discovers he has been afraid of a shadow!

Jesus Healing the Soul

The leper whom Jesus healed, the centurion's servant whom Jesus recovered from his palsy, the woman whose fever Jesus subdued, and all of those whom he cured of divers diseases that day in Capernaum, did not also their souls' health prosper after having come in such close contact with Jesus and been so blessed by him? We must believe that the name of Jesus became a household word in every home in Capernaum, and that many people were thus impelled to quit their leanness and have cleaner lips and purer lives than ever before. As for the home of the centurion, it must have taken on the character of a Christian home. Before the Spirit of Jesus came into it it had been not altogether a heathen home, because the centurion had sympathy with the Jews, and had even built a synagogue for them. Certainly there was one saint in the centurion's household—the servant Jesus had healed. And as for Peter's home there must have been an

It was a great leap from ng a leper to being a herald. And lt the man was able to make it was lough the power of Jesus in his soul.

In trials al temptations the Christian is ssed to his knees in prayer, when he finds help from God.

Aristotle said there was a field of flvers in Sicily so sweet that once a hnd, coming on the track of game, cne to that field and was so bewildded by the perfumes that he lost the tck. So prosperity turns more souls fm the path to heaven by its perfnes than the roughest fields of advsity, and we need to be on our guard insuch days of peace and plenty lest w forget God and cease to press forwrd, and make affliction necessary to bng us back to the way of life.

A little pearl lay hidden in the shell, al it mourned, for it heard that the ders had taken away many of its sists. But it grew and grew in its undturbed obscurity, receiving just as nch light and matter as was needed tperfect it in size and purity. But jt as its lustre and form had reached tl height of excellence the divers cne and took it, and it was made a r al ornament. "Ah," cried the once cnplaining little pearl, "I see now hw good it was to be left in solitude; if had been taken with the others, as I epiningly desired to be, I might indd have been threaded, with many olers, for a courtier's arm, but I sould not have been raised to glisten o a royal brow."

A diamond had slipped from its settg and rolled away, none knew vither. Diligent search was made i every apartment where its owner rght have been, but in vain. At lgth evening drew on, and, sitting in acareless mood, her eye caught the sark of a tiny ray, almost imperctible, but bright only as a diamond's gnce can be. Out of the darkness igleamed, and she stooped to pick up vth delight that which the daylight ld failed to reveal. Such a diamond sl did Jesus lift up when at the feast i the Pharisee's house. A woman cne in from the street, and as she bwed her head to the floor she washed te feet of Jesus with her tears and vped them with her hair. And when tse at the feast marveled that Jesus rmitted it, he replied: "Her sins, vich are many, are forgiven, for she l'ed much; but to whom little is forgven, the same loveth little." And sus said to her: "Thy sins are forgven. Thy faith hath saved thee; g in peace."

The pearl-like soul was Mary Magdlene, who at last was brought forth l Jesus, after having been delivered fm seven devils, to be one of the ief ornaments in the royal diadem. was to Mary that Jesus first realed himself after his resurrection. hat a step between being demonized d then sanctified by holy companionip! It was the Soul Physician that ade it possible.

There was the "myriad-minded" ostle Paul, who was once possessed the demons of persecution, so that was dreaded by the Christians as a ld beast. Was it not the vision of sus in the riven sky, and his voice tender expostulation, that cured the n-sick soul and gave it abounding alth and strength?

It has been said: "The deeper down a well one goes the clearer the stars ppear in the heavens, even in the daytime; so the deeper into trial or suffering the true Christian sinks, the farther up into heaven he sees and the more fervent are his songs of thanksgiving."

It is Jesus' way to perfect our soul's health and strength through effort which he causes us to put forth. The illustration of the moth escaping from the cocoon is familiar, but it must always be helpful. The cocoon of an emperor moth, it is said, was once kept for nearly a year, and then the first efforts of the imprisoned moth to free itself were noticed. Its struggles were watched for a whole forenoon by a person sitting in the room where it was. It did not seem able to get beyond a certain point. The sympathies of the observer became so aroused that she took her scissors and snipped some of the fibres which held it. Immediately the big moth crawled out, but with little, shriveled up wings, that could not possibly lift its body. It crawled painfully about for a short time, and then died. What a mistaken kindness to have deprived the creature of the development which struggle would have brought to it, and made it possible for it to have gone about flying through the air on rainbow wings! Something there is in this that reminds us of our beloved Physician. The Bible says: "If we endure (suffer all things) we shall also reign with him" (II. Tim. 2:12). Who of us, then, would desire to be excused from the ministry of suffering, or have somebody hew an easy path through life for us, and so make of us only earth worms?

THE LATE BISHOP FOSS

—Bishop Cyrus D. Foss, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, long one of the best known clergymen of that denomination in America, died of paralysis at the Hahnemann Hospital, Philadelphia, on January 29. He was born in Kingston, New York, in 1834. He held many offices of distinction in the Methodist Church, and was elected bishop in 1880. During his active career he visited practically all of the foreign mission fields. Bishop Foss was an eloquent speaker, a profound scholar and able writer, and his preaching was marked by lucidity, logical force and convincing argument. He leaves a son and daughter.

THE great, rich continent of South America is, indeed, in too many respects like the land of Samaria under the rule of Assyria. Nominally, "they feared the Lord"; actually, they practised all the horrible superstitions and cruelties of paganism.

Thus, nominally, nearly all of the South American countries are Christian. In point of fact, they have almost none of the characteristics of true Christianity.

Education seems to be the thing most needed there at present. Until men can read the Bible it is of comparatively little use to them. In a country like Brazil, where 84 per cent. of the population are illiterate; or even in Argentina, which leads in education among all its sister nations, and where 45 per cent. of the children go to school, what progress can be expected?

Whittier described early New England well when he said that in her every vale and upon her every hill the church and the school stood side by side. Little national growth can be expected when the church is utterly corrupt, as in South America, and good schools are almost altogether lacking.

Pope Leo, in his encyclical letter of 1897 to the Roman Catholic clergy of Chile, gave them a scathing rebuke: "It is sad to reflect," he said, "that prelates, priests and other clergy are never found doing service among the poor; they are never in the dwellings of the afflicted or distressed, unless paid; but they are always to be found in the houses of the rich, or wherever gluttony may be indulged in, or the choicest wines freely obtained."

This is but a very small part of the Pope's indictment. What can be expected of the ignorant and emotional people before whom such an example is set by the leaders whom they have been taught to imitate?

Bishop Neely attributes much of the shocking immorality of both priests and people to the character of the early settlers, and contrasts them with the early settlers of New England. "The Spanish adventurer brought the visible cross, the formal service, the priest, the inquisition and the decrees of the Pope; the Anglo-Saxon brought the open Bible, and accepted its teachings as his standard. These things account for the difference."

The almost insurmountable difficulties in the way of the evangelization of South America are indicated by this comparison. Given a conceited and self-sufficient people, sure that they have religion enough, fond of pleasure, indolent and easy-going, excitable, emotional, ignorant as children—how are they to be reached?

Only the power of Christ can touch them. But the richness and beauty of this wonderful land, its nearness to us; the many charming and kindly traits of its people, all these appeal to us warmly. We must make a life-and-death struggle to save them. If we are not as deeply interested in their welfare as in that of the more distant Asians and Africans, we should be ashamed. They are far more really our brethren, and we should never for an instant allow ourselves to become listless and indifferent to their pitiable condition.

The famous statue of the "Christ of the Andes" is placed with its face toward the north. "It is," says Bishop Neely, "the symbolized appeal of South America to the peoples of the North."

They must not cry to us in vain.

Christ, Our Guide*

IT is not uncommon to hear a Christian say, "I would follow Christ always, if I only knew how. Often I think I am following him when I find that I was going on the wrong path altogether."

Constant searching of the Scripture and constant prayer are necessary to the one who would follow Christ. It is seldom that the path is lost if the Bible and prayer are faithfully used. It is astonishing to see how completely the dilemmas of life are solved by the directions of Christ and of his apostles, inspired of him.

Are you surrounded with flattery, and in danger of overvaluing yourself? Read the beatitudes of the meek and the poor in spirit.

Are you persecuted, slandered, forsaken? Then are you blessed, for "so persecuted they the prophets that were before you."

Are you tempted to be profane? "Swear not at all, neither by heaven nor by earth. Let your communication be yea, yea, and nay, nay."

Has one injured you, and does your whole being rise in angry resentment against him? Read "Love your enemies, do good to them that hate you."

Are you weary of your life? Are your problems and your trials heavy? Read "Come unto me, and I will give you rest."

Are you tempted to cheat a little, to misrepresent a little, in a way which no one will probably find out, and which will put money in your pocket, or give apparent power to your elbow? Read "What is a man profited if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

One of our beautiful old hymns says:

> Could we lift the fleshly veil,
> Could we for a moment witness
> Those unnumbered hosts that stand
> Calm and bright on either hand?
> Oh, what joyful hope would cheer,
> Oh, what faith serene would guide us!

But we do not see—our minds are dull—faith is hard, and so "we grovel here below," sink into darkness and lose sight of the guide.

Dr. Samuel V. Cole compares the soul to a ship. The first thing for the owner of the ship to consider is what harbor he proposes to reach. "There is only one harbor worth steering for," he says, "and that is the Harbor of Life. You would think it queer if a ship that wanted to reach London should steer for Timbuctoo; and yet there are persons who seem to think they will finally reach the Harbor of Life by steering straight away from it. For some reason or other, there is a great deal of wrong steering on the ocean of life.

"Yet this matter of steering is very simple. The knowledge you must derive from a chart. We call it the Bible. It is the chart of life, because it shows the way to the Harbor of Life.

"Then if you were to send a valuable ship to sea, you would not give the command to the first tramp that came along. You would seek for the best man that could be obtained. You need not seek far. The very Captain you need is waiting to enter your service. Listen, and hear him say, 'Behold, I stand at the door and knock.'"

Another has expressed a similar thought in beautiful verse:

> I would not have the restless will
> That hurries to and fro,
> Seeking for some great thing to do,
> Or secret thing to know;
> I would be treated as a child,
> And guided where I go.
> Wherever he may guide me,
> No want shall turn me back;
> My Shepherd is beside me,
> And nothing can I lack.
> His wisdom ever waketh,
> His sight is never dim;
> He knows the way he taketh,
> And I will walk with him.

A Boy Superintendent

A BOY can hardly begin Christian service too early, and some form of Christianity is open to him even in his childhood. It is not often, however, that one finds a boy of eighteen superintending a Sunday School, and making a real success of it. To Edward C. Smith belongs this distinction. He is superintendent of the M. E. Sunday School at Weston, W. Va. He

Edward C. Smith
An 18-year-old S. S. Superintendent was elected superintendent when he was but seventeen, and we have in his own words this account of the school:

"The Gee Lick M. E. Sunday School was founded in 1854 or 1856, and was held six months of the year, with varying degrees of success, until 1904. The school was reorganized in 1907. In 1909, after a winter in which no school was held—much difficulty being found in securing a superintendent—I was chosen superintendent of the school. Three battered hymn-books were the only supplies I had. But new hymn-books were procured, and a blackboard. Every department of the school is now well organized. The Friendship Bible Class is organized, according to the standard of the International Sunday School Association. It has a membership of seventeen and is steadily growing. A Home Department is to be established next quarter. We have a total of seventy-four members. Our motto is, 'Every one in the community in the Sunday School.'"

One of the religious papers of West Virginia says of young Smith, and another boy Sunday School superintendent, sixteen years old, named George Keith: "Such young people are the hope of our 'Mountain State,' and instead of shaking our heads, let us be like Paul and 'without ceasing have rememberance of them in prayer night and day.'" It is inspiring to see two lads like these so entirely in earnest in Christian service, and who knows but there is in them a Moody or a Chapman in embryo? H. H. H.

SHE QUIT

But It Was a Hard Pull.

It is hard to believe that coffee will put a person in such a condition as it did an Ohio woman. She tells her own story:

"I did not believe coffee caused my trouble, and frequently said I liked it so well I would not, and could not quit drinking it, but I was a miserable sufferer from heart trouble and nervous prostration for four years.

"I was scarcely able to be around, had no energy and did not care for anything. Was emaciated and had a constant pain around my heart until I thought I could not endure it. For months I never went to bed expecting to get up in the morning. I felt as though I was liable to die any time.

"Frequently I had nervous chills and the least excitement would drive sleep away, and any little noise would upset me terribly. I was gradually getting worse until finally one time it came over me and I asked myself what's the use of being sick all the time and buying medicine so that I could indulge myself in coffee?

"So I thought I would see if I could quit drinking coffee and got some Postum to help me quit. I made it strictly according to directions and I want to tell you, that change was the greatest step in my life. It was easy to quit coffee because I had the Postum which I now like better than the old coffee.

"One by one the old troubles left, until now I am in splendid health, nerves steady, heart all right and the pain all gone. Never have any more nervous chills, don't take any medicine, can do all my housework and have done a great deal beside."

Woman's Progress

....ATTORNEY-GENERAL THOMPSON of Nebraska holds that there is nothing in the State Constitution to prevent a woman from holding the office of County Treasurer. Miss Gertrude Gordon, who was elected treasurer of Cherry County at the recent election, will therefore take her office.

....A LARGE NUMBER of Ohio women were elected to Boards of Education at the recent election. There are now women on the Boards in nearly all of the larger cities. Mrs. Sarah E. Hyre was re-elected in Cleveland, leading the ticket both at the primary and on election day. Mrs. Dora Sandoe Bachman, a young lawyer, was elected in Columbus, and Mrs. Bella Lehmann at Sandusky, both as Independents. Mrs. Pauline Steinem is on the Board in Toledo. In the smaller towns women are also serving. Mrs. Herriet Taylor Upton and Mrs. Carrie P. Harrington were elected for their fourth consecutive term in Warren; Mrs. Ella O. Shoemaker has been a member in Massillon ever since women were made eligible. In London, O., Mrs. Esta Coover Harvey is president of the Board.

OUR OLDEST WOMAN FARMER

THIS is the day of remarkable old people. Almost every newspaper that one picks up contains items regarding nonagenarians and centenarians, and golden and diamond weddings; but perhaps the most wonderful old person of all is Mrs. Hester Cordrey, of Delmar, Del., who will be 113 years old on the 12th of next February. She is probably the oldest woman farmer in America, or anywhere else.

"Aunt Hester," as she is universally called, is what is known in her neighborhood as a "small truck-farmer"; and, though last summer was a dry one there, she made a good profit by unusual industry. Probably her constant outdoor work has been a large element in promoting her extraordinary longevity. She used to work in the fields plowing and harvesting, and says: "Many days have I plowed all day, and after sundown come home to the barn and milked six or eight cows. Men were scarce and we were poor, and I was proud to do it."

"Aunt" Hester Cordrey

"Aunt Hester" has been twice married, and has two grandchildren and five great-grandchildren. They have tried to induce her to live with them; but though the other members of her family are long since dead, she prefers to live alone in the home which she and her husband built forty-three years ago.

Like most elderly people, "Aunt Hester" considers the former days better than these, and is especially hard upon the prevalent modes of dress for women, which, in agreement with most of us, she considers highly injurious to health.

She has never had any illness worse than toothache, and has never worn spectacles. She confesses, however, that she is not so strong as she once was, and that she has to use a large spoon for the cultivation of her vegetables instead of a heavy hoe.

"Hard, steady work," says this remarkable old lady, "is the secret of health and happiness."

GOD CARES FOR ME

GOD cares for me.
How sweet the thought
That in His boundless love He sought,
And with His precious blood He bought
New life for me.

God cares for me.
Christ lived and died,
That I may in His home abide,
And here and there may trust my Guide
To plan for me.

God cares for me.
Though I be blind,
On every troubled wave I find
Some recompense for all mankind,
And peace for me.

God cares for me.
He'll not forget
That I, His child, am praying yet,
That in my own weak way He'll let Me live for him.

God cares for me,
And with Him near,
The lonely places seem less drear,
Because I know how very dear
I am to him.

Japan's Gratitude

EADERS of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and especially those who have one so much gracious and loving work or the orphans of the Japanese famine in the northeast provinces several ears ago, will be interested in the little article below, which appears in the kayama Orphanage Record:

"All connected with Okayama Orphanage were pleased at the recognition accorded Dr. Louis Klopsch, proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, New York, by authorization of the mperor of Japan in decorating him ecause of his prompt and efficient rvice in securing and forwarding ntributions for the famine relief ork three years ago. The orphange, in its humbler way, has made a milar recognition by naming one of s new houses Klopsch Cottage and nother one Christian Herald House.

"We wish Mr. Klopsch, and all the aders of his paper, could see these ean, neat, new, orderly-kept cottages, ith their faithful house-mothers and teresting families of ten or twelve appy-faced, healthy-looking children each house. They might find it hard believe that these were the scrawny, rty, quarrelsome, wretched famine aifs of three years ago. The transrmation is wonderful, extending om head to heels and from skin to haracter. A large part of the credit due to the American friends who pplied the sympathy and gifts that ade this service possible."

ler Gift to the Bread Line

ROM a poor woman in Delaware, who desires that her name be not ed, we have received a letter enclosg a dollar for the Bread Line. The riter says:

"Do not mention my name, just simy 'cash.' I live among people who ry greatly oppose my giving anying to any one, especially to those or out-of-work men and boys; but y Bible does not teach that way, and prefer to obey the Lord to obeying an.

"I do wish some one would write mething for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD show how very uncharitable the eling is that doubts the worthiness the Bread Line sufferers. So many y they have no patience with those t of work, because they could get ork if they wanted to, and all such lk; and it makes my heart ache to ar such unkind censure of those who e less fortunate than themselves. od has commanded us to give liberly to the poor, and to open the hand ide unto them without grudging. The ord loveth the cheerful givers, and ill richly reward them, and insomuch they do it unto the least they do it nto the Lord. And it is more blessed give than to receive.

"I live where all those who cannot ork, as strong, healthy people can, are very much in the way and are continually made to feel it and are told so, and also that they can work if they would try, just as well as any one else, etc. They are made to work all they can be forced into, without strenuous measures. As I am poor myself and have nothing, only as it is given me, and am not able to work much of the time, I cannot say these things to them. At this time I am again without a home, as I was two years ago, when I sent you a fourth of all I had, and you printed the consecrated gift which the Lord used in supplying some of my needs. The enclosed dollar is one of two sent me from your having printed part of my letter. I could not tell you how many letters I have received since that time, neither can I tell how very grateful I am to you and those who have given to me through your kindness, and to the dear Lord for it all. I often wish you all could know how thankful I am for it all, and what a great blessing it has been to me."

Being "Born of God"

WE surely can if we are willing to pay the price, and the price is not unreasonable. It means a surrender of the whole heart. When we are so disposed, our Lord is ever ready to receive us. And when so blessed, our adoption as sons of God is no longer a matter of doubt.

His Word in reference to this sacred truth makes no mention of doubt in the matter. We are told to make our calling and election sure, and it is our happy privilege and duty to make it sure. The following passages of Scripture speak with no uncertain sound: I. Cor. 3:16, "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" I. Cor. 6:19, "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, and ye are not your own?" Eph. 2:22, "In whom ye also are builded together, for an habitation of God through the Spirit." I. John 4:13, "Hereby know we that we dwell in him and he in us." Those words tell us plainly what our Christian experience should be.

The Spirit of God comes to us, to love and be loved, to counsel, cheer and admonish. How, then, can we call ourselves Christians and be unconscious of his presence? It is written, "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the ends thereof are the ways of death." And surely this passage of Scripture is the way of the doubtful.

In this day of isms, schisms, creeds and cranks, it is fortunate for us that we can have the foundation that is sure and steadfast. It is for us the Rock of Ages, from which no adverse winds can move us, and if so, how can we consider it otherwise than spiritual suicide for man to take the word of weak humanity rather than God's word in this matter, that means to him life and immortality?

For man to know that he is born of God is a blessing that will be meted out to every one who earnestly seeks it. In Rev. 22:17 it is written, "Whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely." The price is a surrender of the whole heart, and the blessing is in store for every one who is willing to pay the price.

Every one who is a Christian should be a member of some Christian organization, but men should enter by the door of the sheepfold and not climb up some other way. They will then be a light and not a stumbling-block to the millions of their fellow-men who now sit in darkness, without God or hope in the world. P. E. MEATH.

San Joaquin Valley
California---it's free

It tells you what you want to know about —the fertility of the soil
—the source and cost of water
—the cost of land
—the expense of development
—the crops grown
—the markets
—the schools, churches and social conditions
—the experience of other men who are making fortunes there

The San Joaquin Valley is two hundred and fifty miles long, one hundred miles wide, and contains ten million irrigable acres, of which about twelve per cent. already are developed.

The soil is deep, rich, and easily cultivated. It will produce, abundantly, every crop of the temperate and semi-tropic zone.

Abundant water for the artificial irrigation of every acre comes to the land, from the high Sierras, through rivers, streams, and the great water-sheet that underlies the entire valley.

The climate is unusually healthful and pleasant, and it makes things grow like magic. The crops include everything from wheat and potatoes to oranges and the most delicate table grapes.

A few acres of alfalfa, half a dozen cows, a few hogs and a flock of chickens, will more than pay running expenses while the orchard and vineyard is being developed and brought into bearing.

In all parts of the valley are many farmers, who, starting in this way, have made comfortable homes and a substantial bank account.

C. H. Culver, Merced, bought 21¼ acres in 1908 for $4,500. He now values his place at $6,000. Last year his net returns were $1,500.

Isaac Guy, Modesto, California, bought forty acres in 1905, paying $55 an acre. To-day he values his land at $275 an acre. In 1907 his returns were $1,500; in 1908, $2,000; in 1909, $2,500. In addition to this, he has thirty-three dairy cows that earned for him last year an average of $75 per head.

These are not exceptional cases. What Mr. Culver and Mr. Guy have done you can do. The profits from increased land values depend on quick action. Every year land commands higher prices.

The Santa Fe has no land to sell, but it wants to have the country along its line settled up. The only people we want are those who can make a big success. Every ton of produce grown makes so much more freight for our trains to haul. That's where we come in.

If you enclose a two-cent stamp and make special request, I also will send a copy of our 208-page travel book, "To California Over the Santa Fe Trail."

THE WIDE SWEEP OF TEMPERANCE

By LILLIAN M. N. STEVENS, President W. C. T. U.

EVERY sane and well informed person knows that the temperance movement is important and far reaching; even its enemies will admit this. The term "temperance people," as used in connection with the present-day movement, is understood to mean those who advocate total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the State and nation. The World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, founded by Miss Frances E. Willard, with its banner set up in more than fifty nations of the world—a society which is neither sectarian nor partisan—is composed of this sort of temperance people.

We have great reason to rejoice, inasmuch as there is to-day more total abstinence sentiment and more total abstinence practice than ever before, and there is likewise more prohibition sentiment and more prohibition territory than ever before. No sane total abstainer will say he is sorry he has not been a drinker. No sane, careful, unprejudiced observer of the results of prohibition can say it is a failure as a temperance measure.

My home has always been in the prohibition State of Maine, and I claim that I am qualified to testify regarding the value of prohibition to a State, especially to the homes of the State; that I am competent to make comparisons, because I have visited every State and studied the practical effects of license laws—high license, low license, segregation, and the dispensary, or Gothenburg, system—and I know that, from a temperance standpoint, the prohibitory law is the best law ever enacted to apply to the liquor traffic.

I am well aware of the stories regarding the failure of prohibition in Maine, which have been reported by such men as Mr. Thompson, of New Zealand, employed by the liquor trade of his country; Mr. Snyder, of Ohio, employed by the brewers in this country, and Mayor Rose, of Milwaukee, who honestly represents the brewers of his city.

The majority of the Maine people have for half a hundred years stood firmly for prohibition against the e forts of all liquordom for its ove throw. Prohibition has also had t commendation of outsiders, or of v itors to the State, who are capable judging, and who are not prejudic by connection with the liquor tra or by personal, habitual use of stro drink.

Recently Dr. J. Wilbur Chapma the great evangelist, after having be in Portland about three weeks, bef an audience of four thousand men sembled in the Portland Auditori in vigorous terms defended prohibi as he had seen it. His statement received with loud and long appla by the vast audience on Sun afternoon.

Prohibition does reduce poverty, linquency, dependency and crime; hibition does reduce the amount liquor sold and consumed; prohibi tremendously hurts the liquor tr and this is the reason why prohibi is always opposed by the distiller, brewer, the liquor seller, and t emissaries.

TEMPERANCE NOTES

—WEST VIRGINIA now has thirty-seven out of fifty counties absolutely "dry."

—IN his annual message to the Legislature of South Carolina Governor Ansel reviewed the condition of the liquor traffic in that State. He said: "The business of the dispensaries will soon be wound up, under the supervision of the dispensary auditor. This is in the interest of temperance. I firmly believe that if another election is held in those six counties where liquor is still sold, in the coming year, most of them will vote the sale of liquor out. The fifteen counties refusing to vote in the sale of liquor have disposed, or are disposing of, their stocks, as provided in the act."

—AT a recent meeting of the Society for the Study of Inebriety, in London, Dr. Albert Wilson declared: "No nation shows so much mental deterioration as the English, and there is no nation that is so alcoholized." He went on to state that in the United Kingdom about 1,000,000 persons are arrested every year, of whom 60 to 70 per cent. are charged with offenses associated with indulgence in alcohol.

—MR. W. M. CUMMING, of Wilmington, N. C., writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD: "Virginia is soon to make a fight for State prohibition. We have had State-wide prohibition for a year in North Carolina. Here in Wilm ton there were more than 800 fe arrests in 1909 (the first year u prohibition than in 1908 (the year under saloons)."

—IT IS interesting to note the eff that are being made in certain qua "to elevate the saloon to a hi plane." One man, prominent in liquor interest in Seattle, Wash., been touring that State, urging liquor brethren to help make the loon respectable before the public, to put it on a par with other busi He urges that every saloon-ke should be an American citizen, says: "We believe in the open sa —decent, frank and shameless." two latter adjectives doubtless are appropriate, but we are not so about the first.

—STATISTICS from thirty-three in Massachusetts give a sufficient swer to the argument that no-lic increases taxes. The average ta these thirty-three places, no-lic was $17.40; whereas the tax u license averaged $17.35. Furthe cense cities constantly increase municipal indebtedness, but no-lic cities do not. The no-license spent nearly one-half more for ed tion than those with license, and fourth more for street improvem The license cities spent fifty per more for crime than the no-licens

Chats With the Young Folks

By Kate Upson Clark

A Pocketbook Lesson

PERHAPS some of you girls have a way of carrying your pocketbooks in your hands. Here is a little story which may possibly help to cure you of what is undeniably a bad habit:

A certain Helen May disturbed her good father very much because she persisted in carrying her handsome seal pocketbook most temptingly in her hands.

"Although you are not rich, my dear," he told her warningly, "your aunt has given you so handsome a pocketbook that any one who does not know you might think that it contained a good deal of money. There are unprincipled men lurking around the streets, just watching for a chance to rob. You present a temptation to such men. Have a strong pocket made inside your coat, and keep your pocketbook in it. Or, I will buy a common one for you, small enough to be carried in an ordinary pocket."

Helen was filial enough to make in her coat a pocket, such as her father had described; but she seldom used it. "All the girls" were carrying large pocketbooks, as conspicuously as possible, and none of them had a handsomer one than Helen. Naturally, she liked to "show it off." Whenever she was where she thought her parents would not see her, she was likely to have her beautiful pocketbook out in the plainest of sight, for the admiration of all beholders.

Helen's older brother, Paul, a boy of seventeen, agreed entirely with his father.

"I don't blame a poor man for stealing anything that is put up to him like the girls' pocketbooks nowadays," he said often. "Every one of them is a kind of a dare."

It was five o'clock one cloudy December day, and pretty nearly "pitch dark," when Paul happened to be passing along on a street near his home. Just in front of him he saw a girl, dressed like his sister, and by the flickering light of the street lamp he could see that she was carrying her pocketbook in the fashionable way.

"Aha! I've caught you now, Miss Helen!" he laughed to himself. "I'll give you a lesson!"

A moment more and he had snatched the pocketbook from her hands and was speeding away.

Nobody pursued him, and by a roundabout way he reached his home.

Helen was playing on the piano as he entered.

"She's got over it pretty quick," he mused.

He came up beside her, expecting that she would begin to give him an exciting description of the way in which a bold, bad boy had snatched her purse; but no, she smiled a welcome to him and played placidly on.

He turned away, somewhat bewildered, when his gaze fell upon—Helen's pet pocketbook, lying close beside her on the piano!

Alas, for the over-zealous Paul! He had stolen the property of a strange and evidently a wealthy girl—for a hundred dollars in bills and coin, and two valuable checks, were inside the pocketbook of which he had so rashly possessed himself.

His father managed to find the owner, and matters were made right. But though there was some laughter over it all, a valuable lesson had been learned.

Paul had given an illustration of the ease with which the deed could be done, of which Helen had long been warned, and neither she nor the robbed girl ever carried her pocketbook in her hand again.

Possibly the fact that little fancy wrist-bags began to come in at about that time may have had something also to do with their reform. The wise ones tell us that we generally have mixed motives for all our acts.

"What Became of the Dirl?"

IT was at a church entertainment upon which the young people had spent much time and thought, and everybody had turned out to see it.

There were two or three trained animals in it, hired from a local showman; the high school gymnasium had yielded up its choicest acrobats to swell the attractions; the young people's societies furnished singers and players on instruments; and, altogether, there was, as the posters assured the public, "something to suit every taste."

A little plot ran through the whole performance. A man early appeared with his beautiful daughter, who was anxious to leave home and become an opera singer.

Presently she disappeared, not to be seen again until late in the entertainment, when nearly everybody in the audience had forgotten her existence. At the time of her mysterious flight she was wearing an enormous blue hat, with white plumes, and a bright blue costume. Her father's pretended search for her (only occasionally dimly mentioned) gave an excuse for the introduction of the various "features" upon the long programme.

Nearly everybody forgot the girl; but not a certain little four-year-old, who was evidently witnessing his first "show." When she first vanished, he turned to his mother, and said in distressed tones, "What became of the dirl, mudder?"

"Oh, she hasn't gone very far, I fancy," she answered cheerfully. "Look at those funny little dogs, Harold."

The child looked for a moment. Then his gaze began to wander, and he again propounded the question which seemed to be most heavily on his mind, "What became of the dirl, mudder?"

"Oh, no matter about the girl, Harold. She's all right. Hear that pretty song now."

But Harold refused to be long diverted. Whether the girl's remarkable hat, or her bright dress, or the simulated agony of her parent, had impressed him cannot be told; but for some reason that girl seemed to bar out from his vision every other part of the show.

In the very midst of the tumbling and climbing of the gymnasts the audience was convulsed to hear that little voice pipe up shrilly, from time to time, "What became of the dirl, mudder?"

In the dead silence following the tumultuous recall of a favorite singer, as she paused to open a fresh roll of music, that same childish treble squeaked solemnly, "What became of the dirl, mudder?"

When she really did appear again, Harold was expected to be placated; but, no! She was now robed in shimmering white, with a wreath of roses in her hair. Harold would not believe that it was his long lost idol.

"No, not her!" he insisted. "That dirl—what became of that dirl?"

"The captains and the kings" departed, the music was hushed, and the audience prepared to return to their homes. They were almost exhausted with their long sitting, and all the applause and enthusiasm. But as a familiar little voice chirped out, so loud that above all the bustle and rustle everybody heard it, a wave of laughter and a burst of hand-clapping spread throughout the whole house.

"What became of the dirl, mudder?" Harold was still pleading to know. "What became of the dirl?"

Farm Land the Basis of Value

In making investments the first consideration should always be the character of the security. Every investor to whom income is important should learn the facts about Irrigation bonds. They form, in our estimation, the safest way to earn 6 per cent.

Secured by a Thousand Farms

Irrigation bonds are secured by first liens on good farm land—sometimes a thousand farms. The farms are worth usually at least four times the loan.

The farms are exceedingly fertile, and are not subject to crop failures. Any one season's earnings are generally sufficient to repay the whole loan.

The bonds are additionally secured by a first mortgage on an irrigation system, in which the investment is often twice the bond issue.

Some Irrigation bonds are municipal securities, which form—as do School bonds—a tax lien on the district. Some are issued under the "Carey Act," where the State supervises the project.

They are issued in denominations of $100, $500 and $1,000, so one may invest either little or much. All are serial bonds, part of which are paid annually, so one may make long-time or short-time investments.

78 Issues Sold

In the past 16 years we have sold 78 separate issues of Reclamation bonds, all based on farm liens. Not a dollar of loss has resulted to any investor.

Our dominant place now gives us the pick of these projects. They are passed on by our own engineers and attorneys. And an officer of our Company constantly resides in the irrigated sections, watching the projects we finance.

We have issued a book based on all this experience—a book which every investor should read. Please cut out this coupon as a reminder to send for it. (16)

THE WHISPER

By GEORGE WHITEFIELD D'VYS, Cambridge, Mass.

THERE were many pangs of conscience
For the heart so black with sin;
There was much of sad repining
For the bitterness within;
Till the night was spent in moaning,
And in sorrow passed the day,
But I hearkened to a whisper,
And it all was borne away!

Sick at heart was I with worry,
As life's trials pressed me sore;
While the burdens that I carried
Bowed me daily more and more;
Till I knew not peace nor comfort,
Nor would tears my grief allay;
But I hearkened to a whisper,
And it all was borne away!

Of submission I knew nothing,
As I wandered to and fro
'Neath the clouds and darkest shadows
Of my suffering and woe;
And for all the heavy crosses
Only ill had I to say;
But I hearkened to a whisper,
And it all was borne away!

"Whosoever," came that whisper,
And I heard, "Behold the Lamb!"
Then on bended knee I pleaded,
Pleaded, "Lord, just as I am!"
And a peace stole sweetly o'er me,
That is with me yet this day;
I had hearkened unto Jesus,
Who had borne my sins away!

ASTRONOMICAL QUERIES

By Prof. S. P. Leland, Seabreeze, Fla.

E. L. G., Beaver Creek, Minn. What are the names of the two planets, one seen in the southeast, the other in the southwest, on November 17?

At the date of your inquiry, November 17, the planet in the southeast was Mars and the one in the southwest was Venus. Mars is very near the earth, and Venus is exceptionally bright.

Ida Shulter and S. R. J., Portsmouth, O. Will you give a true history of Halley's comet since its discovery?

What is now know as Halley's comet first attracted the attention of Sir Isaac Newton and his friend and co-worker, Edmund Halley, in 1680. In making calculations regarding the return of the comet that bears his name, Halley identified this with the comets of 1531 and 1607, and determined that it would reappear in 1682. This conclusion was interesting from the fact that it proved that the comet followed, substantially, a regular orbit. Halley calculated with great care its next return for late in 1758 or early in January, 1759. He submitted his algebraical formulæ to the astronomer Lalande and to Madame Hortense Lepaute. The result was that they calculated the comet would be delayed by Saturn 100 days and by Jupiter 518 days, and hence would not appear until the middle of April, 1759. The comet reappeared within a few days of the time fixed, and followed the path through the constellations marked out by the mathematicians. Its orbit is now known. The comet passed its last perihelion on Novemher 15, 1835, which gave it 28,006 days as against 27,937 days on its preceding revolution. Ponticoulant has fixed its next return in 27,217 days. It, therefore, should reach its perihelion on May 24, 1910. Its earlier return is caused by the influence of Jupiter, Saturn and Neptune (and probably an unknown planet beyond).

Harry S. Pease, Washington, Pa. What is the white streak across the sky, commonly known as the "Milky Way"?

The Milky Way is a field of space in which are many million stars, of which our sun is one. Each of these stars is a sun somewhat like our own, doubtless leading a retinue of worlds and satellites in blazing splendor. To our view the Milky Way seems a circular cloud of light, but in fact it is a great plane of the sky, in which the stars are accumulated, stretching out one beyond another. They seem near each other, but in fact they are far separated. For instance, the nearest star to our sun is Alpha Centauri, twenty-five billions of miles away. A ray of light moving 186,400 miles in a second of time would require four years and 128 days of uninterrupted flight to pass over the awful space. And our next nearest star, 61 Cygni, is more than seven light years away, while our Pole Star is more than thirty-six light years from us, being over 215 billions of miles. And thus countless millions of suns are stretching away. They lie substantially on the same plane, but to our vision they seem massed in an irregular ring, or rings, of vast dimensions. When seen through a large telescope the stars seem to be points of light along the field of the sky. Among these are vast nebulæ, scattered irregularly. But the constitution of the Milky Way is stellar, and not nebulous, and when studied carefully is the grandest vision in the sky.

E. C. T., Tangier, Ind. 1. In what constellation is the Halley comet now found, and in what part of the heavens? 2. In what direction is it traveling? 3. Where can I find a good pronouncing dictionary for terms in astronomy? 4. What work, or book, would be good for the study of astronomy?

1. It is now in the northeastern sky, and is traveling toward our sun at an inconceivable speed. 2. It will be visible to unaided eyes on our planet for a period of several weeks before it reaches its perihelion, and for several weeks after it has doubled the cape of the sun. 3. Any pronouncing dictionary will give what you want. 4. Flammarion's Astronomy or Young's, or in fact any astronomy will be helpful to you. Write some publisher in New York or Chicago for a catalogue.

General Notes

—ONE HUNDRED free labor exchanges are being opened in England this month by the government, and 150 more will be opened in the near future. Their object is to bring unemployed men into contact with employers wanting labor.

—M. FLAMMARION, the distinguished astronomer, says that the Halley comet will be in close proximity to our planet on May 19, and that the earth will be enveloped by its vaporous tail for several hours. He assures us, however, that, except for the calculations of the scientists, nobody would be aware of the contact, the vapor being so rarified that we will not even perceive it.

—AT A BALL in St. Petersburg, given by a countess to young members of the nobility, while the orchestra was playing, the youthful Baron Barfatirsky, aged fifteen, shot himself through the heart. A moment later, Baroness Pohlen, aged fourteen, dropped dead in the same hall of poison. The police have tried to cover up the tragedy, which has shocked the Russian metropolis.

—PROFESSOR RICHARD S. LULL, of Yale, an eminent paleontologist, tells in an article just published of a successful attempt to restore, from fossils excavated at Spy, in Belgium, the oldest known human type—the man of the paleolithic age, many thousands of years ago. In all essentials he resembles the human of to-day, being strong and muscular, like the North American Indian. There is not the slightest hint of ape ancestry about him.

Finder of Men

An average American knows many people. But he does not always know where they are.

He has a thousand friends and acquaintances. Where are they at the particular moment? He can be sure of some of them—perhaps a dozen. But he wants to locate one or more of the others.

The Bell system enables him to reach them.

If he finds his friend at home, or in his place of business, he talks with him at once. If he learns that his friend is in some other town the Bell System will furnish the connection.

Cities are larger than they used to be. Men know and need to know more people. Yet the need of keeping in touch is as great as ever. Without Bell service there would be hopeless confusion.

The range of the telephone is not confined to one town or one community. It is not satisfying simply to learn that a man is out of town; through the Long Distance Service of the Bell System he may be reached wherever he is.

The Bell Service extends to all communities. It reaches the millions of American people. One in twenty is a Bell subscriber. The other nineteen can be found, because Bell service is universal service.

The telephone does more work for less money than any other servant of mankind. There is economy as well as efficiency in one system, one policy, universal service. Every Bell Telephone is the Center of the System.

Congressman Sulzer

AT THE BOWERY MISSION

ON a recent evening Congressman William Sulzer visited the Bowery Mission, and delivered a most entertaining and instructive lecture on "Alaska, the Wonderland." Representing an East Side constituency, Mr. Sulzer understands as few men do the hard conditions under which the Bowery men live. He prefaced his lecture with a few words of hearty sympathy, and delivered a message of cheer and good-will, with which President Taft had entrusted him.

The lecture itself was interesting from start to finish. It was illustrated with about one hundred and fifty splendid stereopticon views, and was delivered in the fluent, forcible and eloquent fashion which characterizes all the representative's utterances. Mr. Sulzer was accompanied by his wife and several friends, and after the lecture visited every part of the new Mission. When he came to the library, and was informed of the effort being made to cultivate the social life of Bowery men by the circulation of good literature, he at once became deeply interested and, since returning to Washington, has sent several valuable books, together with maps and other things, for the use of the institution.

Mr. Sulzer has promised to visit the Mission at regular intervals in the future, and, judging by the delight with which the men received him the other night, it would seem as though he would be a very powerful instrument in the upbuilding of the educational and social work of the institution. A Journal of Inspiration

Dear Dr. Klopsch: With great pleasure I add my testimony to that of the multitude of witnesses who read and recognize the excellence of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. No scholar can read its pages from week to week without being impressed with the purity of its style and the excellence and perspicuity of its composition. No philanthropist will read a single number and not be stimulated to rise to a plane of more active service in the work of uplifting and purifying society. No Christian can carefully peruse its successive numbers and be content and satisfied to live for this world, and "bearing nothing but leaves." May God bless you, and encourage you in your noble work. H. D. WALKER.

We cannot believe that there is a sensible man living who would purchase any other than a DE LAVAL Cream Separator for his own use if he would but see and try an improved DE LAVAL machine before buying.

It is a fact that 99% of all separator buyers who do see and try a DE LAVAL machine before buying purchase the DE LAVAL and will have no other. The 1% who do not buy the DE LAVAL are those who allow themselves to be influenced by something other than real genuine separator merit.

CAMPAIGNING IN NICARAGUA

ABOUT six or seven weeks ago it seemed as if nothing would stay the march of the insurgent forces in blood-stained Nicaragua, under eneral Estrada, who was pushing forward, across vers and through passes, toward the capital city of anagua, in which Dr. Madriz had just been inalled as President in place of the dictator Zelaya. hen came a period when the fortunes of war emed about to turn. Dr. Madriz was able to keep larger force in the field than had been expected, ough it had lost much of the spick and spanness hich impressed the visitor to the capitol and to e military school, and they repulsed several moves f the insurgents to approach the capital. There e two or three separate surgent armies in the eld, but they have not t made the progress oped for and expected their sympathizers in e Nicaraguan capital, ho have been waiting to ceive them with open ms and to place Esada in the Presidenal chair until some one ith a stronger army ins for the Presidency, ith bullets as ballots.

The insurgents, though viously disappointed, ve kept on fighting th unabated vigor, and e issue is still in doubt, ough Dr. Madriz talks nfidently and as if the surgent leaders were ed of the conflict and out ready to lay down eir arms. Reports are ry conflicting, and the ader has to consider om which source it comes. Both sides will claim victory, or that the other is in full retreat. The st startling news is that Chamorro, one of Esada's generals, has proclaimed himself President, d, as Estrada calls himself provisional President, ere are, in the words of Shakespeare, several chmonds in the field.

There have been few sustained attacks upon fortied towns, most of the fighting being in the open ld, if a place of conflict can be so called which is ll covered with forest and a dense growth of underbrush. General Lara, however, in command of a government army, recently besieged in regular form the town of Matagalpa, in which one of the insurgent armies had gained a foothold. The insurgent general Chamorro is skilled in the desultory style of warfare which characterizes Central American revolutions, and his courage seems undoubted, but he had all he could do to hold his position in the face of superior numbers, he having but 1,500 while Lara had twice as many. The city is surrounded by hills, and on these General Lara placed field-guns of quite heavy calibre, with which he began to shell the town day and night.

Prisoners Arriving at Rama Under Strong Escort

The hastily constructed fortifications, mostly earthworks, were not strong and offered no protection to the town itself. The shell fire tore great gaps in the roofs of the houses, and reduced the people to a state of abject panic. The shriek of the shells overhead before they burst, and the sounds of the explosions in the streets, were enough to appal all but the stoutest hearts. The people had a feeling of helplessness not shared by the troops, as the latter felt that they had the means of defense and retaliation in their own hands. The inhabitants, however, continually experienced that most trying of ordeals which can fall to the lot of the besieged: to sit still and be fired at as a target until the ammunition gives out or the other army is able to drive the attackers away. Most of the people have felt the heavy pressure of Zelaya's tyrannical hand, and are not enthusiastic over his successor; but probably hundreds here wished that the town was not occupied by the insurgents and thus made a mark for the batteries, whose black muzzles spit fire as viciously as if they had a personal desire to wreak vengeance upon the city. Among the inhabitants were quite a number of Americans and Europeans. Protests were made against the indiscriminate bombardment.

In response to the protests, the government general silenced his cannon so that non-combatants could leave. How many availed themselves of the opportunity to escape is not accurately known. Probably the decisive message from Secretary of State Knox to Dr. Madriz, the import of which was soon noised about the town, may have caused Lara to hoist the white flag above his batteries for the six hours. Mr. Knox informed President Madriz that he would hold him personally responsible for the lives of the Americans in the city. The President said he would regard the international law governing such cases. A large number of Americans live permanently in the vicinity of the city, and, driven to desperation by the exactions to which they have been subjected by the Zelayan and Madriz governments, they have flocked into the city and offered to form a rough rider regiment to aid the revolutionists in driving the army from the vicinity.

It is not known whether their offer was accepted, but it is believed that some Americans who have been residents of the country for some time are serving in the ranks of the insurgent army. The

Joel Chandler Harris

"WHERE is Uncle Remus' house?" From the time Joel Chandler Harris became famous as author of the Uncle Remus tales this question has been put by travelers—particularly child travelers—on reaching Atlanta, Ga., and a favorite carride or drive has been past the Harris residence. This interest in Mr. Harris' home, shown by people from all over the world, in part suggested the idea, after his death in 1908, of preserving the place as a memorial to him and as the sacred possession of the children of America. A plan was formed to buy it, at the $25,000 valuation assessed; and to keep as he left them the two rooms where he did most of his work—living-room and room adjoining—with their furnishings, including his chair and table; the rest of the house to be converted into a library chiefly for children, and the yard and garden into a playground for them—small strangers from afar having equal rights with the city's children, and a special welcome.

As the news crept abroad, expressions of approval reached the Uncle Remus Memorial Association from points as far apart as Massachusetts and California, Canada and Mexico, and even from Europe, where children who cannot read the Uncle Remus tales in English read them in their own tongue. Julia Ward Howe wrote that, but for her great age, she would take an active part in the movement. Andrew Carnegie promised promptly a $5,000 check. It seemed probable that any one of several rich men would give the whole amount if desired, but the plan was that, as many had loved Uncle Remus, many should share in the work, with special opportunity for small aids from children. A payment has just been made on the property, and the association hopes soon to complete the purchase and provide books and other equipment. The officers are: Mrs. A. McD. Wilson, president; Mrs. Woods White and Mrs. Connally, vice-presidents, and Mrs. Stevens, treasurer, all in Atlanta. Among honorary vice-presidents are President Taft, Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Carnegie.

In this connection a few words of reminiscence about Mr. Harris, or "Uncle Remus," and his house may be interesting. The place came by its name thus: A pair of wrens built a nest in the letterbox at the gate. A human protest was raised: "Our box is for letters." "Let the wrens alone," said Uncle Remus, "we can make other arrangements for letters. We must not break up a home and a family." Adjoining the yard is a plot of ground where Mr. Harris grew vegetables in spots, and in spots let wild things grow as they pleased. He called it "Snap-Bean Farm."

My impression of his home on my first visit to it may be given in his words about the White House, in his humorous description of his sojourn there as President Roosevelt's guest: "It's a home; it'll come over you like a sweet dream the minnit you git in the door." The happy wife and children, the venerable mother, and even the household pets, reflected in their air of peace and content the spirit of the master. In the centre of the hall a circular stair ran upward. "Where to?" I asked. "Mr. Harris' study, among the treetops," said his wife; "at least, he built it for that." "But he doesn't do much writing up there," volunteered his eldest son, Julian, then a lad, with twinkling eyes; "he can't stay away from us." "But doesn't your laughing and talking disturb him?" "He likes it. He writes most of his stories with us around him. He reads them to us, and we tell him what we think of them." It was said of him that he always wanted to be in sound of his wife's voice.

The engaging manner in which Julian (he's "Mr. Harris" now, and editor of Uncle Remus' Magazine) "gave away" his sire in small bits of information was a delicious exposure of the comradeship existing between Mr. Harris and his children. "Come," he said, with the genuine Harris friendliness, "and I will show you the mockingbird tree." And he pointed out the poplar where warbled the songster that inspired Mr. Harris' prose poem, "The Mockingbird." That yard and garden, and the trees and the vines! One could easily imagine Uncle Remus walking or sitting about, and Br'er Rabbit hopping confidentially from leafy covert to hold confab with him—and hopping back hastily if a stranger hove in sight.

Whimsically wise was Uncle Remus about his wild things. One day, when I was in the Constitution Building, I wanted to peep in on Uncle Remus in his editorial "den." But on what important subject could I claim a peep? I crept in. He was at his desk, papers all around. "Mr. Harris," I said, "I want to ask you something about Br'er Rabbit." I had his ear—and his twinkling eyes. "Mr. Harris, you know rabbits can't climb trees. Now, in your story, you say Br'er Rabbit 'clomb a tree,' How could he?" "He was bleeged to," chuckled Uncle Remus.

"How's ole Sis Cow?" Thus Andrew Carnegie greeted him at his gate. "Po'ly," chuckled Uncle Remus. "Sis Cow" had put them on easy terms at once, and they sat down on a bench under a tree and had a "mighty good time." "Why, Andrew Carnegie is just a plain, ordinary fellow, and mighty good company, too," Uncle Remus reported of his guest. And his guest of him: "He has given a helping hand to all the world. He's won the hearts of all the children, and that is glory enough for any man."

He was as shy as his creatures of the wildwood. It was impossible to lionize him. Once, when he was in New York with Henry Grady, Grady engaged to have him at a dinner slily arranged in his honor. Uncle Remus slipped out of the hotel and fled to Atlanta. In Eatonton, they once thought they had him cornered for a speech. Grady spoke; his turn came, with his old neighbors calling on him. He rose and said: "I have never been able to make a speech without taking a drink of water, so you must excuse me till I get a little water." As he walked out the people laughed and cheered; they knew he had escaped. That sentence was Uncle Remus' only public speech. Urged to read his stories in public for profit, he said he could not for a hundred thousand dollars a night; he was tongue-tied before an audience. But one person of all who ever tried succeeded in bringing him into the limelight. That person was Theodore Roosevelt. In 1905, when coming to Atlanta, the President wrote that he and Mrs. Roosevelt wished to meet Uncle Remus. In our country, respect for the nation in its head invests such an expression from a ruler with almost the force that it has in Europe, where it is a command.

Like Br'er Rabbit, Uncle Remus was "up a tree." The reception committee fetched him by main strength to the station where Mr. Roosevelt was expected. While the Presidential party were being seated in carriages, Mrs. Roosevelt asked that Uncle Remus should ride with her. "Where is he?" was the sudden cry. "There he goes!" shouted this one and that. Chase was given, and he was brought, blushing furiously, and committed to Mrs. Roosevelt, who soon made him feel that things were not nearly so bad as they might be. But Br'er Rabbit himself could not have been more embarrassed at public position than was Uncle Remus as he sat beside the President's wife in the procession to the Governor's Mansion and stood with her on the balcony to review the military parade, while the people cried out: "There's Uncle Remus! Caught at last!" Embarrassed as he was, he felt, as all kin, loyal and knightly appreciation of the honor at was his. At the official dinner, where he sat be le the President, he almost blushed his ears off w n Mr. Roosevelt, after saying, "I am going to ca e acute discomfort to a man of whom I am very fo ," declared that, as many great things as Georgia d done for the Union (Mr. Roosevelt's mother w a Georgian), "she had never done more than when e gave Joel Chandler Harris to American literatu " After Mr. Roosevelt reached Washington, he w e Uncle Remus to come to see him. "I was afrai e would not go, until after Julian got him on e train; he liked the Roosevelts very much, but s nervousness about meeting strangers, who m t take him for a celebrity, was distressing," Ms. Harris has told me. "His shyness was const tional, and amounted to an affliction."

Mr. Harris was born in the quiet little town of Eatonton, Ga. His father, a farmer, died while he was an infant. His mother was very poor. He was probably the least noticed boy in the community. He could not stay in school long, for at twelve he felt that he must be up and doing." He saw in the Countryman that "a boy is wanted at this office"—on Mr. J. A. Turner's big plantation, nine miles from a postoffice. He got the job. In woods and cabins he gathered the material of which his select stories are woven. The first publication of these began about 1880, with Uncle Remus, His Songs and Sayings, and ended in 1907 with Uncle Remus and Br'er Rabbit, with many a volume between. "Uncle Bob" and "Uncle George," two old negroes living respectively near his mother's home and on the Turner place, were the chief originals of the Uncle Remus of his fancy. By Uncle George's kitchen fire, he and the Turner children gathered nightly to listen to tales and eat ginger-cakes.

After the Countryman expired he made his way to larger papers, and by 1863 was an editor of the Savannah News. In Savannah, he married Miss Essie La Rose, of Canadian birth. After 1876 he was on the Atlanta Constitution. Captain Howell, the proprietor, suggested his publishing some dialect "stuff" in the paper. So his fame began in that field in which he now has no peer—negro dialect tales—and in folklore, in which no writer of the world outranks him.

Uncle Remus was industrious and did much valuable work besides, in history, poetry, fiction, and editorials for his own paper and other journals. He made much money, but left little. He lived simply and gave freely. Of nine children, he raised six. He was a devoted Christian.

He said once: "I don't want any monument of stone that will stand out in the rain and get colder dust-covered." He wanted something that would help others. When he first entered his home, he remarked of a sapling beside the door: "This shall be my monument." "Then, this shall be mine," said his wife of a treelet on the other side. "Are you not sorry for the home to pass out of your possession?" Mrs. Harris has been asked. "If I were going to live always, yes," she answered; "but I like to think, and Mr. Harris would love to think, of the place being kept as it is, and of the children of the world playing about it always."

Rev. Dr. Arturo Muston

THE whole nation admires the way in which Ex-President and Mrs. Roosevelt have brought up their mily. As much as was possible, in eir exalted and conspicuous station, ey have tried to keep their children t of the public view and to make em modest, hard-working, represen- tive American citizens.

The eldest son has shown himself to worthy of his excellent parents. He adied hard during his college course, mpressing four years' work into ree and gaining a high stand. He is democratic in his tastes, and came way with a record for popularity.

As soon as he finished his studies, he nt into a large carpet-making estab- hment to learn the business. His ther is not a rich man, and all his lvs must go to work and earn their n livings as soon as they can.

Young Theodore has been in love for ars with one of his childhood play- tes. She lived in New York, and e carpet works were in Thompson- le, Conn., not far from Hartford. erefore, as the young man was thful and did not believe in asking rors just because he was the son of President, he could not often get ay to see this young lady.

But, somehow or other, he has man- ed to make time to ask her to marry n. She has said "Yes"; the news s been cabled to the elder Roosevelts, d everybody seems to be greatly ased.

The distinguished father of the pros- tive groom telegraphed that the dding must not be postponed until return; but the young people, as , seem determined to wait for that ent.

The young lady, whose mother has j t announced the betrothal, is Miss leanor Butler Alexander, of New rk, well and favorably known in its best social circles, for her talents as well as for her beauty.

The good wishes of all their countrymen and countrywomen go forth to this young couple, as they clasp each other's hands for a life journey together. "All the world loves a lover," especially if the lover is brave and honest and manly; and if the beloved is worthy of him.

And in the present instance this seems to be the fortunate case.

"HELP given at the right time is doubly blest. You people of America have been noble in your help to us during the earthquake horrors, and especially was the relief sent by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of most practical value. We are so grateful to Dr. Klopsch, and all the good CHRISTIAN HERALD friends! I cannot express to you the appreciation we feel toward such givers who, by sending direct to us, made sure that we should receive the funds, and receive them at the time of our direst extremity. Our hearts are very warm toward your subscribers," said Signor Muston, a few days after his recent arrival in this country, to a representative of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

The first of a series of parlor lectures, to be given in various cities, was held by invitation of Mrs. William Jay Schieffelin, in her home on East Sixty-sixth Street, New York City, February 10, introducing Dr. Giorgio Bartoli and the Rev. Dr. Arturo Muston, of Italy. Dr. Bartoli has already been introduced to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in our issue of February 9. Dr. Muston, who accompanies this distinguished member of the Waldensian Church, is president of the Board of Evangelization of the Waldensian Church in Italy, and comes as its official representative to this country.

"Italy is in a momentous time—a critical time," continued Signor Muston. "The Italians are disgusted with their old religion; they are becoming a nation of atheists. The Waldensians are preaching the pure Gospel of Jesus Christ, irrespective of denominationalism. We are always an evangelical agency, and we are reaching many of the intellectual men and women who are now carrying on a laymen's movement, forming missionary circles, whose members are working all the time in the smaller towns, distributing tracts and speaking in open squares. When we visit a town, we shall not leave a single man unapproached."

In a recent letter from Rome, Mrs. Gilbert Colgate, of New York, one of the treasurers of the New York Society and the prime mover in Waldensian Aid work, said:

"I have seen Signor Muston many times. He is intensely interesting, a most able man, and has the work well in his grasp. I am delighted that he is going to America, and I am sure you will all be much interested in him. Father Bartoli is a very remarkable man. I do not believe there is a subject about which he does not know something. He speaks English perfectly. He does not speak on the Waldensian work as Signor Muston does, but he is most interesting in what he says about the present conditions in Italy concerning religion, politics, etc. He has many lectures that he gives. I am sure you will all find him delightful. He has been ill, and was obliged to give up his English trip. It is pretty hard for a man who has had everything as a Jesuit, and editor of the Civiltà Cattolica, to live on forty dollars a month, which is his salary as a Waldensian lecturer. He is very anxious to give some lectures in America. He has one lecture on 'Dante,' which I understand is very fine. Of course, the money that will be paid for that lecture will go for the Waldensian Church.

"Signor Muston says they need $10,000 to meet all the expenses this year. He is terribly worried, poor man! He is working himself to death, I fear. To see before you the chance to accomplish great things, and to have your hands absolutely tied because there are no funds, is terribly hard on the worker." M. K. H.

AMERICANS will welcome cordially the most famous living British explorer, Sir Ernest H. Shackleton, who has recently been knighted by King Edward for his intrepid attempt to reach the South Pole. He got one hundred miles farther than any previous explorer, but could not reach the goal. He went far beyond the point reached by Captain Scott, the previous explorer. A full account of the Shackleton expedition and its results was published in this paper. Great Britain is very anxious to secure the honor of finding the South Pole, and an expedition is now being fitted out. It is not known definitely whether Sir Ernest will accompany the expedition, but the party will be guided by the invaluable lessons learned by his men in Antarctic exploration. The problems are quite different from those encountered on the trip north. Numerous organizations are planning receptions and other entertainments in the explorer's honor, for his achievements are as well known here as in his own country.

The explorer was born in 1869, the son of a physician. He was educated at Dulwich College, and is married. Recently he and his wife visited Germany, and were the recipients of much attention.

AN EXPLOSION in the main shaft of the Primero mine of tl California Fuel and Iron Company, on January 31, resulted in he death of a large number of miners. It was believed tl no less than a hundred men had been caught in the shaft a possibly suffocated. Most of the victims are Slavs and H garians. Rescue parties succeeded in taking out a number of odies, torn and burned beyond recognition.

MME. CURIE, already famous as the discoverer of radium, has me another very notable contribution to science. She has pro- d pure polonium, a new chemical element possessing a radio- acrity from 400 to 1,000 times more active than radium itself. It lo its activity very rapidly, however, and its life is much shorter tl that of radium. Scientists both here and abroad are dis- cing the new discovery, for which no practical use can be su ested thus far.

AT THE Manhattan Association of Congregational Ministers, he in Plymouth Church lately, the eightieth birthday of Rev. . Roberts, D.D., was celebrated, and his fiftieth year of min- isial service honored by all his associates, who presented him by he hand of Dr. Albert Lyman of Brooklyn with a purse of gold. Dr. Roberts is in active pastorate at Duntun, L. I., preaching twice each Sabbath.

—CONGRESSMAN LUNDIN of Illinois has introduced in the House of Representatives a resolution directing the Speaker to appoint a committee to investigate the various systems of old-age insurance, old-age pensions and annuities, that are now in operation in the different countries of the world and the practicability of establishing such systems in the United States.

—CAMILLE FLAMMARION, the distinguished astronomer, writes: "January 1 has been adopted [as the opening of the New Year] since the year 1563, in consequence of an edict of the kinglet, Charles IX., and the French custom determined that of the rest of the world. Up to that time the year had been begun at the Incarnation, otherwise known as the visit of the angel Gabriel; that is to say, nine months before the birth of Jesus, or March 25, and the Christian years had for their formula 'ab Incarnatione Christi' (from the Birth of Christ)."

—HUDSON MAXIM, the well-known inventor, regarded an authority on dynamite and explosives generally, in a letter recently published says that the principal hopes of peace lie in the increasing cost of war. He does not believe that airships will prove formidable as engines of warfare. On the contrary, he holds that an airship could not approach with safety near enough to drop large quantities of dynamite on a warship. Small dynamite bombs would do no harm to such ships. Mr. Maxim suggests that those governments which genuinely favor peace should unite to prevent war loans, as the money brokers are the only people who derive any advantage from war.

—THE MONTH OF February has established the record for cold weather. Alaska sent a chilling blast across the country, and the thermometer in many sections went far below zero, causing intense suffering. Such visitations usually leave in their wake a long line of victims, which includes not only those who perish from the immediate cold, but a still larger number who die of diseases aggravated by such weather. In many cities the condition of the homeless during the cold spell was pitiful. The Bowery Mission Bread Line was greatly augmented while it lasted.

—MR. C. M. NEWMAN, in The World To-Day, gives some interesting facts relative to the tsetse fly which causes the fatal "sleeping sickness" in Africa. Mr. Newman has been traveling in Uganda. He says: "The Roosevelt expedition will be compelled to march through large areas of infected country. The best land is usually near rivers and lakes, and in Uganda such territory is the home of the tsetse fly. Government officials have succeeded in driving most of the natives out of the infected area, and the development of the disease will undoubtedly be checked to some extent by these measures. It is the intention of the English government to clear the natives out of all of the afflicted districts and keep them out for a few years, and it is hoped that in the meantime the tsetse fly will lose its power to spread the disease. Sleeping sickness must be eradicated, and no stone will be left unturned to accomplish its extermination."

THE AMERICAN PULPIT

A Sermon by

Robert Stuart MacArthur*

THE LOVEFUL SACRIFICE

TEXT: Gal. 2:20

"Who loved me, and gave himself for me"

A FEW years ago my esteemed friend, Rev. Charles William Gordon, of Winnipeg, Manitoba—widely known by his pen name of Ralph Connor—wrote a book which stirred America, and, in no small degree, the entire Christian world. It describes a wild life in the mining regions, and, at the same time, a beautiful Christian service in those wild regions. There is a chapter devoted to the death of one of the heroes, named Graham. He was a college man, a man of varied culture, and also of noble Christian character. He had lived for years a true Christian life; but, while on a visit to San Francisco, he was induced to gamble, and, for a time, the old wildness came back with almost resistless force.

Gave His Life for His Friend

He was induced to go into a low gambling den. Nelson was his devoted friend. Nelson's conversion is beautifully described. It was a conversion of the thoroughly heroic and inspiring type. He determined to protect Graham while in the gambling den. For this purpose, he followed him into the very teeth of the lion whose lair the den was. Soon it became evident to Nelson that the gamblers were cheating Graham. By a prearranged sign, Nelson enabled Graham to protect himself, and the men with whom he was gambling became so angry that one of them drew his pistol and was about to shoot Graham. Instantly Nelson sprang between the pistol and his friend. The result was that he received the shot which was intended for Graham. In a few moments, he lay dead, in the presence of the friend for whom he had given his life. Tenderly did Graham and Connor lay him in his grave. Standing beside the grave, Graham said: "Connor, I understand now, as I never understood before, the meaning of those words of Scripture, 'Who loved me, and gave himself up for me.'" Reading this book recently on a railway train, it greatly moved my heart. I determined to preach on the text which Graham recited. I think I understand it now, even as did Graham, better than ever before. Nelson died a vicarious death. In his love for his friend he gave his life. But in his love for those who were his enemies, Jesus Christ gave his life.

The Fickle-hearted Galatians

Permit me to call your attention to "The Loveful Sacrifice." The characteristics of this love we shall find suggested by the words of the text. In this beautiful text the apostle Paul poured out his own soul, in describing the matchless love of his Lord and Master. He is striving to bind the Galatians more tenderly than ever before to Jesus Christ as their Saviour. This epistle is the earliest of the four doctrinal epistles of Paul. Next to the Epistle to the Romans, it is the most important in the exposition of the doctrines of faith, justification, and Christian freedom. Its brevity is not more marked than is its vigor. The Galatians were a warm-hearted, but fickle, people. They received the Gospel with great readiness, and in their love for the apostle they were ready to pluck out their eyes, if thus they could the more fully manifest their devotion. But Judaizing teachers had come among them; they were led away from the simplicity of their earlier faith. All classic writers show that the Gaulish character was marked by instability.

This is a Celtic characteristic even to this day. We do not know who these Judaizing teachers were. There seems to have been one man among them who was their leader. The right of Paul to the claim of apostle was challenged, and he is obliged to defend his apostolic authority. He must destroy the influence of these Judaizing teachers, or the simplicity of the faith as it is in Christ would be destroyed. He therefore exposed and refuted the errors by which the Galatians were deceived; and then he pours out his heart in a fatherly pleading, which touches our hearts even to this day. He shows his conception of Christ's great love for the children of men by the text of this morning. The characteristics of this love we are now to study.

This characteristic is suggested by the word who in the text; this refers to Christ. It is divine love. There are many kinds of love in the world, and some of them are worthy of our appreciation and imitation. Love is the heart of the universe; love is the soul of God. God would cease to live, if he ceased to love. The whole world, did we understand it fully, is an oratorio whose diapason is love. All the movements of Providence, in their vast reaches, are inspired by love. The old Greeks spoke of the music of the spheres, and in so speaking they voiced an eternal truth, a truth which we, in the light of Christian faith, ought to understand as it was impossible for these classic Greeks to appreciate. Hell is hell, because hell is hate; heaven is heaven, because heaven is love. Earth becomes like hell, or heaven, in proportion as hate or love governs our earthly lives. We ought to appreciate what it is to have a consuming love for one's country. Patriotic love is beautiful and holy. The love of Wallace and of Bruce for Scotland has inspired the song of the poet and the lyre of the musician. The love of William Tell for Switzerland, partly mythical as it may be, is nevertheless beautiful and glorious. The love of George Washington and Abraham Lincoln for our America has thrilled our hearts and inspired our lives. We all know something of the love of men for their city. The love of Dante for beautiful Florence was as charming as is the city he so loved. To him, Florence was a maiden who had given him her hand and heart. We appreciate the love of Oliver Wendell Holmes for Boston. Men cannot love New York in the same sense as they love a city like Boston. New York is too extensive in area, too heterogeneous in population, and too multifarious in its activities, to be loved as a smaller city might be. We are all familiar with the love of men for their brother man. The great classic illustration of this truth is the love between Damon and Pythias. These two Pythagoreans of Syracuse will be forever remembered as models of a friendship faithful even unto death. The great Biblical illustration is the love of David and Jonathan. Superb as were the achievements of Jonathan in war, his enduring fame rests upon his romantic friendship with David. In David's immortal elegiac song, he affirms that Jonathan's love to him "was wonderful, passing the love of women." We know the love of men for women and of women for men; the love of husband for wife, and wife for husband; the love of children for their mother, and the love of the mother for her children. Lately, a graceful, cultured and attractive woman said to me: "Next to my Saviour do I love my mother. I am all she has now, and I am giving her all the service of my hand and the love of my heart." May I be permitted at this point a personal allusion? Never shall I forget my last interview with my own mother. I well knew I should never see her again; she knew this equally well. I kissed her good-by and went away, but returned, repeating this manifestation of love for the third time. It was a moment sacredly tender in my life.

The Measureless Love of Christ

But, after all, these are but human loves, beautiful and sublime as they are. I rise now to a vastly loftier height. I speak of the love of God in Christ for the children of men. This love is measureless. It is an ocean that is shoreless and bottomless. It is divine love. If any man might know how to measure the love of God, that man was the apostle John. He pillowed his head on the bosom of Jesus; he felt the throb of Christ's heart against his cheek. The years pass. He is now writing the deepest thoughts of his soul regarding Jesus Christ. All that he can say is: "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us." He does not say: "Behold what measure of love." Even the loving John cannot measure the love of God. We have measured the globe; we have measured great spaces in the heavens, from planet to planet, and from earth to sun, moon, and star; but we have no mathematical formula to give us the unknown quantity in the love of God for men. If any man might have known that love, next to the apostle John, that man was the peerless apostle Paul. He had entered into the profound mysteries of God's love as no other man, with the possible exception of the beloved John, had done. Paul speaks of the breadth and length, and height and depth, of that love; but he nowhere attempts to give its dimensions. He prays that he may know the love of Christ, and then he is obliged immediately to add: "which passeth knowledge." This love is divi It is tenderer than a maiden's and purer than mother's; it is the love of God in Christ for l men and women.

> O love divine, how sweet thou art!
> When shall I find my willing heart
> All taken up by thee?
> I thirst, and faint, and die to prove
> The greatness of redeeming love,
> The love of Christ to me.

I beg you also to notice that it is eternal lo "Who loved me." When did this love begin? I it begin on the cross? Assuredly no; the cross w the flower and the fruit of an antecedent, even eternal, love. The cross was the meridian splen of a love born in the eternity of God. The cross not cause the love of God; it only manifested, vealed, and emphasized that love. Did it begin the Garden of Gethsemane, when Jesus bowed w breaking heart and drank the bitter cup to its v dregs? Assuredly no; Gethsemane, like Calva was the result of love from eternity. The cup w the proof, even as was the cross, of an antecede even an eternal love. Did it begin during Lord's public ministry, when he said of himse "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air h nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay head"? Oh, houseless, homeless, friendless Chri we adore thee! It was eternal love which led this earthly suffering; this earthly life was sim the fruitage of a love whose stem and root found in eternity. Did it begin at the carpente bench, before our Lord entered upon his public m istry? It is a remarkable fact that our gloric and transcendent Lord was actually a carpent He pushed a saw, drew a plane, used a rule, a swung a hammer and an adze, in a carpenter's sh The great sweat-beads of honest toil stood on divine-human brow. He who was the maker worlds became the maker of doors and windows a domestic utensils. O wonder of wonders, marvel marvels, mystery of mysteries, that Jesus Chr should become a carpenter!

What Jesus Does for Us

Once I visited a dying man who was a carpent and I talked to him about his future prospects. said: "I am a carpenter, and I have a Carpen for a Saviour. I know what it is to fit up roo and finish houses. My Saviour has gone to prep a mansion for me. I have helped fit up many be tiful rooms in this city, but I did not occupy rooms myself; but Jesus has promised that when prepares my mansion I shall occupy it with hi What a wonderful thing it is for us to have Je Christ as Lord and Master! If he had come i the world as a prince, if he had been attended by the splendors of earthly royalty, we could not co near him as we can now. He came into the wo poor and friendless. He came as a helpless ba He died while a young man. He sits to-day a young man, endowed with eternal youth, on his lo throne. How marvelous and unspeakably gloric is Jesus Christ! Christ's love did not begin at carpenter's bench. Did it begin at the cradle? suredly no; the cradle in Bethlehem, as the cross Calvary, was the proof of a love that is eterr The incarnation was the manifestation in time the love of God in eternity. I am utterly lost in immeasurable elements that enter into this eter love. The love of child for mother, or mother child, is as moonlight unto sunlight when compa to the love of God for sinful men and women. is divine, it is eternal love.

His Love a Personal Love

Notice also that Christ's love is personal: "W loved me, and gave himself up for me." Is it p sible for us adequately to appreciate and express marvelous truth that Christ loved us, even us, that he thought of us and saved us? This thou overcomes us. Can it be possible that Chi thought of me when I was a boy; when I l home, and went to the academy, and to college, to the theological seminary, and then to New Yo The very idea of such personal love melts on heart in gratitude and devotion. I well remem when, as a boy, reading the passage John 3: which has well been called the Bible in miniatu "God so loved the world that he gave his only gotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him sho

I shall never forget that hour en in eternity. It was the first time i my life when, in so abundant a rasure, I realized that God loved me d gave himself for me. That truth s like a revelation from heaven. Do n tell me that conversion is not real? I they think I do not know the mean- g of the deepest experience of my e? You might as well try to con- ce me that I am not alive physically attempt to convince me that I am alive spiritually, and have not been n again from heaven. How un- eakably blessed is the inflow of the ivenly life and heavenly love which f a man's soul, when his soul is open t God! Never can I doubt the re- ty, the personality, the divinity and t eternity of the love of God in Jesus rist.

We ought all to rejoice in the nows" of the Bible. It is blessed to ar the patriarch Job, in that ancient and remote land, say, "I know that Redeemer liveth." It is inspiring t hear the blind man affirm, "One ng I know, that, whereas I was blind, w I see." I rejoice to hear the ostle Paul affirm, without a quaver his voice, "I know him whom I have lieved, and am persuaded that he is le to guard that which I have com- tted unto him against that day." I is peculiarly sweet to hear the ntle, gracious and divine John say, "e know that we have passed out of ath into life, because we love the ethren." You mothers know well t each child has a special kind and gree of love in your heart. You ve not less love for this child because u have an abounding love for all ur other children. You have more r each, because of the love you have r all. In like manner, God has a ecial love for each son and daughter the faith. He had a special love for mbling, blundering and impulsive ter; and another special love for the ntle, loyal and loving John; and still other for the heroic, superb, peerless ul, master of the entire apostolic llege. God also has a special love r you and for me this morning. rist's earthly life is largely filled th illustrations of his personal love r those who most needed the gentle- ss of his heart and the ministry of s hand. Let our souls be open this rning to receive this gracious, vine, eternal and personal love.

Notice, in the last place, that it is anifested love: "Who loved me, and ve himself up for me." It would be very wonderful thing if God had sent angel to earth to die for us; it uld have been still more wonderful if God had sent the highest archangel the cross to save our souls. God ght have made some other great sac- ifice for the sins of men. The cattle a thousand hills are God's. Why d he not offer a great hecatomb, ousands of victims of inferior worth ing to save men of priceless value? hy was there not some other mate- al form of ransom? The gold and ver are God's. Might he not have ared his only begotten and well be- ved Son? Love, eternal, divine and rsonal, said, "No." Jesus loved us, d gave himself for us. THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH

By Rev. J. M. FARRAR, D.D.*

IF you pass a blacksmith shop this week, I want you to "look in at the open door." Why? Because March 7 is the anniversary of the death of Elihu Burritt, the village blacksmith of New Britain, Conn. There are some facts from his life that may help in developing your life. Near the forge he kept an open book, and while blowing the bellows and heating the iron he was reading and studying. By using faithfully his spare moments he became a great scholar. He mastered Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Arabic, and almost all European languages. Then, as "the learned blacksmith," he visited the people in different parts of the world with whom he could talk, preaching "universal brotherhood." In the great Peace Congresses of Brussels, Paris, Frankfort, London and Edinburgh, he stood like a blacksmith at his anvil welding together the nations of the world in universal brotherhood. By hard work and faithfulness in the village blacksmith shop at New Britain, Conn., he climbed to the honor of being United States Consul at Birmingham, England. This was a long, strong chain.

WHILE looking in at the open door of a blacksmith shop you can think of Ex-Governor John A. Johnson of Minnesota, who was the son of a village blacksmith. His father was a drunkard, and, after wasting his time, died in the almshouse. His son determined to do some good in the world, and worked hard while his mother took in washing in order to keep John at school. When he was elected Governor, some one asked him how he had risen from the blacksmith shop to the Governor's palace. He answered, "I just tried to make good." One of the most beautiful paintings at the Columbian Exposition was of a blacksmith shop. In the picture you cannot see the fire on the forge, but you see a boy, his face beautifully and marvelously lighted by the glow of the forge. No difference how humble your work or home may be, there is an unseen light and the glow is on your face. Do something great for God and man! Ezekiel was the preacher blacksmith. The Lord told him to make a chain. He was a great preacher, and therefore I believe that he was a good blacksmith. Will each one of you be a blacksmith, and make a chain? Do each day the best that you can in school, at home, in church work. Do more than your level best every day. Your enthusiasm will be the furnace in which you can heat each link. You can shape them on the anvil of your determination, and your will is the hammer with which you can shape and weld the links into a chain. The finished chain will be your character and strength.

I HEAR your answer: "I can never be like Burritt and Johnson." God says to every boy and girl, "Make a chain." It may not be a chain of iron, it may be a chain of loving deeds. "I just tried to make good." This chain of six-word links would be a good one for you to forge. Try to "make good" while working on your chain. The other day I found this story about a chain which an old blacksmith made: The blacksmith lived in a village, and his shop was near the village church. From early morning till evening each day the people near could hear the clanging of his hammer upon the anvil, and they knew he was forging a chain. Now and then idlers dropped in to watch his work. When they saw how faithful and patient he was, and what pains he took never to leave a link until it was as nearly perfect as he could make it, they laughed at him and told him that he would accomplish much more if he took less care.

HEARING such remarks, the old smith could only shake his head and continue doing his best, making each link as strong as if the whole chain depended upon it. At last he died, and was buried in the village churchyard. The great chain, which was found in a corner of the village blacksmith shop, was put on board a ship. It was coiled up out of the way, and for a long time no one noticed it. But there came a time in the winter when the fierce wind blew a gale. The ship toiled through the waves and strained and groaned as she obeyed her helm. To guide her three men were needed to hold her wheel. Finally, they determined to anchor her. The great chain was thrown over the side into the gloomy waves. The anchor touched bottom, and the chain grew taut and stiff as a bar of iron. Would it hold?

EVERY one on board anxiously repeated the question as the gale raged fiercer. If one link was weak or imperfect the chain would part, and those on board would be lost. But the chain was the work of the faithful village blacksmith, and he had wrought each link the best he could. So this awful night, when the great test came, his workmanship defied the tempest, and when at length the sun rose and the waves were still the vessel, with the precious lives in her, was safe. What had saved her? The chain, you say. True, but what was the quality that had been wrought into the chain? Fidelity. It was fidelity that had saved her. Do you not see that the tale of the fidelity of the old blacksmith applies to our daily character building? Link by link we fashion it, and in the hour of temptation comes the test of our workmanship. One weak link and we shall be wrecked. But if we have been faithful day by day our chain will hold, and the bark of our soul, anchored to the Rock of Ages, will ride the tempest in safety.

*Pastor 1st Ref'd Ch., Brooklyn, N. Y. TEXT: "Make a chain." Ezek. 7:23.

The Loveful Sacrifice

Jesus Christ gave himself, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us unto God. He gave himself—gave himself to the cup in Gethsemane and to the cross on Calvary. Blessed Christ, may we catch thy spirit, and give ourselves in thy service for the salvation of men!

Women and men, what would you think of Graham, if, after they had buried Nelson, he had turned away from that grave to malign, or even to forget, his friend, by ceasing to love his memory? You would proclaim Graham to be a contemptible and abominable ingrate. You would say: "Graham, Graham, you have a stone, and not a heart, in your bosom." Every sense of manliness, every instinct of chivalry, every prompting of love would make Graham ready to die, if need be, in honor of Nelson's memory. What do angels and God think of you, who have despised and rejected Jesus Christ, who have trampled upon his blood as an unholy thing, who have sneered at his cup and scoffed at his cross? I think the angels must cherish feelings of mingled pity and contempt for the ingrates who despise the love of God in Jesus Christ. What will you do with Jesus Christ? Will you love him? Will you give him your hearts and your lives? Will you publicly confess his name, according to his divine command? Will you be a man and not a coward, a woman and a queen among women, by acknowledging Christ as Saviour and Lord? O Graham, what will you do with Nelson's memory? But who is Nelson, or a thousand Nelsons, compared with Jesus Christ? What, I again ask, will you do with Jesus, who is called the Christ?

DR. GRENFELL'S REINDEER HERD

Orphanage of the Labrador Mission

Dr. Wilfred Grenfell

The New Wing of the Hospital

By DOUGLASS PALMER

ST. ANTHONY, in northern Newfoundland, is Dr. Grenfell's home, and the headquarters of the mission, and this summer it has been a truly lively settlement. With the especial aim that her brother, who is the mission surgeon, should have a better equipment to work with, a Boston lady raised $10,000 to enlarge the hospital. A college student, who came up last summer, offered one-half the money necessary to double the size of the orphanage and Dr. Grenfell promptly raised the other half, and the mission is erecting a modern schoolhouse. Dr. Grenfell is erecting a house for his own use. A well-equipped machinery building is also under construction. Besides these, several small structures have gone up, so that the little settlement has been materially enlarged.

Our patients come usually by the mail steamer every two weeks during her season, but, in addition, we get many from the fishing fleet as it passes "down" to the Labrador or returns home in the fall. While we were at dinner, a short time ago, thirty-five schooners came scudding along, driven into the harbor by a gale on the outside. It was a beautiful sight, schooner after schooner racing in before the wind, with reefed or double-reefed sails, and then dropping anchor in our harbor.

Three little orphans have to sleep in the superintendent's dining-room, and one has to be boosted through a hole in the ceiling into a loft. That shows the popularity of the orphanage. Soon 35 to 40 children can have the advantage of some work, of good, plain food, and of sleeping with windows open in midwinter, and up here where it is really cold, too. That sounds radical, but you ought to see the orphans who have lived that way. Then you, too, would believe in more fresh air.

In Newfoundland the system still prevails of having each religious denomination run its own schools, on separate grants from the government. Dr. Grenfell, by building a good schoolhouse, has persuaded the two denominations here to join forces with the mission for a period of seven years, so we look for peace and progress in school matters.

Where good markets are many hundreds of miles away, and where communication ceases for five months of the year, it is necessary to lay in large supplies of all kinds, and, furthermore, you have, under such circumstances, to repair your own electric light plant and do your own plumbing when the pipes burst. You cannot call up an electrician or a plumber on the telephone. These conditions account for the great number of stores and for the large machinery building soon to be completed; though in the latter we expect to manufacture doors, window sashes, etc., for the local mar[k]et. Within a week or ten days half a mile of t[rack] will be laid to the peat bog, where a very g[ood] quality of peat is in abundance. We have burn[ed] little of this, and there seems to be no doubt but [that] it will make a partial substitute for the firew[ood], which is already scarce.

About four miles south of St. Anthony is the r[ein]deer camp. Two years ago this coming Janu[ary] Dr. Grenfell imported 300 reindeer from Norw[ay], with Lapp families for herders; 250 deer were [for] the mission and 50 for a corporation in the south[ern] part of the island. The c[om]pany has not been succes[sful] with the deer, and part of t[heir] herd has been returned to [Norway]. To-day there are 565 deer, [and], if the word of the Lapp[s] is worth anything, the young [deer] in Newfoundland are finer [and] larger than they would [have] been at home in Norway.

The ox deer last win[ter] hauled firewood at times w[hen] the dog teams were useless, [and] more, the deer worked six [days] a week, and always made t[heir] own paths through the snow. I believe the reindeer is an [as]sured success for Newfou[nd]land and Labrador.

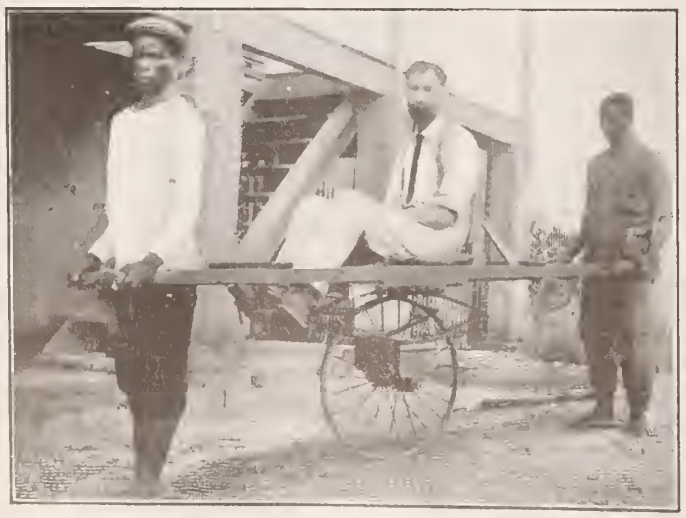
I have written so far of [the] and cattle, of stores and [ma]chinery, of material buildi[ng]; and still this is a mission a[nd] a mission that is wholly the re[sult] of Dr. Grenfell's persevera[nce], energy and faith. And [as] Grenfell lives from day to [day] very near the life that we [be]lieve a Christian ought to [live]. He believes in restoring the sight of the blind [and] making the lame walk, if hard work and any [skill] or self-denial on his part will accomplish that [end]. And he preaches to them besides. All these m[ate]rial advantages are merely to commend his Go[spel] to the people of this cold coast. Dr. Grenfell mo[ves] his mission as he believes the Christ would m[ove] it were he here to-day.

A Herd of Dr. Grenfell's Arctic Deer, Which Were Imported From Norway

AN AFRICAN MISSIONARY "BUSH CARRIAGE"

AN American missionary in Liberia, Africa, the Rev. Howard C. Smith, has introduced an ingeniously constructed, yet simple, vehicle which promises to be of the greatest service to missionaries in heathen lands.

While traveling from place to place, under the broiling heat of the equatorial sun and over paths that are always more or less rugged and frequently dangerous, the missionaries have been compelled to utilize the rude native hammock, or chair, which is slung on poles and borne on the shoulders of two stout carriers. Mr. Smith conceived the idea of constructing a serviceable vehicle by using a central wheel to relieve the weight on the carriers. He built a model on the plan shown in the photograph, and was delighted to find that it worked well. He had really intended it for load carrying, but it proved so much easier than the hammocks carried by the natives that he adopted it for riding also.



The Missionary "Bush Carriage"

The natives did not take kindly to it[s] first. Some superstitiously called it a "[dev]il's device." On one occasion, after tryin[g] for several hours, the carriers deliberat[ely] let it fall into a stream, together with [the] loads. Mr. Smith insisted on their going [in] after it and the loads. A palaver follow[ed], and they finally offered to carry the load[s] on their heads. This he would not allow. Th[eir] curiosity was aroused, however, and th[ey] consented to another trial of the new [con]trivance. By the time the next station [was] reached they had reversed their opinion [of] the "devil wagon" and were so delighted w[ith] it that they allowed the missionary to [ride] on top of the load. The stretcher (or "bu[sh] carriage") is now in great demand in t[hat] part of Africa, and even the native ch[iefs] are asking for them. Mr. Smith has m[ade] another style, which is pushed by one m[an]. This he uses in his missionary journeys [to] the far interior, its lightness making it se[r]viceable for such work.

ROOSEVELT ON HIS WAY HOME

Apollo Kagwa, the Prime Minister and Chief Regent of Uganda, and His Oldest Son, Balsis, who Met Roosevelt on Dec. 21, 1909

WHEN Ex-President Roosevelt, who is now on his way home from his long tour of hunting and exploration in Africa, once more lands on American soil he will find awaiting him a most enthusiastic welcome. The municipal authorities of New York have planned to give him a rousing public reception. He is expected home about the middle of June. At the request of President Taft, Collector Loeb of the Port of New York is now engaged in making all the necessary arrangements. In the Board of Aldermen a resolution has been introduced looking to making the day of Roosevelt's return a public holiday, and requesting the Governor to issue an appropriate proclamation. This resolution also proposes that a committee of the City Fathers should meet the returning sojourner down the bay and escort him back to the city. Mrs. Roosevelt and her daughter Ethel are now on their way to Egypt, to join the Ex-President and Kermit, after which the party will proceed homeward via Mediterranean ports.

On February 16, according to cable advices, the Roosevelt party was at Gondokoro, in the Sudan. The Ex-President and his son had great hunting in the African "big game" grounds. They left the main party before reaching Gondokoro, for a short hunt among the elephants and giant elands, at a place called Rejaf, some little distance from the Congo River. They went there on the special invitation of the Belgian authorities. In the hunting party, besides Mr. Roosevelt and Kermit, were the British District Commissioner, E. B. Haddon, and several others. They made their camp in a substantial brick house at a place known as Kiriba, sixteen miles south of Gondokoro. On leaving Gondokoro the party's route will lie down Bar-el-Jebel and the White Nile, in the launch of General Sir Reginald Wingate, Sirdar of the Egyptian army. A short stop will be made at Khartoum, after which they will make a leisurely trip down the Nile to Cairo.

Mr. Roosevelt has had the "time of his life" in Africa. He has tracked and shot the biggest of living game, climbed mountains, crossed swamps and rivers, threaded forests, and traveled in all sorts of conveyances. One of the most interesting experiences was during his trip to Uganda. This little African principality, or kingdom, which is now a British protectorate, was at one time one of the most savage and uncivilized sections of the Dark Continent. It lies immediately north of German East Africa, its western boundary being the Congo Free State and its northern the Soudan. It has a population of four millions, and there are about three hundred Europeans in the protectorate. The present Kabaka, who is addressed as "Highness," is King Daudi Chua, a grandson of the great King Mtesa, who first opened the country to the missionaries in Stanley's time, about 1875. King Daudi is still a minor and a weakling, and the land is ruled by a regent. Mr. Roosevelt and his party, on invitation of King Daudi, conveyed through Sir Apollo Kagwa, the Prime Minister and Regent, visited Mengo, the capital, where it was arranged that he should meet the King. The bearer of this invitation was Balsis, the regent's son, who handed it to Mr. Roosevelt on December 21. The party was then escorted to Mengo with great ceremony, and were royally entertained, according to imperial African standards of hospitality.
